Following that statement, we are establishing a United Kingdom sports commission capable of addressing strategically United Kingdom-wide issues. These will include promoting performance and excellence, fostering the rationalisation of sports governing bodies, and representing the United Kingdom internationally. A sports council for England is also to be created. For the first time, we shall have a body with express responsibility for English sporting matters.

Within this new structure, the regional councils for sport and recreation will continue to play an important role. The regional chairman will sit ex officio on the sports council for England together with a representative from the Central Council for Physical Recreation and a number of independent members. This involvement of the RCSRs on the new council should greatly improve co-ordination of regional efforts. These councils bring together such local interests as local authorities, voluntary organisations and regional branches of governing bodies. Their membership includes ministerial nominees, and I am delighted at the constructive and independent contribution that they have made to the work of these councils.

We had our first conference of ministerial nominees only last month. They really are independent—there is no party politics in their appointment. Their names are suggested as those of people who will be of independent mind and expertise in their regions and sports. The ministerial element lies in the fact that they have a hot line to me from all the regions of the country. That is to be welcomed.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): One of the bodies that the Minister failed to mention is the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation, known as CISWO. When I played football and cricket and took part in various sports as a miner, we were able to play on the colliery grounds. Now another 31 pits are to be shut. We have had one hell of a job trying to look after these grounds when mines have been closed in the past. Local authorities have been given the opportunity to purchase those areas, but now they are prevented from doing so because they are strapped for cash.

I want the sports Minister to tell the President of the Board of Trade and other Ministers that they should not go along with shutting 31 pits, because if they do so they will help to close 31 sporting organisations in pit villages. The Minister can do a better job today; he can save a lot of sporting facilities by having a word with the people who are threatening to close these pits.

Mr. Key: The hon. Gentleman is right to raise this important issue. He and I have had discussions across the Floor of the House on a number of occasions, and knowing me as he does, he will appreciate that I have already thought of the very point that he has raised.

The Government do recognise the importance of social welfare arrangements, including sports facilities for the people who live and work in the coalfield communities. I recognise their important contribution ever since the Mining Industry Act 1920, followed by the Miners' Welfare Act 1952, which made the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation responsible for the provision of social welfare, including sports facilities. under the Act the National Coal Board, now British Coal, was required to fund the CISWO, and it does so by means of a levy on coal production.

In view of what has happened, I undertake to give consideration to the future arrangements for coal industry social welfare, including its funding. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for raising the issue——

Mr. Skinner: What are you doing about it?

Mr. Key: If the hon. Gentleman had listened to me instead of talking to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell)—[Interruption.]

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): Order. Seated interventions are to be deplored, particularly when the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) has already made a lengthy intervention on his feet.

Mr. Skinner: He has not answered my question.

Mr. Key: The hon. Gentleman is determined not to listen to me, which is a pity, because his constituents might gain from it.

Mr. Nick Hawkins (Blackpool): While my hon. Friend is dealing with regional assistance, will he accept that those in my constituency and throughout the north-west greatly appreciate the strong support that the Government are giving to the Manchester Olympic bid? When the bid succeeds, a great many visitors will stay in hotels in my constituency. This will strengthen sport in the north-west and help Blackpool's historic reputation as a sporting town.

Mr. Key: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. The Manchester—the British—Olympic bid for the games in the year 2000 will have an enormously significant effect on the whole north-west, including Blackpool. My hon. Friend is right to point out the importance of Blackpool as an accommodation centre for the Olympic games, when, not if, they take place in 2000 in the north-west.

The Manchester Olympic bid committee has been consulting accommodation interests throughout the north-west. I shall draw to the attention of Bob Scott, the chairman of the bid, the points that my hon. Friend has made, for which I am grateful.

The Government have also welcomed the formation of the British Sports Forum by the voluntary sports associations in all four home countries, together with the British Olympic Association. I am aware of the reservations which the CCPR has expressed about the new body. However, it is clearly in the interests of sport as a whole that there is a united voice of the voluntary sector both domestically and internationally to complement the work of the United Kingdom Sports Commission.

However sound the new structure, it can only be as effective as the individuals in it. I am concerned that there are so few young faces among the ranks of our senior sports administrators. This wealth of experience needs to be complemented by the dynamism of youth to provide the leadership which sport deserves in both the public and voluntary sectors. I intend to explore with the Great Britain Sports Council and others ways of encouraging more of our sporting stars to become involved in sports administration. We need to develop a systematic career path in sports administration.

Quality of management and leadership is vital. That is not an ageist remark. I often hear people who have been leading British sport at all levels say that they think that they have done the job long enough and asking who will take over from them if they give up—a question that we will seek to answer.

Mr. Menzies Campbell (Fife, North-East): Does the Minister recognise that ethnic minorities are poorly represented among the administrators of sport, the more so given the extent to which they contribute to our sporting teams, particularly the Olympic team? Is it not high time people of an ethnic background were represented at the highest level in the administration of sport?

Mr. Key: I warmly welcome that intervention. I could not agree with the hon. and learned Gentleman more, particularly in respect of his point about our Olympic excellence. It is not true to say that those from the ethnic minorities who excel at sport are not taking part in the administration and future policy-making in sport. They are taking part in a most energetic way in several areas. However, I take the hon. and learned Gentleman's point, and we will seek to address it in a sensible and appropriate manner.

When I was a schoolboy, I took it for granted that I could participate in cricket, rugger, hockey, swimming and sailing, all of which I did at school, as did my fellow pupils, as a matter of course. When I was a teacher for 16 happy years, I took it for granted that I would be expected to umpire and referee, judge athletics, organise sports and visiting teams and take pupils away to other schools.

Sadly, those days have gone, and I regret that very much. That means that we must try harder to ensure the highest standards of sport in schools and the availability of sport inside and outside schools. I will be discussing issues with my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Schools about the interface between his responsibilities and mine in respect of sport in schools.

Having put in place the right structure, we also need to lay the foundations of participation in sport and future success. That is why the Government believe so strongly that all young children should have the opportunity to learn basic sports skills.

In England and Wales, we have made physical education a compulsory part of the school curriculum for pupils aged five to 16. Similarly, we believe in the importance of pupils being taught to swim by the age of 11, because that is a vital life-saving skill. That is to be made a requirement in England and Wales from autumn 1994.

Mr. John Carlisle (Luton, North): While my hon. Friend is referring to school sports, will he comment on the new Education Bill which will come before this House on Monday week, and the apparent new initiative that grant-maintained schools will possibly put aside 10 per cent. of their places for pupils who show excellence in the arts and sport? Many of us interested in sport would welcome that. Youngsters with sporting ability, but perhaps without academic ability, will be able to obtain an excellent education and perhaps have some advantage that they would not have enjoyed under the old system.

Mr. Key: I recognise that my hon. Friend has a long record of interest in sporting matters. I cannot comment on a Bill that is to come before the House, but I welcome the thrust of his comments. All our schools, including grant-maintained schools, will make it a priority that sport is a chief aim in the rounded education of our young people.

I am sure that all hon. Members will agree that the role of PE teachers cannot be overestimated in developing the sporting skills of their pupils within the curriculum and in after-school sporting opportunities. Without their commitment and enthusiasm, we can achieve very little. In addition to the professionals, we must bear in mind the vast army of teachers, parents and volunteers who assist with sports for young people in schools and beyond every afternoon and at the weekends. Without them, Britain would not have its worldwide reputation for excellence in sport and access to sport that is so admired around the world.

We are keen to encourage more after-school sporting opportunities. The champion coaching scheme has been a great success in improving the sporting skills of the youngsters who participated, in encouraging new local partnerships and in providing models of good practice for other organisations to emulate. Preparations for phase 2 are now well under way. Partly arising from that experience, we will be publishing a booklet.

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): Will my hon. Friend address the champion coaching scheme at greater length, bearing in mind the fact that it reaches 4,000 pupils out of a pupil population of 8 million? We are not getting to the main body of pupils, and that will not do.

Mr. Key: My hon. Friend is right to draw attention to our modest start, but we have to start somewhere. We have started with champion coaching which has been a huge success. As I have said, phase 2 is under way. The scheme has proved by its popularity that there is greater scope for it to grow, and I am sure that my hon. Friend will agree that that must be our objective.

Dr. Robert Spink (Castle Point): Does my hon. Friend welcome the additional £1·3 million made available to the champion coaching scheme by the Foundation for Sport and the Arts?

Mr. Key: The Foundation for Sport and the Arts has made a huge contribution to the sporting life of this country and I will refer to it specifically later. My hon. Friend is right to draw attention to the fact that the foundation has contributed substantially to the scheme. I warmly welcome that and my hon. Friend's intervention.

As I was saying, we shall publish a booklet early next year designed to encourage more local youth sport partnerships between schools and colleges and a range of other local organisations including sports clubs, local businesses, local authorities and the youth service.

Building on those foundations, we are very lucky in this country to have such an excellent and extensive voluntary sector that can carry through participation in sport into adult life. The dedication and drive of thousands of largely unpaid club officials, coaches and ground staff is the bedrock of the voluntary sector. That is essential to the quality of sports participation in this country and to improving the performance of our sportsmen and women, thereby providing the basis for sporting excellence and success.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has begun a new era of openness in government, which allows me to point out that I am a member of the Cabinet committee on health strategy. The Government will also be promoting participation in sport and improving the quality of that participation by implementing the commitment contained in the "Health of the Nation" White Paper to look at ways of increasing levels of physical fitness.

Despite the significant increases in participation in sport and active recreation in recent years, as recorded by the general household survey, overall levels of cardio-respiratory fitness in the population are unacceptably low. That is why the Government, with the help of such organisations as the Great Britain Sports Council and the Health Education Authority, are looking at the feasibility of setting physical activity targets and ways in which policies might need to be formulated to meet them.

Local authorities have an important role in encouraging and providing for that growth in participation in sport. It is essential that we make better use of our sport and leisure facilities, of which there has been a very substantial growth during the past 20 years. Central to making effective use of that investment are the managers who control programming, presentation and pricing of activities. Two initiatives that the Government have been pursuing which should help assist in the promotion of more efficient, effective and accountable management in our local authority sports facilities are compulsory competitive tendering and the citizens charter.

Before March, I had the advantage of being a local government finance Minister. I made the acquaintance of many local authorities, and saw at first hand the contribution that they were making and the way in which they carried out their commitments and their voluntary policy objectives. I also learnt a good deal more about CCT.

I became convinced that the great virtue of CCT was not just that it provided better value for money for the taxpayer, but that, for the first time—too often, for the first time—it ensured that those who were providing sporting facilities and management knew what they were trying to achieve and how they were going to achieve it. Of course, the best had already been doing that, but too often the others had not.

The great virtue of the CCT system, whatever one may think about it in party political terms, is that it encouraged a new discipline in the provision of sporting facilities. Local authorities were required to submit the first 35 per cent. by value of their sport and leisure facilities by 1 January 1992, a further 35 per cent. by August 1992 and the remaining figure by 1 January 1993. Any assessment at this stage can therefore only be preliminary, and we would expect savings to come through later. However, there is already little doubt on the evidence available to us so far that CCT has succeeded in stimulating a positive review of local authority practices and improved efficiency in leisure management.

I hope that all local authorities are by now well aware of the six key principles of the charter standard under the citizens charter. They are published standards of service; customer views to be taken into account in setting those standards; clear information about the range of services to be provided; courteous and efficient customer service; well signposted avenues for complaint with independent review wherever possible; independent validation of performance against standards and a clear commitment to improving value for money. Swale borough council leisure department, Wandsworth borough council leisure and amenities service and Omagh leisure centre in Northern Ireland are to be congratulated on their recent charter mark awards.

There are a number of other ways in which better quality management is being encouraged and in which I am pleased to say the Sports Council is playing an important part.

Through the British Quality Association, the Sports Council is co-ordinating work to identify and agree high standards of service delivery across all sectors of the sport and recreation management industry. BS5750 is an internationally recognised British standard describing a system of management to ensure the consistent delivery of a quality service. Managers in sport and recreation have been quick to grasp that opportunity, and the first facilities have been assessed and accredited by the British Standards Institute in Omagh, Newcastle, the London borough of Bexley and the City Centre Leisure, in Westminster, a new private contractor in the field.

The Sports Council has continued to support the development of the Institute of Leisure and Amenity Management to provide for the professional training and development of the whole range of leisure managers.

The most important and fundamental development, however, will be the introduction of national vocational qualifications due to be launched on 11 November in the sport and recreation field. The new qualification and occupational standards should provide a framework for the development and training of staff and volunteers in the sport and recreation industry on a par with opportunities in all other sectors of the United Kingdom economy.

That initiative has encouraged a new unity. A new education and training consortium has emerged involving the sports councils, the professional bodies, National Coaching Foundation, British Sports Forum, the Central Council for Physical Recreation, the Welsh and Scottish sports associations and others to work towards the implementation of NVQs and to provide a co-ordinated approach to training and to support their take-up.

I know that concerns have been expressed over the decline in expenditure by local authorities on sport and recreation over the past two years. Although levels of capital expenditure on those services have declined since 1989-90, that was an exceptional year caused by authorities' spending from accumulated capital receipts before the introduction of the new capital finance system in April 1990. In real terms, the estimated outturn for 1991-92 was more than 10 per cent. higher than capital expenditure on those services in 1986-87 both in gross and net—that is, less capital receipts—terms.

I said earlier that there is scope for local authorities to work imaginatively in partnerships with the private sector in enabling sports and leisure facilities to be built, rather than looking to the taxpayer to fund those developments.

Some local authorities may have assumed that the private sector merely wants to take over their sports and leisure centres through CCT. Major companies in the private sector have been telling me that they are keen to participate in partnerships with the public sector to provide new sports and leisure facilities, particularly of course, if, as part of the arrangement, they can secure the development of a commercially attractive leisure element. It is not always appropriate, but it may be helpful if I give two examples of the type of partnership that can be achieved.

Milton Keynes development corporation with the help of commercial leisure operators, has secured the development of a major facility, including an ice rink. The commercial operator provided a 30-lane ten-pin bowling centre, a Quasar space laser game, a night club and a cafe and bar. It also built an Olympic standard ice arena for the local community. The whole complex is managed by the commercial leisure operator.

The value of the ice arena to the local community has been enormous. It is used by more than 500,000 people per year and is home to the MK Kings ice hockey team. The MK Kings are in the Heineken division 1 and they attract between 1,500 to 2,000 spectators at their 32 home games each season. Players from MK Kings visit schools and encourage children to take up skating. Schools also use the ice rink for PE sessions.

Colchester borough council wished to refurbish a traditional 1960s sports centre. As part of the funding for the new schemes, two sites were let on long leases to a commercial leisure operator, a ten-pin bowling centre and a fast-food restaurant. The premium of £1·2 million raised from that partnership with the private sector was used to fund the community facilities in what was called 'Leisure World'. That comprises a 25 m competition pool, with spectator seating, a leisure pool, a sports hall, sauna world, a multi-purpose hall for use by the performing arts, and an outdoor all-weather pitch.

I know that hon. Members are bound to raise the 50 per cent. capital receipts rule. That rule does not, of course, apply to the replacement of like for like under the "in and out" arrangements allowed, subject to certain conditions—that is, regulation 18 of the capital finance regulations. Those arrangements are outlined in the Department of the Environment circular 11/90 on local authority capital finance and have been used to pay for new major sports facilities such as the new Guildford Spectrum sports and leisure facility. Another source of funding for sports facilities is the Foundation for Sport and the Arts, which provides £40 million a year for sport. That is extra money.

Mr. Tom Cox (Tooting): I have great respect for the Minister. No doubt what he is saying is a reflection of what is happening, but it is not the true picture. Over the past week, two letters have come to me from the Methodist Church and from the Greater London Central Scout Council. They complain bitterly that they cannot get the funds to do the work that they have long been doing. I hope that the Minister will address those real problems which affect many hon. Members.

Mr. Key: I shall indeed. In fact, I have just started to address them in my remarks about the Foundation for Sport and the Arts, and I shall return to them when I discuss the national lottery, which may be another source of help.

The grants awarded by the foundation range from large amounts of more than £1 million, to help to redevelop stadiums of national importance, to £500 to enable small clubs to replace equipment. The FSA has also provided substantial sums of money for coaching, sport in schools, sport for the disabled, the British Olympic team and paralympic team, and the Manchester Olympic bid, as well as making numerous grants to sports clubs and sporting bodies.

Let me tell the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) how a community that I know well—the village of Winterslow in Wiltshire—approached those problems. It needed a new village hall with some sporting facilities. In a most remarkable achievement, it raised nearly £250,000 among the 3,000 people who live in the village of Winterslow. That money was raised by help from the Foundation for Sports and the Arts, through the sports councils, local authorities, local fund raising and indeed a village referendum which raised £60,000 to be paid off over 20 years under the community charge regulations. There are ways in which small communities can raise large sums of money.

In the world of football, our facilities have been transformed, partly with the benefit of moneys made available by the reduction in pool betting duty in the 1990 Budget. That can be seen most clearly in the replacement of former terraced areas with seated accommodation and in the construction of new all-seated stands. In that, in addition to the invaluable role of the Football Trust, the Football Licensing Authority and the Football Stadia Advisory Design Council have also played an important part.

There are many other important but less obvious ways in which the safety of spectators has been increased since publication of the Taylor report. For example, great strides have been taken to improve the standard of stewarding provided at many grounds. In addition, the provision of ground plans on the rear of tickets and the painting of emergency exit gates in a distinctive colour are now taken for granted at many grounds.

There is much work still to be done. In the Taylor report there were recommendations for design to assist disabled people's access to our sporting grounds, and that has been a great success, too.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): The Minister will appreciate the hard work that has been done by my hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry), who, until recently, was the chairman of the all-party football committee, in his report on all-seated stadiums. Does the Minister agree that, paradoxically, all-seated stadiums cause great problems for some of the larger and more successful clubs? I instance, obviously, West Ham in Newham, which has a high proportion of standing spectators to seated spectators. The changeover is a financial problem, which is not susceptible to some of the solutions that the Conservative party might advocate.

Do we not need more consideration of ways in which we can retain standing accommodation that is equally as safe as seated accommodation? Of course, standing with one's friends has its own attraction. Will the Minister accept our thanks for his flexibility, but keep up the work and maintain the flexibility that he has already shown?

Mr. Key: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for those remarks. I am also grateful for the work of the all-party committee. We listened carefully to its advice. The hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde and my hon. Friends who are members of that committee have more than once discussed the issue with us. I take the hon. Gentleman's point about the need for flexibility, but we must not be deflected from our aims of providing not only safer football grounds but an improved quality of ground. People are beginning to expect a higher quality. That usually means seating, and more comfortable seating at that.

Of course I have listened carefully to what the hon. Gentleman said. I am aware that there is still strong feeling on the issue, and I shall continue to listen to those representations, notwithstanding our determination to ensure that safety is a prime objective.

Mr. John Denham (Southampton, Itchen): I hope to deal with safety in my speech. Will the Minister say something about the problems facing football clubs, including Southampton? The problem is not so much financial; the length of planning delays and the difficulties in planning procedures make it impossible for clubs to meet the demands of the Taylor report, even though they and the local city council have made every effort to do so. Will he talk to the Football Licensing Authority about exercising its discretion more widely where it is convinced that everyone is acting with good will but there are inevitable delays?

Mr. Key: Southampton has made its views clear on the issue. Only last month, I visited Fratton park to discuss with Portsmouth its problems, which are similar but slightly different in detail. It is true that, with the best will in the world, football clubs find it difficult to meet the deadline of 1994. Therefore, it is important that the Football Licensing Authority should be prepared to be flexible where there is a clear intention to complete the work but practical difficulties arise which are not of the making of the clubs, such as planning delays, to which the hon. Gentleman referred.

On 21 September, the chief executive of the Football Licensing Authority wrote to Brian Hunt, the director of Southampton football club. If the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) has not seen the letter, I am sure that he will be able to do so. The Football Licensing Authority said that it would be sensible and reasonable about the matter. It would try to ensure that the club met the deadline, but it would be flexible if it received answers to questions such as: has the club received detailed planning permission? Has the site been acquired? Has the design of the stadium and related facilities been finalised and approved by all relevant authorities? Has the necessary financial package been secured? Has the contract to complete the stadium been let? Has work started on the site or has a start date been settled? Has a firm date for completion been fixed? Are there safeguards against delays? Has the disposal of the existing site been agreed?

That is a reasonably flexible approach. I gave a copy of the letter to the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde about a week ago. We agree that this is a reasonable approach to an undoubtedly difficult problem.

Mr. Anthony Coombs (Wyre Forest): We all appreciate the work that the Football Trust does both in implementing the Taylor report and in improving safety in sports grounds. One of the clubs in my constituency is Kidderminster Harriers, which is a Vauxhall conference league club of great distinction. One of the league's great desires is that it should have access to Football Trust funds to bring the stadiums up to the standards required for the frequently substantial crowd numbers at the league's matches. The average for Kidderminster Harriers is about 1,200 people a week. That is significantly in excess of the crowds at some of the third division football club matches.

Will the Minister tell us something about the progress of negotiations between the Football Trust and the GM Vauxhall conference league on that matter?

Mr. Key: First, I wish the Kidderminster Harriers a successful season. I am sure that they will have it, with the support of my hon. Friend. Will he let me have more detail of this problem, which I will pursue? If he writes to me, I shall be better acquainted with the facts and better able to support him in that difficulty.

Looking to the future, the national lottery will be an important source of funds for sport. Its establishment is a high priority for the new Department. We hope to be in a position to introduce legislation very soon to enable the lottery to be operational by the end of 1994. The detailed policy on allocation between the various good causes is still under discussion but undoubtedly sport will benefit from it. A range of facilities from state-of-the-art stadiums, to support for local projects and clubs will benefit. It is important that sport gears itself to take advantage of the funds that will be available.

It is important that we realise what wonderful facilities we already have in Britain. Of course there are facilities that need repair all over the country, from village cricket huts to stadiums. Nevertheless, we need to remind ourselves that, compared with many nations, we are well provided for. More than 1,100 indoor swimming pools, more than 1,600 sports halls, 490 athletic tracks, 78 ice rinks, 99 dry-ski slopes and 1,900 golf courses are available to the public in Britain.

Mr. Tom Pendry (Stalybridge and Hyde): Before he leaves the subject of the national lottery, will the Minister comment on a report in this morning's Times headed "Treasury concedes lower tax on lottery"? The report says:

> "Tax levied on the national lottery should be less than 20 per cent., the Treasury has conceded. National heritage ministers have won their case."

Will the Minister comment on whether that is an accurate report?

Mr. Key: I was always brought up to believe that one should never believe everything that one reads in the newspapers. If the hon. Gentleman is right, I shall be absolutely thrilled. However, I have not had time to read The Times this morning. In any event, I cannot comment on that speculation. We shall have to contain ourselves for only a few days longer to find out what tax will be levied on the lottery.

I turn now to the various measures that the Government are taking to promote sporting ethics and tackle abuse in sport. Our worries are not only domestic. There is often an international dimension to be considered. Indeed, on issues such as the fight against drug abuse, the international arena provides the real battleground, if we are to progress towards our goal of drug-free sport.

We are working through the Council of Europe, which has a proven track record in addressing doping and spectator violence and in promoting sports ethics. The recent changes in eastern Europe have posed a new set of challenges, and we shall continue to play our part in ensuring that these are also met.

We have taken the lead in developing the Council of Europe's code of sports ethics. It was launched in Rhodes in May 1992 at the conference of European Ministers with responsibility for sport. The basic principle of the code is that ethical considerations and fair play are integral, not optional, elements of all sports activities. The code focuses on the role that adults and institutions play in promoting the concept of fair play among children. Children have a right to participate in and enjoy sport—but adults have a responsibility to promote fair play and thereby ensure that those rights are respected.

It was significant that I was invited by the Council of Europe at that meeting of Ministers to introduce the debate on the code of sport ethics. People turned to Britain when it came to fair play in sport. The United Kingdom has also played a leading role in the preparation and implementation of the Council of Europe's anti-doping convention, which came into force in 1990, and we continue to encourage countries to ratify it. The convention provides the framework within which Governments, working closely with sports bodies, implement effective anti-doping policies.

The Government signed in 1990 an anti-doping agreement with the Canadian and Australian Governments, which provides for the mutual testing of athletes, both in and out of competition. I am glad to say that Norway has recently signed the agreement. We shall host a major international conference on doping in sport in September 1993, which is likely to involve more than 200 experts from doping authorities, sports bodies, the International Olympic Committee and Governments. That underlines our commitment to promoting international action.

We also finance the Sports Council's independent drug-testing programme. Budgeted expenditure in 1992-93 is £734,000. The programme has received worldwide commendation. It provides for testing to be carried out by trained and independent sampling officers; the random testing of competitors, both in and out of competition; and publication of adverse findings and action taken by governing bodies of sport. The programme is supplemented by an educational campaign aimed at schools, colleges and sports facilities.

I do not want to underestimate the scientific and medical difficulties and the niceties of defining drugs in sport, but one thing must be absolutely clear: the use of drugs to gain advantage is simply cheating.

The United Kingdom was instrumental in establishing the Council of Europe's convention on spectator violence and misbehaviour at sports events, and under United Kingdom chairmanship its standing committee took the lead internationally to identify a wide range of measures to bring about improvements in crowd control and safety. The Home Department is in the lead in representing the United Kingdom on that committee, but my Department continues to play an active part in its proceedings.

At the European level, we cannot afford to ignore the growing influence of the European Community in sport. Although the Community has no formal competence in sport, there are a number of areas in which sport is affected by Community activity—notably through legislation concerned with the completion of the single market. It is essential that sporting interests are protected within the Community, and we shall play our part to ensure that a constructive dialogue takes place on sports issues.

The Government's commitment to promoting the interests of United Kingdom sports internationally was demonstrated by the support that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, other ministerial colleagues and I gave to the British Olympic team in Barcelona. That underlined our backing for the bid to bring the games to Manchester.

I am sure that the House would like to join me in congratulating our medal winners and all members of the British Olympic team. The country was impressed, indeed thrilled, by the range of the team's achievements in athletics, swimming, and sports as diverse as archery, boxing, canoeing, cycling, hockey, judo and yachting——

Mr. Denham: What about rowing?

Mr. Key: Yes, the hon. Gentleman is right to mention rowing, which was one of the most spectacular of all the Olympic events.

The magnificent performances of Chris Boardman, Linford Christie, Sally Gunnell—that was a race that I shall never forget, as I was sitting by the track—the Searle brothers, with Gary Herbert, the coxless rowing pair of Steve Redgrave and Matthew Pinsent, will live with us all for a long time to come. It was a most dramatic and heart-warming spectacle for us all.

I take this opportunity to pay tribute to Sir Arthur Gold, who stood down as the British Olympic Association chairman on Wednesday. He has provided a lifetime service to athletics, the Olympic movement and to sport generally. Of all his many achievements, I single out his personal crusade against doping as having one of the most significant long-term effects on sport. When the doping menace is eventually beaten, much of the credit will rest with Sir Arthur.

I cannot let this occasion pass without mentioning Sir Arthur's personal charm and his powers of quiet persuasion. He was a great ambassador for British sport.

Craig Reedie now has the job of preparing the BOA for the challenges of the 21st century, including the staging of the Olympic games in this country in the year 2000. All sports organisations must be flexible enough to adapt to changing circumstances and the BOA is no exception. I am sure that Mr. Reedie will ensure that it plays its full role in promoting excellence and ensuring continued British success in the Olympics.

I was delighted to attend the Barcelona games for the physical disabled and blind athletes, and the Madrid games—the first ever paralympics for mentally handicapped athletes. There was a high standard of competition in those games. In the Barcelona games Britain came third in the medal table with 40 gold medals.

I do not hide the fact that I was particularly enthusiastic about the paralympics. I was overwhelmed by the standards achieved by our athletes and by the great sense of joy and fulfilment which was evident. If there was a difference between the able-bodied Olympics and the paralympics, it was that every hour of every day was tense, difficult and fraught at the former, while every hour of every day was a show of excellence by the athletes and darn good fun at the paralympics.

Finally, a word about the greatest prize in sport that a country can hope to have, and a prize that the Government are determined that we should win—the Olympic games, in Manchester. We have given substantial backing to the bid by committing £55 million of Government money. Much of that is being used to begin the process of creating new venues to stage the games in Manchester. Anyone who visits the fine communities around Manchester—not merely the city, but all the communities that will participate in the Olympic effort—cannot fail to be impressed by the way in which the Olympics have caught the imaginations of the people in the north-west.

When members of the International Olympic Committee visit Manchester next year, they will see construction of a velodrome and an indoor arena under way, and considerable progress on the preparation of the site for the main stadium complex. There could be no clearer evidence of the Government's commitment, and the commitment of the British people, to staging the Olympics. We are conscious that, when the bid is successful, it will require investment in human resources as well as physical facilities to ensure that we can maximise the long-term sporting benefits of hosting the games.

Nothing that I saw in Barcelona could not be done better by Manchester, including the weather. Events were rained off in Barcelona, but most of the time we lived in a sort of sweaty bath, which was most unpleasant for many of our athletes. I suspect that it will not be much better in Atlanta. There will either be hotter and more humid conditions out of doors, or events will take place indoors in air-conditioned facilities, and athletes will all get flu within a day or two. In Barcelona, a remarkable number of athletes, from all over the world, told me, "Roll on Manchester."

I said "when" and not "if" we win. We can win with the help of all those involved, including Bob Scott and his team and all the people of Manchester and the north-west. It is important that the country lines up behind Manchester in its bid. It is a bid for Britain, and the legacy will be invaluable. The people of Manchester and the north-west, including Blackpool and all the other communities that make up the north-west, will benefit in terms of sport and of economic regeneration. It will be a boost to the economy, putting the north-west of England firmly on the map and at the head of our nation's proud role of great cities. There will be a range of major new facilities, of the highest international standards. We shall all gain from it.

I have surveyed the sporting scene at some length, not least due to some helpful interventions from hon. Members on both sides of the House. I shall end on a subject about which I feel passionately. I have touched on the pinnacles of excellence in sport in this country. It is right that the Government and the House should nurture and promote the interests of excellence in British sport. The great British tradition of sport, which makes Britain envied throughout the world, is that it is amateur and local. That access to sport makes the sporting tradition of this country so unique.

I have had limited time to touch on some of the strategically important elements of our sporting life. I am sure that other hon. Members will wish to mention many issues. I should have liked to expand on the subject of children's play, countryside issues, horses in sport, inner cities, playing fields, sport for the disabled, water sports and many more issues. They may have to wait for another day.

10.27 am

Mr. Tom Pendry (Stalybridge and Hyde): When I was coming into the Chamber one of my colleagues told me, "Don't forget to thank the Minister who's bound to congratulate you on coming to the Dispatch Box." However, the Minister did not do so. Nevertheless, I congratulate him on making his debut in a sports debate.

Mr. Key: Of course the hon. Gentleman has my congratulations. I thought that I recalled distinctly that he had spoken on sport at the Dispatch Box before the summer recess, but we all congratulate him on appearing at the Dispatch Box today and look forward to constructive and detailed discussions because he has great knowledge of sport.

Mr. Pendry: I was not fishing for compliments, but I look forward to working with the Under-Secretary during the short time that he will be in that job. Judging by the problems facing his party these days it could be days rather than months or years. I look forward to sparring with the hon. Gentleman in the interests of sport. Speaking as a former boxer, I can tell him that any punch-ups we have will be healthy and will be conducted under the Queensberry rules.

Mr. Harry Greenway: The hon. Gentleman and the Minister are about the same weight.

Mr. Pendry: I shall come to that.

Having welcomed the Minister and his boss, I should like to speak about the Secretary of State's predecessor who, in his short tenure in his new Department, won much deserved praise, especially from the football world, for his willingness to listen to reasoned arguments and to exercise a laudable degree of flexibility in the light of changing circumstances. In my capacity as chairman of the all-party football committee, I and my fellow officers were recently able to convince him to relax the imposition of all-seater accommodation at our smaller football grounds. We met the Secretary of State and the Minister just a few days ago on a delegation and they also showed a flexible approach to clubs that wish to develop new modern stadiums and find themselves frustrated by an inflexible planning straitjacket. My hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) referred to that. A letter that I was supposed to receive one or two weeks ago did not arrive. I understand that it was in draft form. No doubt the letter to be sent to clubs is helpful.

As the Minister is aware, my views on soccer are well known and documented, and many of my hon. Friends wish to speak about football. I am sure that the Minister will respond positively to them and to the many arguments advanced from time to time by the sports world. We should not blame him for the mess that he has inherited in some areas. I assure him that the Opposition will continue to advance the interests of all our sports men and women in future debates.

I am sure that the Minister is not aware that the debate has historical significance. It is not just that it is his debut in a sports debate but that he is the first Conservative Minister to initiate a debate on sport and recreation in Government time. He can take a bow. There have been sports Bills, but there has never been a debate of this kind. It is a pity that it is taking place on a Friday, because many hon. Members who would have liked to take part have constituency engagements. I hope that those who are watching and listening will not think that the attendance reflects the view of the House on sporting matters. Perhaps I should not carp at the fact that the debate is being held on a Friday, because we are grateful for such a debate.

In the past no sports debate was complete without the towering presence of my noble Friend Lord Howell of Aston Manor as we must now refer to him. He will be sadly missed by all sports-loving Members, but at least he is just along the Corridor and I am sure that he will be ready and willing to assist any hon. Member who needs encouragement.

The Minister knows that the Opposition will do all that they can to promote sport and to elevate it in the political pecking order, because the potential opportunities for sport are boundless. For the sake of the people who look to him for a lead on sporting matters the Minister has a duty to grasp those opportunities. We want the Minister and the Secretary of State to fight sport's corner in Government. Despite what the Minister said, they do not have a good sports record on which to build. At the general election the Conservative party hardly mentioned sport, and time after time Conservative Ministers responsible for sport have spoken about how they want a better deal for sport, but time after time their words evaporated into thin air when it came to the crunch.

Many people rightly feel angry about the way in which the Government have recently treated sport. Too often it appears that the Government see sport as a convenient vehicle for planted photo opportunities or public relations, rather than as an important and vital area for investment, support and commitment. That must stop, and I hope that the Minister's optimistic views will not prove to be merely the start of another painful cycle of raising the hopes of our sports men and women and then dashing them. I warn the Minister that if that happens he will find us not as accommodating as we are on this occasion.

The Minister will be aware of the welcome given to the publication prior to the last election of my party's charter for sport. Sport recognised the commitment to securing a better deal for sport that our charter demonstrated and many looked forward with relish to helping to implement our positive proposals.

[Mr. Pendry]

To the Minister has fallen the task of implementing the findings of the review of sports policy undertaken by two of his predecessors. I hope that he will do not only that but much more, because the review is more memorable for the issues that it fails to address than what it proposes. However, I reassure the Minister that we agree on the review's broad thrust.

The proposal to reform the national structures of sport, including, as the Minister said, the creation of a United Kingdom sports commission and a separate English sports council is welcome. The Minister said that work towards establishing those bodies is progressing. In that context, I plead with him not to overlook the expertise of those who have fought for many years for voluntary sport. He implied that he did not overlook it. In his nominations for membership of the United Kingdom sports commission he should sympathetically consider the case for appointing a representative from the Central Council of Physical Recreation whose campaigning work on behalf of sport over many years is known and respected by many.

The Minister will understand our desire to press for further information about how he intends to press ahead with that work. What resources will be allocated to the United Kingdom sports commission and to the English sports council? This morning's issue of The Daily Telegraph quoted a figure which was thought to be inappropriate by many of the regional sports directors. There has been much criticism—not least by the Opposition—of the cuts in Sports Council grant. The Minister must assure the House that the total grant aid to the United Kingdom sports commission and the English sports council will be more than the current grant aid to the Sports Council.

We want to see some evidence that the reforms that the Minister has outlined will be given enough support to enable them to achieve more than a mere game of musical chairs with the national responsibilities for sport. We want clear evidence of how the reforms will bring benefits to sport. Before he finalises the precise arrangements, membership and responsibilities of the sports commission and the English sports council we expect him to return to the House so that we can examine the proposals and debate them in detail to ensure that they are the best way forward. Thereafter, the Minister must ensure that the House has a regular opportunity for a full debate on the state of sport and recreation. He has taken the first step by initiating this debate, and he and his boss should seek to secure an annual debate on sport—a state of the sporting nation debate as it were—to follow the publication of the annual report of the Sports Council and the United Kingdom sports commission, when it is established. If he fights for such a debate he will get the full backing of the Opposition. In the winding-up speech I hope to hear that the Minister is prepared to join us in arguing for such an annual debate. The Minister nods. I hope that that means he has given that commitment. One reason why such a debate is crucial is the increasing importance of the sports and leisure industry to our economy. A few days ago in a newspaper interview the Secretary of State described his Department's job as dealing with "the ways people spend their time when they are not working".

We understand what he meant by that, but it is worth remembering that the task of looking after the interests of sport also includes a responsibility to one of Britain's major employers and thousands of workers. For many people sport is precisely what they do when they are working. The Sports Council estimates that some 476,000 people are employed in the sport and leisure industry. That is about the same as those employed in the paper, printing and publishing industry, and the postal service and telecommunications. Compared with other industries it is, luckily, healthy, but the Minister must be aware that the rapid decline in other industries presents implications for sport.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) spelt that out clearly. The topical example that he recognised is the fact that 75 football pitches, 60 bowling greens, just under 50 cricket pitches and about 40 tennis courts serving local communities are managed by the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation. It currently receives funding from British Coal, but not, it is feared for much longer. The operation may be able to continue as a charitable trust, but not without support. It will not be seen as a weakening of the unanswerable case for coal, which the Government clearly have not grasped, to argue that the Minister must pledge to do all in his power to provide support for that association.

Mr. Skinner: My hon. Friend is absolutely right to raise that matter again and say how many grounds are involved. On previous occasions when some of those grounds were lost to the coal industry, local authorities could use moneys obtained from the Government and their own purse to enable them to take over the grounds. We need an assurance that the pits do not close, but, if they do, that local authorities will be allowed money from central Government revenues to save those magnificent sporting facilities.

Mr. Pendry: My hon. Friend underlines the point and if the Minister wishes to intervene again, my hon. Friend and I would be grateful.

Mr. Key: The East Midlands Council for Sport and Recreation has had discussions with the regional arm of the CISWO, which has expressed concern about the future funding from the Coal Board and whether it will be able to continue to provide sports facilities. I am prepared to give an undertaking that I shall watch carefully to see how those discussions go.

Mr. Pendry: The Minister has a responsibility not just to observe those discussions but to get involved and ensure that those sporting facilities are funded. That is his job and we expect it of him.

I was glad to hear the Minister's commitment to introducing a system for the introduction of a national qualification for those employed in the sports industry. That is good news, but he must give a commitment to ensuring that a proper level of long-term funding and support from his Department will be forthcoming so that those qualifications have a secure base and a healthy future.

The hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe), who made his maiden speech only eight days ago, told me that he would have liked to have been here. His comments regarding the importance of sport for promoting health interested me and, no doubt, many other hon. Members. He rightly called attention to the need for an integrated approach to health promotion and the promotion of sport and leisure. The hon. Gentlemen will be a great asset to those of us who care for sport, but unfortunately he did not conclude by saying that that deterioration was due to the policies of the Government whom he supports. For example, the recent findings, to which the Minister has already referred, of the Allied Dunbar national fitness survey showed that one third of men and two thirds of women were unable to continue walking at a reasonable pace up a 1 in 20 slope without becoming breathless and having to stop. The survey also showed that more than 48 per cent. of men and 40 per cent. of women are overweight and the numbers have increased from 39 and 32 per cent. respectively since 1980. I shall not say that it has anything to do with the political change of Government, but may I gently suggest that the Minister and I could both do with shedding a few pounds. To show an example, I have only this week embarked on a major fitness drive in the Westminster gym. I hope that he will show equal determination to get a healthy shape and accept my challenge to meet me in the gym.

Mr. Key: It is true that the hon. Gentleman and I are no longer as young, fit or lithe as we once were. Nevertheless, may I warn him and the many hundreds of thousands of rather tubby middle-aged men out there that the most foolish thing they could do is to suddenly take some form of strenuous exercise that will do them nothing but harm. He is right to point out that we need to take gentle exercise appropriate to our age and condition and I entirely endorse that. However, I shall never forget that the fittest man I ever knew died on the squash court when he was 28.

Mr. Pendry: I am not sure whether the Minister will come to the gym with me or not. If he does, I promise that we shall go gently. We can at least see who mounts the most effective self-promotion of good health.

The Minister repeated the Government's commitment to bringing before the House legislation to introduce a national lottery. He must recognise that if the lottery is to succeed, it must be framed in such a way as to maximise the benefits that can undoubtedly accrue to sport. He must also recognise that there remain serious questions to address in arriving at the best possible structure for the lottery. I wonder whether the Minister has had a chance to look at a copy of the excellent report, "A Chance to Prosper", written by Jo MaCrea and published by Charles Barker, Public Affairs. I am sure that he would benefit from reading its contents, as would anyone interested in the lottery debate. Any debate surrounding the lottery must deal with the funding and taxation of sport in its entirety.

The Minister will know from reading our charter for sport that we promise to set up an inquiry into all aspects of sports funding and taxation, betting and sponsorship to ensure that a fairer proportion of the money taken out of sport by the Government goes back into sport. We do so both because we are determined to rectify the fact that, for every £1 that the Government invest in sport, they receive £9 in return and because we want to see a more rational and coherent system for the funding of sport. That is the context within which we shall consider the specific proposals that the Minister brings before the House. We shall want to consider his plans clause by clause, line by line, to ensure that the lottery really brings the greatest benefit to all areas of sport, including those currently receiving support from other forms of gambling.

Mr. Peter Kilfoyle (Liverpool, Walton): My hon. Friend will be aware that the GAH group employed by the Department of National Heritage as consultants on the national lottery reported on 7 October—it is a private departmental report. I hope that, among the aspects studied in that report are the detrimental effects of the proposals for a national lottery on bodies such as the Foundation for Sport and the Arts and the Football Trust, notwithstanding the effects on employment and sport generally.

Mr. Pendry: My hon. Friend has illustrated my point —that we must consider carefully many aspects of any proposal that the Government bring before the House.

The Minister will be aware that the Sports Council would greatly appreciate clarification of the Government's thinking, as set out in the White Paper. In its response to the White Paper, the Sports Council says:

> "Accepting for the moment that the Government's argument that a lottery tax will be necessary if its revenues are not to fall, it is unclear how the Government would propose to act in the event of the tax serving to increase its revenues. It could be argued that any extra tax-take accruing from the lottery should be distributed among the good causes, for whose benefit the national lottery will have been set up in the first place".

So the Minister should clarify exactly what the Government's thinking was in that regard when they drafted the White Paper.

One of the country's most popular spectators sports is greyhound racing. The greyhound world was delighted when the Chancellor agreed to cut betting duty in the last Budget and said that greyhound racing should receive its share of that cut. Seven months later the bookmakers are still enjoying the fruits of that windfall, but, as I understand it, have yet to pass on any fraction of the revenue to the greyhound racing industry. I have written to the Home Secretary about the matter. Will the Minister use his authority to reinforce my request and ask the Home Secretary to bang heads together to ensure that all sections of the greyhound racing industry, which desperately needs funds, enjoy the fruits of the Treasury's generous gesture?

On a wider front, the Minister must realise that a coherent strategy for sport is required, not the piecemeal measures that have been the hallmark of Government policy to date. We achieved a first in our charter for sport when we detailed such a strategy at every level of sport and recreation, from a comprehensive review of national sporting organisations to addressing the importance of sport in the communities and schools serving the needs of everyone—schoolchildren, their parents and even their grandparents.

I should like the Sports Council to resurrect its all-to-play-for scheme for the 50-plus age group. There are literally hundreds of thousands of people in that category who need encouragement. They include the unemployed and those who have been forced to take early retirement, as well as those of normal retirement age. Government policies have resulted in the numbers piling up. The Sports Council and the Central Council of Physical Recreation —in whatever form they take in future—should particularly target such people. Sport and recreation will enrich as well as lengthen their lives.

[Mr. Pendry]

I am sure that the Minister will join me in encouraging the Sports Council on its annual report produced this week. It has gone a long way to achieving many of the important objectives that it set itself. I know that there are many other objectives that it would like to have achieved.

I know that other hon. Members wish to raise matters of specific concern, but I have a number of issues on which to press the Minister before I conclude. The Minister must explain what has happened to the consultative letter issued in December 1991 by his predecessor to chief education officers on the selling-off of school playing fields. Many people would argue that, far from being a determined effort to save those vital sporting assets, the letter was little more than a meaningless pre-election public relations exercise to cover up the fact that the Government had still not acted to halt the losses. The Minister must know that that is not good enough. He must tell the House when he intends to publish the responses to that letter and issue the circular calling a halt to the decimation of school fields, which continues to this day.

The CCPR has used Government figures to calculate that every day for the past two years, £100,000 worth of sports fields have been sold for development due to the financial desperation of local councils—a desperation which results from Government policies.

Mr. John Carlisle: While castigating the Government on the basis of their lack of direct intervention in the matter of playing fields—I have some sympathy with that argument—will the hon. Gentleman also castigate local authorities of both political colours, including Labour, that are not helping to save the playing fields? Those authorities' policies are not conducive to the promotion of sport. Such local authorities hide behind the funding arguments rather than considering the needs of the local community. Labour councils are as guilty of that as Conservative.

Mr. Pendry: It is rich for the hon. Gentleman to make such a comment. I do not know of one local authority, Labour or Conservative, that is taking such action willingly. They are forced to do so due to Government policies, and I discount the hon. Gentleman's argument. What sort of sporting future do Government policies guarantee thousands of schoolchildren who turn up for term without those priceless assets?

The Government made a commitment to undertake a survey of facilities for teaching swimming in schools. The Minister said that it was a Government aim. Is it possible to achieve that aim before we receive the results of the survey that I asked the Minister's predecessor to undertake 19 months ago? We are still awaiting the published results of the survey. I am sure that the Minister must now have some idea of whether he can honour his earlier commitment to match Labour's pledge to teach children to swim 25 m by the age of 11. We cannot allow the situation to continue and I look forward to hearing from the Minister about when the results will be published and the commitment met.

The Minister is in a predicament because he has to clear up the messes caused by his predecessors. We cannot blame him for those messes at this early stage in his sporting ministerial career, but I hope that he will address those problems when he replies to the debate.

Foremost among those problems is the shambles surrounding the wholesale destruction of the arrangements for community use of school sports facilities. As the Minister knows, the arrangements were destroyed by Government legislation. Despite the best efforts of myself, my colleagues and even some Conservative Members in the previous Session, the legislation still stands in need of urgent amendment.

That urgency was highlighted in the recent case involving the Great Barr school in Birmingham. As the Minister knows, more than £1 million was invested in the school sports hall by Birmingham city council for community use before the school decided to opt out. As a result of that decision, those vital sporting resources are to be denied the local community. That denial cannot be allowed to continue. I urge the Minister to do all that he can to halt that scandal.

I offer my co-operation in overcoming the farce if the Minister will sit down with me after the debate and arrange discussions between us so that we can draw up the necessary legislation to save the facilities and thousands like them. If he is not prepared to do that, at the very least he can say today that he is prepared to arrange for the appropriate Minister to receive a deputation from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves and an all-party delegation from the city of Birmingham to discuss the issue. I hope that the Minister will show a willingness to do that at the very least.

In case the Minister is tempted to make a vain effort to extol the supposed virtues of opting out, may I warn schools that if they opt out they will be unable to look to the Government for help to provide sports facilities. I have a copy of a letter dated 28 August this year sent from the Department for Education to the chairmen of the governors of all grant-maintained schools. It tells them frankly to forget any idea of the Government's giving them help to develop sport in their schools. It states:

> "schools . . . may feel disadvantaged by not being able to propose projects which they need.
> But . . . schools should not incur expenditure in preparing bids which have no chance of success.
> Projects in the following areas should not be submitted: swimming pools, sports halls, hard play areas, drama/performing arts facilities".

That is the reality for sport for children in opt-out schools. The Government have betrayed them.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: It is a bit rich for the hon. Gentleman to lecture us on that subject when part of the problem for grant-maintained schools, particularly those in Labour-controlled local education authorities, is that whereas previously they were able to co-operate with local education authorities and use some of their facilities such as swimming pools, now, on purely vindictive and ideological grounds, they are unable to do so. Baverstock school in Birmingham has been deprived of the use of sports pitches, swimming pools and even libraries due to the vindictiveness of Birmingham local education authority.

Mr. Pendry: It is not because the authorities are vindictive, but because they have been deprived of hard cash.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Pendry: No, I am sure that the hon. Gentleman would like to expand his argument and I should like to intervene. He is talking nonsense, and I think that he knows it.

Mr. John Carlisle: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Pendry: No, I shall not as other hon. Members wish to speak.

On top of the problems that I have already mentioned, local authorities will face difficult times in the months ahead in sectors of sport and recreation. The leisure departments of council after council have contacted my office to complain about the current capping of the council's budget. As a result, councils that are striving to provide sports facilities are finding their development programmes hampered and cut back through no fault of their own—that answers the argument proposed by the hon. Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs). Many schools that would normally provide swimming and other sporting activities have found that, without free bus services and the like, they can no longer continue to do so. That is just one example among many, and I hope that, now that the Minister has his feet under the table, he will address the other areas of neglect.

I am proud to have been the Minister who introduced mandatory rate relief, at 65 per cent., for sports clubs in Northern Ireland. That policy has done much to benefit and promote grassroots sport in the Province, and I am positive that it would have a similar effect in this country if the Government would grasp it.

Is the Minister aware that, according to figures that I have managed to extract from the Government by way of parliamentary questions, more than 1,000 voluntary sports clubs in England and Wales were denied rate relief last year? Moreover, the situation is worsening, as my hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) said. Government rating policy is hitting the very grassroots of sport and thousands of volunteers. The Minister has a duty to stand up for those people and give them a better deal.

Mr. Key: On charitable rate relief, if sports clubs decide to go for charitable status, they are subject to 100 per cent. rate relief. If they decide not to, it is up to the local authority to offer them 75 per cent. rate relief, with only 25 per cent. falling on the local charge payer.

Mr. Pendry: I often wonder whether Ministers live in the real world. At a time when local authorities are trying to get their budgets together, it is just not on to expect them to give such relief. The Minister should not skirt round the fact that we need mandatory rate relief.

If we do not provide that support for sport for our children, local sportsmen and women throughout the country will not be able to shine as brightly as the stars at Barcelona, in whose success the Minister rejoiced. Those of us who were privileged to go to Barcelona and see our athletes perform well—Sally Gunnell, Linford Christie and all those mentioned by the Minister—also recognise the achievements of the host nation, however. Until their games, the Spanish had won only four gold medals in the history of the games. In Barcelona, they won a grand total of 13. That is what can be achieved when a country is fired up to show the world its commitment to sport.

I hope that that lesson was not lost on the Ministers parading there. Five Ministers in all, including the Prime Minister, went to Barcelona, and a good deal of flag waving went on—especially in respect of Simon Terry, one of the medal winners to whom the Minister referred. Simon Terry won two bronze medals for Britain in the archery contest—the first medals won in that event in 84 years. Ministers' cheers rang hollow when that young man returned home to discover that, because he was not physically able to sign on for income support, he was denied payment. To this day, despite my numerous attempts to get the Government to compensate him, all that I have received by way of ministerial replies is what I can only describe as a kick in the teeth for an Olympic star. The then Minister for National Heritage, the right hon. and learned Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) wrote to the Secretary of State for Social Security at my request, but, when I met Simon a couple of days ago, he told me that, to date he had not had a penny.

I hope that the Government's stated commitment to the Manchester Olympic bid will not turn out to be so hollow. Episodes such as that which I have described do not assist those in international sporting circles in believing in our commitment to the Olympic ideal. I believe that the Prime Minister is personally committed to the Manchester Olympic bid—even if he was also once committed to a stable exchange rate, zero inflation and higher interest rates and if 31 of our coal pits were safe a month ago. Government wobbling is something about which I worry, so, 11 days ago, I wrote to the Prime Minister requesting a firm undertaking that, whatever nasties he has planned for the November public expenditure round, the £55 million promised to Manchester for the bid will be honoured in full. So far, I have received only an acknowledgement, but I certainly hope that the reply will be positive, because it is vital not just for sport in Britain but for the hard-hit north-west of England that the hon. Gentleman honours the commitment. Mr. Scott and his hard-working team must not be let down by the Government.

Before leaving the subject of the Olympic games, let me join the Minister in congratulating all those athletes who took part in the paralympic games, who won 40 gold medals out of a possible 128 and gained us third place overall among the nations competing. If we are to maintain those standards of sporting excellence, however, we must be prepared to give more support to the voluntary work of the British Paralympic Association and to all the coaches, administrators and managers who gave up their time to make such a valuable contribution. As a trustee of that association, I have a special reason for asking that.

In wider terms, the British Olympic movement does not do well under this Government. In particular, the British Olympic Association needs the kind of financial assistance given by other countries to their Olympic bodies. The BOA receives nothing, and desperately needs help to alleviate its tax burden. Surely, the Minister must be sympathetic to that.

The Minister has referred to those in sport who betray the Olympic ideal—those who cheat by taking drugs to enhance their performance. The drug problem in sport is a serious one and we ignore it at our, and at sport's, peril. I hope that the Minister will ensure that we have time to debate that growing problem in the not-too-distant future.

Philip Noel-Baker, who graced the House with his presence for 30 years, was one of our greatest Olympians. I was pleased to be present this week at the unveiling by Sir Arthur Gold of a plaque to commemorate his life. I endorse everything that the Minister said about Sir Arthur. Philip was a great man of peace and a great Olympian who, as my Member of Parliament for Derby, South certainly inspired me to take a more active part in sport politics. The unveiling of the plaque, arranged by English Heritage, was not, alas, attended by a Minister from the Department of National Heritage. I am sure that there was a good reason for that, but it was nevertheless unfortunate, and was noted.

I know that Philip, a passionate opponent of apartheid in South African sport, would be joining those of us who welcome a return of South African sportsmen and women on the world stage following the changes in that country in the direction of multiracial sport. More than any other action, the sports boycott has begun to bring about the desired changes in that country. There is still a long way to go, however, as was shown by the South African Rugby Football Union's reluctance to move as fast as those in other sports to develop their sport in the black townships and, indeed, to break with their use of the springbok emblem and other symbols of apartheid. I hope that those who do protest will do so peacefully but effectively and that they will be heard both in South Africa and in Britain.

I again thank the Minister for arranging the debate. I hope that he will listen with care to those who take part and will act on some of the positive and constructive points that are made. Those of us who care for sport in Britain must not abandon those who play and those who spectate in their millions. As Philip Noel-Baker once wrote:

"Sport is too precious to be expendable by politicians."

I can assure the Minister that the Opposition have no intention of allowing that to happen.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Before I call the next hon. Member, let me draw the attention of the House to the fact that a number of hon. Members have expressed a willingness to participate in the debate. Perhaps those who are called early will bear that in mind.

11.7 am

Mr. John Carlisle (Luton, North): I shall certainly bear in mind your appropriate strictures regarding the length of speeches, Madam Deputy Speaker. I am afraid that it appears to be something of a tradition—not, regrettably, disproved by the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry)—for opening speeches in debates such as this to be rather long.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde. I thought at the start that he was making an excellent speech, and I am delighted to see him elevated to the Front Bench after so many years languishing on the Back Benches. Inevitably, the hon. Gentleman lapsed into his usual carping criticism as his speech progressed and as he got further into his brief. By the end, some of us were left with a sense of sadness that he had tainted his speech with an attack on my hon. Friend the Minister, who comprehensively argued the Government's case for sport with pride in the fact that, after 13 years of Conservative government, sport is very much in the forefront of politics.

We particularly welcome the appointment of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, who is a keen sportsman, and, in particular, a cricket buff, which is of enormous advantage. We welcome above all my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's commitment to sport, which is clear both from his attendance of functions and from his close interest in what goes on and from his deep love of football and, especially, cricket. As a fellow member of the MCC, I hope that my right hon. Friend will note that he may shortly be asked to attend an extraordinary general meeting of that organisation called because of the sad—and, I think, wrong—omission from the touring team this winter of David Gower. Perhaps my right hon. Friend will use his new membership of the MCC to register a protest at the silly and foolish omission of one of England's greatest cricketers. But this debate, however wide, should not go into the basis for selecting the England cricket team.

I was privileged to be present for the annual report of the Sports Council this week and to hear its excellent chairman, Sir Peter Yarranton, and the director general, David Pickup, analyse what has been happening in the past few months and, more important, what will happen in the future.

I am glad that the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde mentioned fitness. He gave some sorry figures, which one suspects might be getting worse. It occurred to me that perhaps the Department of Health should make more of a contribution to the funding of sport because physical fitness is so important to all of us. The Sports Council's figures are pretty horrifying, but it now seems to be taking on board its role in promoting the health and fitness of the nation.

At the Sports Council's meeting, the chairman rightly highlighted the basis of funding. Inevitably, this is a matter of some controversy, particularly at a time when the Government are trying to find savings. It was inevitable that the Opposition spokesman should plead for increased funds for sport, as does the Sports Council. I must tell them, however, that, at a time when Government expenditure is under severe restraint and every form of it is being considered closely—obviously, we do not know the result of the Chancellor's prognostications yet—sport will, regrettably, have to take its share of the burden.

What bothers me about the Sports Council's attitude is the continual cry for more money without addressing the real problem of how it is spent. Only recently, the Central Council for Physical Recreation expressed some reservations about the new format, which most of us welcome, and about the amount of money that is spent on forms of administration. We must carefully consider where expenditure is made, but what a welcome breath of fresh air it would be if a sports organisation said that it had saved money or had increased facilities with what money it had.

I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to pass a message to the Chancellor of the Exchequer that, if he feels it necessary slightly to reduce the amount that is being made available to sport, he will receive the support of Conservative Members, and the sports organisations concerned will have to trim their needs accordingly.

Much of the Sports Council's work, inevitably, is with local authorities. I acknowledge the close afffinity between the two and the reliance of the Sports Council on how local authorities spend taxpayer's money. No one underestimates the severe restraints on local authorities, for many and varied reasons, but there are additional means of attracting money into sport, such as through the private sector. Sadly, one of the savings that have already been made is the withdrawal of the Sports Match pound for pound basis, whereby businesses were invited to fund sporting activities and the Government put up £10 million.

Mr. Kay: Let me reassure my hon. Friend that there is no question of the Government's withdrawing the scheme. We simply said that it would have been irresponsible to go ahead with such an expensive scheme if we could not be sure that funds would be available in years two and three; the funds for year one were available. We said that we would delay the scheme until we could be sure that funds would be available. I hope to be able to make a further announcement, perhaps as soon as next week.

Mr. Carlisle: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's clarification of the position, because it was worrying many people. The thrust of my argument is that we are happy to expect trimmed Government expenditure, but schemes such as this, which offer the private sector incentives to participate, should be the last to be trimmed. The partnership between the private sector, the public sector, local authorities and the Government acting on behalf of the taxpayer has ensured that much-needed funds are attracted to sport.

The other source of cash that inevitably is contentious and has been the subject of some discussion among Conservative Members, but which the hon. Member Stalybridge and Hyde omitted to mention, is tobacco advertising and tobacco sponsorship of sport. I was pleased to learn only this week that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has rejected calls to extend the ban on tobacco advertising. This is not the place to go into the morals of tobacco money and sport, but the money that is allocated is well used. Some of the tobacco companies have been castigated for their activities when in fact they have put much-needed funds into areas where they are required.

The other part of the Sports Council's annual report was on the conduct of sport. Most hon. Members would say that the previous Minister's near-passion for fairness in sport and opposition to the use of drugs are to be supported.

It is pleasing that all hon. Members seem to agree on the future of the Sports Council and the sports commission. We look forward to more activity, and perhaps a closer account of how money is spent, and wish the new chairman, Sir Peter Yarranton, well.

The basis of a national lottery has been mentioned. I was delighted to hear from my hon. Friend the Minister —I hope that it was not a slip of the tongue—that we should hear within days about the Bill for a national lottery. The White Paper has received much attention and comment from various quarters. Inevitably, sport will support the provision of a sum, which admittedly will have to be shared with other organisations, of between £500 million and £1·3 billion—a very considerable sum of money. I hope that that will replace the taxpayers' contribution and will attract more money into sport rather than its having to rely on handouts.

One can understand the concern that has been expressed, particularly by the pools companies and others, about the effect of the national lottery on employment and on encouraging "soft" gambling. I suggest to the Minister that some compromise should be reached between the organisers of the national lottery and members of the Pools Promoters Association, perhaps by using them as agents. The pools system is part of our national heritage and is quite unique. It contributes considerable sums to sport through the Football Trust and the Sports and Arts Foundation. We must be careful to ensure that, if expertise is available, it is used. I hope that account is taken of that in the legislation.

The big question for sport is how that money will be allocated and how much of a slice of the cake it can expect. My hon. Friend the Minister and the Secretary of State will find themselves in a very difficult position. We are all aware of my hon. Friend's deep love of the arts, representing as he does the city of Salisbury, and his feelings will be torn about the basis of allocation.

The question that we are all asking—it may be answered in the next few days—is whether that allocation will be set out in black and white in the Bill, or will be left to be decided by the body that will run the national lottery. Much of what has been said so far today has proved that sport has a good case for having a large slice of that cake. The arts are important to us, but they have always received a favoured response from Governments of both political colours. If this money is available, sport must have more than its fair share.

Furthermore, that allocation should be set out in black and white in legislation, while perhaps allowing a certain flexibility as time goes on, so that sport knows where it is and can plan accordingly. If the sums come out in the way forecast, and if we can get the pools people with us, that will be of enormous benefit to sport and to sportsmen and sportswomen.

As has been said, one of the sports that have benefited enormously from the pools is football. I pay tribute to the time that the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde spent as chairman of the all-party football group. He was diligent and active and, although we crossed swords on one or two occasions, his chairmanship was a happy period and one which was good for football. Undoubtedly, the Taylor report will loom large above us for many years to come, given the stringent requirements—somewhat muted now by my hon. Friend the Minister—that it imposed on football clubs. Substantial sums will be required, so the football authorities must get their house in order.

The formation of the premier league has been somewhat of a disappointment. I represent in my constituency a club that, regrettably, has now fallen on hard times—it has fallen out of the premier league and now looks like falling out of the first division as well. I make a plea for the small clubs that are not benefiting from what must be described as the money-grubbing members of the premier league.

I am not at all surprised to see that attendance at premier league games has been disappointing. The level at which admission charges has been set makes it easy to understand why people have been staying away. Despite the slice of the television cake that the league has seized and the enormous amount of sponsorship money offered to it—so much that it turned down a considerable sum from other companies—the clubs in it have not acquitted themselves as we would expect.

I hope that, when things settle down and Sir John Quinton takes a closer interest in the running of the league, there will be benefits from it for all football, and not just for the clubs at the top. The House frowns on elitism in sport. We like it when it brings us national recognition and achievement, but if it is to the disadvantage of those at the grass roots and those who are in desperate need of assistance further down the line, something has gone seriously wrong. The imbalance between the Arsenals, the Liverpools and the Manchester Uniteds of this world and the Stalybridge and Hydes——

Mr. Nigel Evans (Ribble Valley): What about Blackburn?

Mr. Carlisle: Well, Blackburn is lucky enough to have a fairy godmother, which not many clubs have.

Clubs further down the line will suffer as a result of the premier league. The football authorities should look at rugby, in which we have had considerable success while it remains an amateur game. There has been success in financial terms, with the marvellous world cup, which raised an enormous amount of money.

The money filters down to junior clubs, which can take loans from the rugby union organisation and others at competitive rates. Furthermore, clubs are self-financing, because players pay match fees and expect to buy their own kit rather than having it provided. The spirit of rugby is self-help, and it would benefit football if it looked on the sport in that way.

One of the greatest sporting events that the country has seen for many years—the return of the springbok rugby side—will take place in the next couple of weeks. I take some pleasure in what the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde said about this event. It is a delight that our sporting relations with South Africa have resumed after the many years during which the politicans kept us out, rather than the sportsmen and sportswomen.

There is no doubt that the frustration and anger that were felt by people on both sides were rightly directed at the politicians, who unashamedly used sport for their own ends. That is why, on a busy day, what gave me the greatest pleasure was to see from today's Order Paper that the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) has withdrawn his motion calling for demonstrations against the tour and objecting to the visit of the Springbok rugby team.

Mr. Bryan Davies (Oldham, Central and Royton): Before the hon. Gentleman continues to propagate the myth that it was politicians interfering with sport, will he recall that the origin of the ban on sporting links with South Africa was the incident when the South Africans set out to pick the English cricket test team by trying to bar a coloured player?

Mr. Carlisle: I agree with the hon. Gentleman, and I have some sympathy with the view of the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde, that it was the sports boycott which moved South Africa down the anti-apartheid line—a move which most Conservative Members, and certainly I, have followed. The tragedy was that the sports organisations in South Africa made changes, but they were not recognised. Labour Members may remember the famous five Howell requirements that South Africa had to meet if sporting links were to be resumed. In fairness to Lord Howell, I think that he set them out as a sportsman rather than a politician. They were all achieved, but that was not recognised because, by that time, the politicians had taken over.

I must say, so as to refute the criticisms of the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde and others about the South African rugby football union, that they fail to recognise that, for many years, pre-President de Klerk and during the worst years of apartheid in South Africa, it was promoting, through its development programme, clinics in townships. I was privileged to attend several of them. The board was putting an enormous amount of work into fostering the talent of youngsters. Of course, there will always be those within that organisation who are unhappy with changed circumstances, but the broad thrust of South African sport is now based on equal opportunities for all, and that is to be welcomed.

What is sad about the criticisms of the past few days is that the Rugby Football Union has done all it can to accede to the requests by the African National Congress and others—for example, not playing the national anthem and not flying the national flag. Despite that, a hard core will be demonstrating against the springboks' visit. That is to be regretted, but I am pleased that reason seems to have prevailed and that the games will go ahead and will be played on the fairest and most equitable of plains.

I agree with both Front-Bench speakers that it is good to have a debate on sport in Government time on the Floor of the House. I wish my hon. Friend the Minister the best of fortune in his new task. He will have some difficulties, and he is a brave man to take it on alone. If I were looking for a little more Government expenditure, it would be to promote one among our ranks to assist him in what will be a difficult job. We have great confidence that the Government are addressing the many and varied problems that face us, and that that will be to the benefit of sportsmen and sportswomen.

Mr. Bryan Davies (Oldham, Central and Royton): I congratulate the Government—an experience which I will not repeat too often—on the fact that they have created a Department that gives sport a place at the Cabinet table. All who are in the Chamber recognise the importance of that initiative—an initiative which, had we been in the position of forming a Government, we would also have taken. It gives encouragement to us all. It gives an opportunity for the country to get a real grip on sports representation. We have been bedevilled by the multiplicity of sporting associations. When dealing with international bodies, that has often led to great difficulties.

We should recognise the importance of sport in a society that will increase its leisure opportunities. Regrettably, too much of that leisure for many is enforced at present by the Government's policies of encouraging and developing high unemployment. However, clearly leisure plays an increasingly important part in people's lives as the working week is reduced.

I represent a constituency whose first Member of Parliament was John Fielden. He battled in the 1840s for the reduction of working hours to 10 hours a day for a six-day week. One recognises the difference from our society today. Increasingly, people will seek to exploit their leisure opportunities more fully.

Sport has a crucial part to play in that respect and it is important that we recognise the role that sport plays in the development of the individual personality and in the development of self-confidence. In team sports, there is the development of relationships with other people towards a common endeavour. Unity of purpose and a sense of teamwork are some of the most valued aspects of any social relationships.

I know that I sound like Thomas Arnold and the 19th century public school image of sport. However, the value is more lasting than that. Translating it into the late 20th century is straightforward enough. Sport offers an essential democracy and equality of opportunity in terms of sporting achievement, if we get the preconditions right.

It is clear from our present sporting prowess that sport offers a significant opportunity for children from deprived backgrounds, from working-class backgrounds and from ethnic minority backgrounds to make their mark dramatically in our society. I cannot think of a single premier league football team that does not have a black player starring in it. Several rely greatly on the contribution of youngsters from such backgrounds. We have already heard tributes to the achievements of women in athletics in the Olympic games and elsewhere. Many have come from ethnic minorities.

I will deal next with the relationship between education and sport. I hope that the Minister will bear it in mind that I shall address my remarks to him because I recognise that there is an inevitable overlap between his Department and the Department for Education. It is important that we take the opportunity to sharpen the bargaining position of the Minister and his Department in relation to education.

Opposition Members emphasise our great anxieties about some aspects of the decline in sporting opportunities. This morning, we have had too rosy a picture and it has been said that all is well in sport. Many of us contend that there is much that leaves great cause for anxiety. We should tackle the problem at grass roots in terms of educational and sporting opportunity among the young.

My more general point is that there is no cause for complacency in society about the level of participation in sport. It may be high, but it is still far too low. Some 50 per cent. of adults engage in no sporting recreational activity. As the Minister freely confessed, some aspects of the nation's health would benefit greatly from increased participation in sport.

Dr. Spink: The hon. Gentleman talked about education and sport. Does he welcome the fact that the national curriculum now makes physical training a compulsory subject from the ages of five to 16? Is he not ashamed of the fact that his party was against the national curriculum only a couple of years ago?

Mr. Davies: The hon. Gentleman has attempted to pre-empt what I was going to say about aspects of the national curriculum, so I will cover his points in a moment. I welcome the fact that physical education is a compulsory part of the national curriculum for children from the ages of five to 16.

There is no cause for complacency in terms of the nation's achievements in sport. I have referred to the question of the nation's health. The nation's achievements in sport leave a great deal to be desired. It will not do for our country to pretend that there is a trickle-down effect in national sporting associations which guarantees the development of talent and achievement for the future.

The most obvious example is the fact that this country has staged for more than 100 years the most prestigious tennis tournament in the world. Wimbledon produces vast revenues, yet we are no nearer today than we were 30 years ago to any achievement of tennis excellence. The facilities available here are restricted overwhelmingly to private clubs. Public provision is still at a pathetically low level. In France, even the most modest village has several tennis courts of a high standard. We should recognise that the French drive 20 years ago to develop interest in tennis leaves our efforts pale by comparison.

There are no major team games in which we can be satisfied with our overall performance. There are widespread anxieties about the technical level of excellence of the England football team which is an important flag-bearer for England. There are similar anxieties about the Scottish side. It is not the case that teams representing Britain sweep all before them—far from it. When did we last win the soccer world cup? It was 26 years ago in 1966. We just struggled into the last four in more recent times. Our test cricket performances have fallen considerably below standard. Although England has reigned supreme for a short time in the rugby home championship, the moment we clash with teams from the southern hemisphere we are obliged to give way.

We should recognise that there are anxieties about our major team games. The Minister and my hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) mentioned those who were successful in the Olympic games—and I congratulate them—but we cannot pretend that the nation regards the overall achievements of the British Olympic team as being outstanding. That has been the case for a number of recent Olympic games.

We need to think seriously about the roots of achievement and the Government must answer our case. There is a pronounced decline in school sport. There is provision within the national curriculum for physical education, but certain aspects of team games in sport have suffered enormously in recent years. They have suffered from the forced sell-off, because of constraints on expenditure and resources, of school playing fields which has greatly reduced the facilities of many of our local authority schools. Such a reduction in facilities would never be countenanced in the more elite parts of the private education sector. I have not heard of sales of the playing fields of Eton, for instance.

The Government also stand charged with having done a great deal of damage to sport in schools during the long wrangles of the 1980s over teachers' contracts and pay. That was a typical example of the Government's, knowing the price of everything and the value of nothing. They ended up with a narrow definition of teachers' responsibilities, thereby throwing away vast amounts of good will and voluntary effort which had sustained school sport for many years. The reduction in school sports can be directly attributed to the reduction in that contribution.

We cannot expect private institutions or clubs to take up the slack. They often find themselves having to enforce subscriptions which in turn deter less well-off youngsters. So what is lost at school is not made up for by private clubs.

I apologise if the Minister thinks that I am talking too much about education, but I must add that it is time that the nation thought seriously about the role of sport in higher education. I know that it has always been part of our elitist tradition—we did not mind Oxford and Cambridge showing a little indulgence from time to time when it came to entry qualifications so that their rugger sides and rowing crews would be of the requisite standard. But pressure from the meritocratic growth of society has lowered performance standards in these areas. Oxbridge no longer competes adequately with rugby clubs or county cricket sides. In any case, it was always a hopelessly restrictive and elitist model, based on a misconception of higher education.

What we ought to be thinking about is whether sporting achievement and performance can be truly realised in higher education. Why cannot there be many more courses that include sporting excellence and an understanding of sport? We of course should not go overboard like the American college system which includes quasi-professional sides playing football, but we certainly should ensure that youngsters with great potential for achieving sporting excellence can enter universities and higher education institutions to pursue courses that include opportunities for sport, while sustaining an educational component in their work. The tragedy for so many of our youngsters is that they face a brutal choice between pursuing sporting excellence, and following an academic career which will end their chance of developing sporting skills. We owe it to talented youngsters and to ourselves to nurture sporting excellence by ensuring that higher education institutions take responsibility for it.

My final response, therefore, to the hon. Member for Castle Point (Dr. Spink) is that it is not enough to provide physical education for children between the ages of five and 16. Beyond that age, schools and other academic institutions should develop sporting excellence. The old 19th century myth persists: there are those who achieve through the intellect and there are those who achieve through physical prowess—as if the two did not complement each other. The person who is to be commended is the one who can demonstrate a capacity in both areas.

I see our sporting culture being weakened because of changes in television. I address these remarks directly to the Minister. There are great dangers in leaving televised sport to the market. Already this year, BSkyB and the BBC in collaboration have taken off our television screens —apart from "Match of the Day" highlights—most of our football matches. The televising of major premier league games has thus been restricted to a narrower audience. We should not accept the idea that crucial parts of the nation's sporting culture should be restricted to broadcasting on BSkyB which, by definition, will transmit only to a minority for the foreseeable future.

I know that the Minister will say that crucial events have been guaranteed for more universal appreciation, but I am worried about the list of those events. I should like the Government to show that they share my anxieties in the wake of recent developments in the broadcasting of football.

First, the list of sporting events protected from pay television is too short. We need to develop a wider appreciation of a range of sports. Appreciation of the open golf championships is growing apace, but they can be sold off to restrictive television. The sport is likely to go for the highest bidder, even though the Minister has said that golf is one of the fastest growing participatory sports.

I am even more worried about the fact that the cricket world cup last winter was shown only on BSkyB. Even the Prime Minister winced at that. Cricket lovers across the nation were shocked that neither the BBC nor independent television had access to those broadcasts.

Among the sporting world and the public at large who enjoy watching televised sport there is a widespread misconception: the restrictions control not satellite broadcasting but pay television only. It is, however, open to BSkyB, with the vast resources of the multinational media network that Rupert Murdoch controls, to operate a massive loss-leading exercise of grabbing major sporting events for restricted television. When the agreements covering some of these events run out for the BBC and ITV, and BSkyB successfully outbids our national television networks to show the cup final, the world cup final or the test matches, I warn the Minister that the nation will rise up in arms against such a misconceived development in television. The Government's ideological preconceptions are related to the law of the market. However, I warn them that they must not allow the law of market television to restrict access to our major sporting events.

I welcome the development of the national lottery in terms of the increased resources that will be made available. However, I share the anxieties that have been expressed about the impact on the football pools and the resources made available from the pools to the Football Trust and to the Foundation for Sport and the Arts. Unless there is some concession to the football pools in terms of a continuation of the betting duty exemption, and unless the pools can promote their services on the same basis as the national lottery, resources for football and the enormous costs of the implementation of the Taylor report will run into difficulties.

We are all united in our determination to secure the Olympic games for Manchester. I make no bones about the fact that I have an immediate constituency interest because Oldham will benefit as a listed site when the bid is successful. In that drive to success, I assure the Minister that the north-west will speak with one voice with the rest of the nation to ensure that the Olympic games come to Manchester. I did not today expect to hear praise from the Government for the quality of Manchester's weather. If the Government can take such a favourable view of the weather in the north-west, they can surely guarantee full support for the Olympic games bid.

Dr. Robert Spink (Castle Point): It is a great privilege for me to take part in this debate, in which I want to refer to education and health. I congratulate the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry). I was delighted to hear that he was a boxer. Hon. Members can see that I was a boxer. Judging from the shape of the nose of the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde, clearly he was a better boxer than I was.

The link between education and sport is fundamental to a successful policy for sport, to the success of individuals in sport and to the success of our nation in all sporting activities. Children who are encouraged to take part in sport early in their lives generally tend to take part in sport later on in their lives, and that can only be a good thing. I therefore welcome the fact that the Department of National Heritage is working closely with the Department for Education in promoting sport in schools of all kinds.

As a member of the Education Select Committee, I am delighted that the national curriculum includes physical education, which will be compulsory for every schoolgirl and schoolboy from four to 16. That is as it should be, because PE develops a healthy body and a healthy mind. It also promotes a healthy awareness and understanding of the place of competition in sport and in life. Many sports help to develop a keen understanding of teamwork.

My constituency is on the Thames, and it includes Canvey island. I therefore welcome the fact that the Government have recommended that all pupils should be taught to swim by the age of 11. That will be a formal requirement from the autumn of 1994. My only criticism is to ask why that was not done years ago. The ability to swim will save the lives of children every week.

I also pay tribute to the Sports Council, which will spend £2·2 million in 1992-93 on developing sport for young people. That is a great initiative. However, I have another slight criticism. That level of spending is a little low in comparison with the massive sum spent on tobacco advertising. I welcome the work of the Sports Council and I congratulate it. I want to find ways to enable the council to do much more.

Hon. Members will forgive me if I refer a little to my constituency and mention the excellent sporting achievements of many disabled people in Castle Point. I have been deeply impressed by their efforts and achievements in sport. I congratulate the often unsung heroes of the Castle Point sports club for the disabled. What I enjoy most is the happiness, joy and fulfilment that sporting activity can bring to people of all levels of ability.

I also pay tribute to the champion coaching scheme, which promotes sporting opportunities after school hours. The scheme has enabled about 6,000 children and youths to enjoy the highest quality coaching. Its success will be consolidated by the allocation of an extra £1·3 million over the next two years. That is being made available by the excellent Foundation for Sport and the Arts to which the Minister referred.

Although recent developments in sport and education have been generally encouraging, there are some areas of concern, one of which was alluded to by the hon. Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Davies). He referred to extra-curricular sport, but his analysis was wrong. I welcome the great efforts of many teachers who, in after-school hours and on a purely voluntary basis, run extra-curricular sporting activities. However, I call for a return to the regimes that endured before the teachers' dispute in the mid-1980s, when even greater extra-curricular efforts were made by the teaching profession.

The present shortfall is the result of the actions of the teaching unions. It has nothing to do with the Government. However, let me unreservedly congratulate teachers on their dedication, caring attitude and professionalism which they show to our children. They often work well beyond the call of duty. Many teachers work longer hours than some hon. Members.

Sadly, the public perception is as misguided about the work load of teachers as it is about the work load of Members of Parliament. Will the Minister encourage the use of school facilities, including the facilities of grant-maintained schools, for the benefit of the whole community? I will press the Minister to take note of that point when the Education Bill is presented to the House.

I want now to refer to sport and health and the position of tobacco advertising and sponsorship—which, in reality, are the same thing. I take issue with my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle). The Department of Health produced a brief in June on the European Community directive on tobacco advertising, which concluded that if the directive were implemented, it would result in the prohibition of sponsorship of sport of all kinds. That would be no bad thing—indeed, it should have been done years ago. No cigarette advertisements have been allowed on television in this country since 1965, yet Sir Donald Maitland, chairman of the Health Education Authority, tells us that 64 per cent. of children between the ages of nine and 14 honestly believe that they see tobacco advertising on television. How can that be? Sir Donald Maitland said:

> "What they are seeing are sporting events sponsored by tobacco companies: cricket, snooker, tennis, rugby, motor racing, etc.
> There is currently an average of one hour's television coverage every day of sporting activity associated with the major tobacco brands. All of this coverage is on BBC Television."

Hon. Members will know that the ITV companies decided formally not to televise tobacco-sponsored sporting events. It is a totally accepted fact that tobacco advertising increases consumption.

Mr. Nigel Evans: Hon. Members will have read the Smee report this week. It states that, whereas people may be aware through sport that Marlboro, for instance, might be associated with motor racing, that will not encourage people to smoke. More to the contrary is the fact that, with advertising for tobacco products at sporting events, we see warnings that smoking kills. That is far more persuasive than any other advertisement.

Dr. Spink: I am indebted to my hon. Friend for that intervention, but he is a little naive. If he believes that all that money is spent by those companies in a philanthropic way rather than in order to promote the consumption of their products, he is not the man I think he is.

We must act now to remove the farcical link between sport, which is good and healthy, and cigarettes, which are unhealthy and filthy. If hon. Members would like to take issue with me on that matter, I suggest that they nip down to their local hospital, pop into the lung and heart wards, and talk to the families of the people on the machines there.

Of course, the Government's attitude is that voluntary agreements are the best way to control tobacco advertising and that the EC directive need not be ratified in order to complete the single internal market. I do not agree with that at all. It is irrational and irresponsible. I urge action to remove cigarette advertising in sport, including sport sponsorship.

I realise that there are massive vested interests, and that my move will be strongly resisted. I realise also that the Exchequer receives massive sums from cigarette taxation. However, the money saved from reduced absenteeism and the consequential increase in production across the nation, and the money saved from reduced health care costs would more than compensate the Exchequer for that loss. That is to say nothing of the human costs that tobacco inflicts on smokers, their families and their friends.

The link between smoking and sport is deeply paradoxical. Sport offers the wonderful gift of health. Smoking takes that gift away. I now call on Her Majesty's Government to remove the link between sport and smoking.

[Dr. Spink]

I recognise also the excellent work of Mr. and Mrs. Blissett and others from Canvey island, who are doing so much to help health and sport on Canvey island in my constituency. They are doing so by resisting the proposed foreign coal transhipment terminal for Canvey island, a matter on which I shall soon present a petition to the House. That terminal would do to people's lungs what smoking does: coal dust would put their lungs at risk and inhibit their sporting opportunities.

I question the moribund Labour policy on sport, which is to meddle and put shackles on all forms of sport. Labour Members would throttle sport by the dead hand of bureaucratic control—that is, if it is possible to throttle something with a dead hand. Of all the daft Labour policies, few are dafter than that of discouraging competition in sport in schools. That did for sport in some schools what Labour education authorities did for reading standards and religious education in those schools.

I want to end on a positive and optimistic note. I welcome the Government's sporting policy which, in contrast to Labour's, is to promote wider participation and higher standards in sport across all sports, across the whole nation, across the whole of people's ability ranges and across all age groups. That is to be welcomed. I want to celebrate the excellence at all levels which is achieved by all those involved in sport—none more so than the players of Leeds United.

12.5 pm

Mr. Menzies Campbell (Fife, North-East): I begin by apologising to the House if I leave soon after the conclusion of my speech. I have a long-standing engagement in Inverness later today and, if the weather forecast is to be believed, I may have to resort to skiing to reach it. I have advised the Minister and the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry), and they have been characteristically understanding of my position.

As the spokesman for my party, I welcome the Minister and the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde. Their exchanges this morning were rather quieter than those that we have become used to in sports debates in recent years, but I doubt whether they will be anything other than constructive.

Mr. Pendry: I do not want to lull the hon. and learned Gentleman into a false stance, because I have said that the Minister is very much on trial. He is in his honeymoon period, so he deserves a little quiet at this stage in his parliamentary career as the Minister with responsibility for sport.

Mr. Campbell: The hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde brings to his new responsibility a great depth of knowledge of sport, but I do not think that he brings the unshakable conviction in his own infallibility which his predecessor exhibited from time to time.

I hope that the formation of the new Department will cause us to have more regular debates on sport. Today's debate has already eloquently demonstrated that, in future, we may need to be rather more specific about the topics that we discuss. If legislation is introduced to promote a national lottery, in respect of which my agnosticism remains unshaken, clearly that will be a focused debate.

For example, the sport and industry of horse racing is in crisis. It must surely be necessary at some very early stage for the House to have the opportunity to discuss the state of horse racing and to take account of the implications for the economy if it were to go further into decline.

I hope also that the Minister will be rather more prominent than his predecessor, who has been transferred to the Northern Ireland Office. I began to believe that, with the exception of test matches, the Minister's predecessor had taken an advanced course in potholing, so discreet was he in his appearances as Minister with responsibility for sport.

As the Minister said, this debate is timely after yet another Olympic games. I should like to say a word or two about the structure of sport, about international events and then a little more about drugs, which is a topic in which I have very considerable interest. Before I do so, I join hon. Members who have paid tribute to the quite extraordinary contribution of Sir Arthur Gold to sport in Britain over, I suspect, about 50 years.

I first met him when I was an international athlete in the United Kingdom athletics team and he was the team manager. I have known him as a distinguished sports administrator since then. His contribution extends to not only domestic but international sport. His reward with the accolade of knighthood brought a great deal of pleasure to his many friends and acquaintances. Sport in Britain will certainly be the poorer for his decision to retire from the important position he held.

It is perhaps a demonstration of how small and intimate is the sporting community in the United Kingdom, that Mr. Craig Reedie—who will replace Sir Arthur Gold—and I entered Glasgow university together in 1959. We read arts and then law together. Indeed, he still gives me certain financial advice. If his financial advice to the British Olympic Association was as good as his advice to me, the BOA was in good hands.

I am sorry that the hon. Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle) has left, because I wanted to take up with him the South African rugby tour. He displayed what I might describe not unfairly as a certain degree of insensitivity when he referred to the tour as the springbok tour. Precisely that description caused so much offence to people in the African National Congress. It conceives, not least as a result of the playing of national anthems, and the appearance that no visible change has taken place since the constitutional discussions commenced in South Africa, that the rugby authorities and the rugby community in South Africa are unwilling to recognise that substantial constitutional change is afoot.

The House should recognise the maturity and sound common sense of the ANC. It created the circumstances in which the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) was compelled to withdraw his early-day motion. The ANC has behaved with great responsibility in the matter. All it had to do was to endorse what was being said. We might well have seen scenes such as those that some of us remember from the previous South African rugby tour. I stand fairly and squarely behind the Gleneagles agreement, and have always done so. Whatever one feels about the argument, those scenes were an unfortunate feature of an international sporting event in this country.

I think that I heard the hon. Member for Luton, North —I shall examine the Official Report, with great care— acknowledge that the sport boycott had been effective in provoking constitutional change in South Africa.

Mr. Pendry: That is right.

Mr. Campbell: The hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde corroborates what I say. If we are right, Opposition Members appear to have made a convert. Conversion is always welcome, however late it comes. However, in the case of the hon. Member for Luton, North, it occasions some surprise among those of us who have heard him speak on the topic in debates of this nature over the years.

We have long argued—I think that I speak for other Opposition parties in that—that sport needs to be an accepted priority for the Government. Clearly, we must enthusiastically welcome the creation of the new Department, and I should like to set it a task. I suggest that the Minister's first task should be a comprehensive audit of sports facilities in conjunction with local authorities throughout Britain, so that we can discover what facilities —whether private or public—exist and satisfy ourselves that they are being used to maximum advantage.

Reference has already been made to school facilities. In 1965, I attended my first meeting of the United Kingdom Sports Council. I was appointed by Denis Howell, as he then was. I remember an extended debate about dual community use of existing school facilities. We spent a long time discussing the deeply significant principle of who would pay the janitor if the facilities were made available to the public. The tragedy is, I suspect, that people still argue about who will pay the janitor. Often, that argument is the last obstruction to proper use of school facilities. After all, such facilities are paid for with public funds and are designed for public use.

Mr. Nigel Evans: Does the hon. and learned Gentleman agree that it is criminal that, during the long summer breaks, tennis courts and sports facilities in schools, colleges and universities are locked up and young people —indeed, people of all ages—are denied access to them? It is hardly surprising that we do so badly in sporting championships such as Wimbledon when people are denied access to such facilities.

Mr. Campbell: The hon. Gentleman makes a penetrating point. How many times do we drive or walk past colleges, universities or other institutions of higher education and see remarkable facilities unused, when, out in the street, children try to play with a ball while they dodge the passing cars? The hon. Gentleman makes a profound point, and I hope that the Minister will do his best to ensure that action is taken on a view strongly held on both sides of the House.

The hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) raised an issue on behalf of the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation. He makes a strong point, not least because the communities served by the facilities are often geographically remote. The villages were built close to the coal. Sometimes, the facilities are the only recreational facilities in the community. If one started from scratch, it might be difficult, for many different financial reasons, to build equivalent facilities in those locations—indeed, one probably would not embark on building such facilities in those communities now.

If the facilities already exist, surely everthing should be done to preserve them. If local authorities cannot purchase them, is it not possible to consider some form of leasing or some imaginative use of public resources to ensure that the facilities continue to be available to the communities they serve?

I unequivocally welcome the creation of the United Kingdom sports commission. I hope that the Minister will not think me mischievous if I say that it makes more than a passing nod to federalism, a concept which does not always find favour among Conservative Members. Its success will depend on the extent to which its policies accurately reflect the needs of the United Kingdom as a whole.

I further argue that we should establish a United Kingdom institute of sport to complement the commission and create a coherent structure for the development of coaching, sports science and sports medicine. It could bring together the work of the Institute of Sports Medicine, the British Olympic Association, the National Coaching Foundation, the British Institute of Sport Coaches and the British Association of Sport Scientists.

As the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde said, we should never forget the importance of sport in the economy. It accounts for almost 400,000 jobs in the United Kingdom. It generates a £9 billion turnover annually. It also generates healthy revenue for the Government. Before I move on from a brief consideration of the financial significance of sport, I remind the Minister yet again that the case for charitable status for amateur sport remains wholly convincing. Those of us who believe that the Government should proceed in that way will continue to press the Minister and Treasury Ministers to bring about that modest relaxation. It would have an extraordinary galvanising effect on amateur sport throughout Britain.

I turn to international events. The hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde gave an example of the young man who won bronze medals in the archery competition but was denied public funds. That is monstrous. I do not know whether the Minister was embarrassed, but I felt embarrassed on behalf of the United Kingdom and the House of Commons. We are all quick to praise sportsmen, and by association to derive some of the glory which attaches to their achievements. The young man is a record breaker not only because he has won medals which Britain has not won for 84 years but because he is aged only 17 and therefore something of a prodigy. It is monstrous that he was denied access to public funds for the period during which he represented his country. I hope that the Minister will do something about it.

Mr. Key: Whatever the rights and wrongs of the issue, one can be legalistic and say that, by statute, one is bound to take a certain course of action, and such actions were duly taken. No errors or exceptions were made in that case. Nevertheless, I share the hon. and learned Gentleman's sense of embarassment about it. He will be interested to know that I am in correspondence with my colleague at the Department of Social Security, and I shall meet him soon to discuss ways in which such issues may be handled more sensitively.

Mr. Campbell: I am grateful to the Minister for that intervention. If that is to be his attitude when such issues arise, he will receive a warm welcome and considerable support from Opposition Members interested in such matters.

On the question of financial support for individuals, it is assumed that all international sportsmen are at least able to support themselves by practising their sports, if they are not rich. The truth is that the position varies from sport to sport, and there are great variations within some sports at international level. How can a man or woman give of his or her best at international level, if they are worried about their financial circumstances? How can a man or woman hope to compete at his or her best at international level, unless they can afford the time or the commitment which international sport now requires? There is an interesting illustration. A member of the rowing eight needs the same commitment as someone who competes in an individual event, such as the Olympic 100 metres. I know that the accessibility of financial support is very different for those two people, who give the same time, effort and commitment.

I do not suggest that there should be public financial support for sportsmen, but we must try to create an environment in which such support can be made available for promising sportsmen, who will be the medallists of the future, as well as for the best sportsmen.

On support for international events in the United Kingdom, the last time that we debated sport, the then Minister treated as risible my suggestion that the Government should give massive financial support to Manchester. If the Under-Secretary looks at the Official Report, he will be able to read the response. Yet, within weeks, and no doubt partly due to the influence of an imminent general election, the Prime Minister announced support to the tune of £55 million. I welcome that support —one could not do otherwise—not least because I know Mr. Bob Scott. The bid that he has mounted, and the care and skill which he has demonstrated in carrying it through, has been remarkable, and he deserves the congratulations of the House. However, we need unequivocal support from the Government.

I witnessed the unhappy events of the last Commonwealth games in Edinburgh at close quarters, and I was also aware of the difficulties caused as a result of Sheffield hosting the world student games. There is no doubt that our international reputation was not assisted by either of those events, and we have much resistance to overcome.

I draw the Under-Secretary's attention to the fact that one merely has to consider the resources being put into the Atlanta bid to realise what we are up against. We have no Coca-Cola company to stand four square behind the bid and to offer to meet every deficit however it may arise. Perforce, we shall have to look to the Government to lead support for the Manchester bid, which is clearly worthy of support, not merely for the geographical area in which it is located, but for the United Kingdom, as hon. Members have said.

Drug abuse in sport concerns me greatly. As some hon. Members may be aware, I have several times tried to persuade the Government to legislate to make anabolic steriods controlled drugs, under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, and to make it a criminal offence to possess them or to have the intent to supply them. I have succeeded in persuading Ministers to some extent, because Home Office Ministers have made at least two public announcements that such legislation was to be promoted. Along with Colin Moynihan, I received a favourable reference in a leader in The Times about the success of the campaign in which we had both been involved.

I am sad to say that there has been no legislation. There has been a promise to introduce legislation to protect those under 18, but that would be insufficient. I believe—I say this advisedly—that the abuse of anabolic steroids is widespread in United Kingdom sport, both in organised sport and in informal recreation based on gymasiums.

The Sports Council and governing bodies, with Government assistance and encouragement, have a programme of random testing, within and outside competitions, which I welcome. I also welcome the idea that the education of young sportsmen and women is an essential component. However, I understand that sportsmen and women are willing to take the risk which the use, or abuse, of anabolic steroids necessarily involves.

Mr. Key: That is certainly a live issue, and the Home Secretary has lead responsibility for the legal control of drugs and has said that he is reviewing the position. My view is that anabolic steroids should become controlled substances. The evidence of the extent of their misuse and their harmful medical effects is sufficient to warrant their control under the Misuse of Drugs Act.

Mr. Campbell: Yet again, the Minister earns our support and thanks for his sensible and speedy acknowledgement of a matter which has occupied the minds of some Opposition Members for some time. I hope that he will not demur if I develop the reasons why our views are correct.

It is said that anabolic steriods are being supplied in virtually every gymnasium in the country, and because such recreation is informal there is no question of those people who have access to and take such drugs being tested. The hon. Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves), who is unhappily unable to be here because of a constituency engagement, spoke to me in the Lobby last night. He has made a study of the subject and has acquired considerable information, which I am sure he will be happy to make available to the Under-Secretary if he has not already done so.

How can one tell that someone is abusing anabolic steroids? There are a number of tell-tale signs: first, a sudden and unexplained improvement in performance; secondly, a dramatic increase in muscle bulk; and thirdly, sudden unexplained bouts of aggression. Why do I believe that those drugs should be controlled under the 1971 Act? First, they are known to have the potential to damage health; they are known to carry with them the risk of cancer, especially of the liver. They are known to affect the sexual characteristics of both men and women and to give rise to blood clotting.

So far, we have no experience of the long-term effects of the abuse of anabolic steroids, but there is evidence of at least one death caused by steroid abuse, that of Tom Hawk, a body-builder, who, upon post-mortem examination, having died suddenly and without explanation, was found to have a grossly enlarged heart which the cardiologist responsible for the examination considered could be attributed to abuse of anabolic steroids.

There is also increasing evidence of psychological effects, of sudden bouts of aggression, and there is evidence that the drugs may be the cause of personality change. Dr. Priscilla Choy and her colleagues at the department of psychology in the university of London have carried out some of the most interesting and innovative work in that field.

These drugs are dangerous, but there is a risk that naive or ambitious sports men or women will believe that taking them is the only way to win. When the Olympic gold medal in the 100 metres is won by a cheat, drug abuse goes right to the heart of sport. I am afraid that there is hardly a sport in the United Kingdom in which power is the predominant factor that does not supply some evidence or in which there is not at least some suspicion of steroid abuse. I have believed for some time that legislation is necessary, and I welcome the Minister's intervention, making clear his personal position. Subordinate legislation should be enough and it is high time that such legislation was introduced. I look forward to the Government doing so.

12.30 pm

Mr. Anthony Coombs (Wyre Forest): I take pleasure in participating in the debate and welcome the Government's action, and especially that of the Prime Minister, in setting up the Department of National Heritage which, for the first time, gives sport a place at the Cabinet table. I pay tribute to the former Secretary of State for National Heritage, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor). I was proud to be his Parliamentary Private Secretary for three years. He showed great dynamism in setting up the Department and, despite the qualities of the present Secretary of State, he is greatly missed by sporting organisations.

The inclusion of sport in the Department of National Heritage recognises its importance, because it is not a pigeon hole of our national life but integral to our economy and culture. We have heard that sport provides 476,000 jobs and about £10 billion worth of gross national product. It has an important role to play in the nation's health, as set out in the Department of Health document. A recent Mori poll found that 83 per cent. of people felt that sport was important for health. As hon. Members have said, sport is important in promoting a sense of social stability, cohesion and character development. The Mori poll also found that eight out of 10 people thought that sport was increasingly important in that regard.

It is also right that the Department of National Heritage should be responsible for tourism, because it has been calculated that 15 per cent. of tourists come here specifically to pursue sporting opportunities. Over the past 20 years the improvement in sports facilities and in participation has been impressive. The general household survey shows that in the past five years alone 29 million people—some 2 million more than before—take part in some form of sport once a month. That is about two thirds of the population, and the increase applies across the social scale and to the ethnic minorities.

Sporting facilities are probably at their best ever level. The west midlands has 158 sports halls, and in the past two years two sports halls have been built in my constituency, one in Kidderminster and the other in Bewdley. We have 412 athletic tracks and 116 swimming pools, which is a record. More significantly, over the past 10 years the number of artificial grass surfaces, which have led to a massive increase in the interest in sports such as hockey, has risen from 30 to 282. It is no coincidence that one third of the current capital budget for the West Midlands council for sport and recreation is committed to the provision of articial grass surfaces. That improvement is a good example of genuine co-operation between county and district councils, the Government, the Sports Council, voluntary bodies and the private sector. It is interesting to see that over the past 10 years the amount of private sponsorship money has risen from £129 million to £230 million a year.

In all, in terms of participation and facilities, the sporting sector is burgeoning, vibrant and improving. Equally, given the fact that the sporting sector has been characterised by a multiplicity of initiatives, one of its weaknesses is that it has no strategic body overviewing sports strategy throughout the United Kingdom. No fewer than 400 governing bodies are associated with the Central Council of Physical Recreation. The Sports Council, the UK sports commission to be set up shortly, the British Olympic Association, the Foundation for Sport and the Arts and a myriad county and district councils are all involved in the provision of sport.

It is interesting to see that the Sports Council shows that, although there are 150,000 sports clubs in the United Kingdom—about the same number as in France—the average number of members of those sports clubs is only 43 against double that in France and about seven times as many in Germany. That multiplicity of small clubs may lead to a weakness in co-ordinating sport strategy in the future.

I hope that the United Kingdom sports commission will confine itself to strategy, to facilitating development, rather than trying to produce it itself. I was slightly concerned to hear the Minister say that the split of funding between the United Kingdom sports commission and the English sports council was likely to be about £18 million for the United Kingdom sports commission and £22 million for the English sports council. I was under the impression that the sports commission would be a co-ordinating body rather than one that provided facilities. The £18 million must be looked at and more funds given to the English sports council.

A diversity of provision can be a strength and I was delighted to see recently, for example, that the Birmingham city council, the Sports Council, the National Coaching Foundation and governing bodies of sport are all involved in producing the West Midlands regional performance centre. In my constituency, the county and district councils, together with the Foundation for Sport and the Arts and the West Midlands council for sport and recreation, hope to build a sporting centre of regional significance. In Birmingham, we have recently seen initiatives, such as "Fit for the Job", which encompass initiatives by the Confederation of British Industry, Birmingham city council and the Sports Council.

Most important in terms of co-ordinating sports activities is dual use. Certain authorities are good at ensuring that leisure facilities are put in schools, as my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) mentioned earlier. In other authorities, dual use has not got off the ground and, as a result, there is an enormous waste of facilities. I urge the Government, through the Department of National Heritage and the Department for Education, to ensure that every local education authority follows the example of Birmingham city council, which I have criticised in many other respects. It has been in the forefront of providing dual use facilities. Recently, I visited the Cocksmoor Woods centre in Birmingham, which is probably a paradigm of its kind.

If grant-maintained status is to take hold—I am sure that it will—education access boards must take a more constructive view of the ownership of assets that would otherwise be transferred from local authorities to individual grant-maintained schools. The Opposition have a point when they say that we cannot expect a local education authority to invest large amounts of capital in dual use facilities in a school, only to see them shuffled off into a grant-maintained school without opportunities for access by the community.

There are three sectors in which co-operation between the myriad sporting organisations can be improved: finances and resources, marketing, and general attitudes towards sport.

My hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle) was correct to say that, whether we like it or not, the finances of both central Government and local government will be tighter than ever over the next few years. That is already evident in local authority expenditure on revenue account, which has dropped from £1·5 billion in 1985 to £1·3 billion in 1990 at constant prices. The same applies to capital expenditure which has dropped, albeit from a high level.

Although large numbers of new facilities were established in the 1970s and 1980s, many of them are now coming up for major repairs, maintenance and refurbishment. The Sports Council estimated that in 1988 the ratio of expenditure on new projects to that on repairs was likely to be 15:1; by this year the likely ratio will be 1·8:1, and no less than £1·3 billion will be needed over the next five years for spending on the refurbishment of swimming pools.

The only way to tackle such problems, given the stringencies on public sector financing, is by greater involvement by the private sector, not only in the provision of new facilities, but in refurbishing existing ones. I was pleased to hear my hon. Friend the Minister announce encouraging news about "Sports Match". It is important for local authorities to be allowed to use—albeit on a controlled basis—a greater proportion of their capital receipts for refurbishment, particularly in relation to investment by the private sector.

We must reconsider the tax treatment of sporting organisations such as the Rugby Football Union, Wimbledon and the British Olympic Association—which are effectively non-profit making organisations—given that the Government receive £3·3 billion a year from sport. There is also a case for a sports enterprise allowance in some parts of the country to be given to private companies that were prepared totally to refurbish sports facilities that would otherwise not attract private capital. That policy could apply in the same way as it does in our industrial strategy.

The national lottery will be important in future, and I have some sympathy with the argument of the Foundation for Sport and the Arts and other organisations that the lottery and existing pools organisations should compete on a level playing field. However, we cannot have a successful and vibrant national lottery if it is continually shackled by taxation and artificially close competition from existing organisations. If the lottery is to be successful, we must give it 100 per cent. support as it is a new concept in this country. It will be of tremendous benefit to the country and we should bear that uppermost in our minds when discussing its future.

The second sector in which there needs to be close co-operation is marketing. One of the items that the Sports Council identified as needing improvement in the marketing of sport was ensuring that policy documents issued from the Sports Council at national level reached local level. The message of "What's your sport" and "Ever thought of sport?" has not trickled down to the myriad sports clubs and individuals as it should. There is a case for greater co-ordination of marketing at local level between tourism information centres, centres run by the Arts Council and those run by sporting organisations. It is important that the Foundation for Sport and the Arts should become involved in promoting international events with local sporting organisations. It is even more vital that, through sports scholarships, by emphasising the importance of the sports links scheme and as a result of improvements in the national curriculum, we encourage greater investment in sport in schools.

My final point relates to attitude. One of the most important speeches that I have heard recently was that delivered by Judy Simpson, who used to be an Olympic athlete, and who conveyed to people the message that sport was not only good for health but fun and an opportunity to meet people. Athletes can ram that message home. Judy Simpson emphasised the importance of health—indeed, she made the speech on a health day that I had organised.

I regard as appalling the findings of the Allied Dunbar national fitness survey, which was alluded to by the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) in a very good speech. That survey showed that 80 per cent. of the population believe themselves to be fit, yet a third of men and two thirds of women cannot continue to walk at a reasonable pace on a one-in-20 slope. That suggests that the nation is suffering from delusion on a massive scale. When we add to that the fact that 50 per cent. of women aged over 55 regard sustaining a reasonable walking pace—three miles per hour—for several minutes on level ground as severe exertion, it is hardly surprising that we have the worst cardiac problems in Europe.

The Health Education Authority and district and local authorities, including my own, are trying to get the health message across. It is crucial that the Department of Health should set specific targets for exercise among different age groups in the community to reduce significantly the incidence of cardiovascular problems. That activity must not be confined to older people but must encompass younger people, not least because an horrific survey by Exeter university showed that 50 per cent. of girls and a third of boys of school age did not do enough exercise to avoid cardiovascular problems later in life. The health message is crucial, and the Government as a whole—not just the Department of National Heritage but the Department for Education and the Department of Health—must take that on board.

Sport encourages the team spirit and, if properly supervised, encourages the spirit of fair play. Given my attitude to so many of the activities of Birmingham city council, it may seem incongruous that I should commend its department of recreation and community services on its community sports club project whose purpose is to try to encourage the development of team sport and team spirit over that of the casual sport encouraged by many of the policies to which we have referred this morning.

In sum, the problems of sport are problems of growth, success and co-ordination. If we involve the private sector more in funding in the ways that I have described, if we make the lottery a success, if we co-ordinate sports, arts and tourism marketing activities, and if we push the health message, we shall have a more sportsmanlike, healthy and active population, which can only be to our advantage.

I recognise the crucial role that the Department of National Heritage has to play in all this. That is why I was so delighted to be asked by the previous Secretary of State to serve as his PPS. I will remain closely interested in the Department's activities and I wish its Ministers the very best of success.

Mr. Jim Callaghan (Heywood and Middleton): Having served on several Committees with the Minister, and being aware of his dedication and hard work on those Committees, I congratulate him on his promotion. I am sure that, with the same dedication and hard work, he will be an excellent Minister for Sport.

I took particular interest in the beginning of the Minister's speech, when he said that, as a teacher, he had done much sterling work on behalf of children. He nudged my memory banks, because I, too, was a teacher many years ago. It was my privilege to run three schoolboy football teams voluntarily for many years. It was hard work, but it was extremely rewarding for a variety of reasons, one of which was when a youngster achieved international recognition.

My deep concern each year was the lack of good facilities. My boys played on a local authority park situated some miles away from the school. The changing facilities comprised little more than a cubicle in a converted whitewashed cowshed. There was no electricity —I used candles for light during the dark months—and no hot or cold water, but the cubicle did have a bin toilet and a wooden trough urinal. Hon. Members will recognise that facilities were excellent!

I felt ashamed, particularly in wintry weather, that I had to send the boys home caked in freezing mud. My frequent protestations to the local authority about the state of the facilities resulted in their being closed down. We were punished for protesting.

Years later, it was my privilege to visit South Korea with the Select Committee on Transport. I asked whether it was possible for members of the Committee to see the facilities provided by the South Korean Government for the Seoul Olympic games. The authorities quickly agreed to the request. On one of our days off, they took us to the Olympic campus. I was staggered and amazed at the superb facilities provided. I realised that I had been overtaken in my ambition to obtain light and water in my whitewashed cowshed for my schoolboy footballers. Obviously I had not aimed high enough. I asked what use was now being made of the magnificent stadiums. I was informed that the facilities had been used for a variety of subsequent asiatic games, but it was also pointed out that in the middle of the campus was a large college of education, similar to Loughborough, in which hundreds of students were studying to be sports instructors. As a result, the facilities for sport were in constant daily use. With that in mind, and as a Mancunian born and bred, I am delighted to support Manchester's Olympic bid for the year 2000 and to bring to the Minister's notice the consequent bid of Hopward Hall college in my constituency for Olympic 2000 satellite venue status.

For the third time in succession, Britain is bidding to host the Olympic games. Manchester, the British candidate, has the backing of the Government, national and international business and local authorities. For the first time, a bidding city, Manchester, has the active support of the Government, who have committed £55 million to develop the venue. I thank them for that. As a result, Manchester will have two major facilities under construction by September 1993—a £50 million complex comprising a major indoor arena seating 18,000 people and a £9 million covered velodrome. The 121-acre east Manchester site for a £12 million complex will have been acquired and reclaimed by the time the bid is ready. It will comprise the Olympic stadium, which will seat 60,000 people and will be capable of an increased capacity of 80,000 seats.

Decisions on other venues that are strategically distributed across the north of England will be made later, and that is the point of my speech. As the International Olympic Committee decides in September 1993 on the nomination to host the 2000 games, Manchester must submit a fully documented bid to the IOC by then. The Manchester bid is based on the development of an Olympic ring, with as many venues as possible within a motorway ring around Manchester. Therefore, the bid will be considerably enhanced by the evidence that facilities to host the Olympic games exist or that future development is committed in the area.

Hopwood Hall college, which is located in my constituency and set in the most beautiful and magnificent grounds, has accordingly produced a feasibility study on the college becoming a nominated satellite venue before the scheduled visit by the international Olympic representatives. If the Minister wants a copy of that feasibility study, which is supported by three Members of Parliament—one Labour, one Conservative and one Liberal Democrat, who attended meetings during the summer recess—I shall gladly let him have one.

Hopwood Hall college is a local authority tertiary college, formed in September 1990 and funded by the Rochdale metropolitan borough council. The campus is situated south of Middleton in my constituency, close to the M62 at junction 19 and has a frontage to the A664, leading to the M66 motorway ring around Manchester. The campus is three miles from Rochdale and six miles from Greater Manchester city centre. A new station on the Manchester railway line is proposed at Slattocks, which is within walking distance of the college.

The college's draft business plan sets out a number of strategic objectives for the campus. It must develop a new sports centre to satisfy Olympic standards specifications and achieve selection as a small area satellite venue. There will be a training complex for the 1996 European football championships which will provide the facilities necessary to secure the continued involvement of Bobby Charlton Enterprises in delivering residential and one-day courses in soccer skills.

Hopwood Hall college is designated within the Manchester venue strategy to host the Olympic judo competition and some of the preliminary rounds of the Olympic handball competition. The college can satisfy the Manchester Olympic bid committee on the after-use of the venue, and that the venue is practical and does not have grandiose, unrealisable plans. The venue is easily accessible to spectators, competitors and officials in terms of travelling times from the major venues, the athletes' village and the major hotels and airports. The college venue is of the highest quality, both in terms of the competition and the ancillary facilities such as training and warm-up areas, medical and first aid suites and meeting rooms.

[Mr. Jim Callaghan]

I could go on and list all the superb facilities already in the campus, but that would take up too much time. However, I shall say that the overall technical requirements of the Olympic handball competition are that we need one handball playing hall, with a connected warm-up hall, seating for 7,000 people, changing rooms for teams and officials, medical and dope testing rooms. For the judo, we need a competition hall seating 8,000 spectators.

The predominant users of the complex after the games will be the college, with surplus capacity being used by the community, clubs and organisations that have their own operational requirements and resources. Effective programming of use will realise spare capacity which, in turn, will provide the opportunity for bodies such as Bobby Charlton Enterprises, sports clubs and the community at large to utilise the facilities to deliver the services that are demanded of them. The research done into the feasibility of the satellite venue has been carried out by York Consulting Ltd. of Leeds and its research has shown a significant demand from clubs and organisations in the north Manchester area. Some 400 football teams, for example, are registered in the area. The Oldham Owls disabled sports club seeks to establish a permanent home base for its sports and social activities. It believes that its requirements can be satisfied by the facilities to be provided at the college.

The college will be able to provide facilities for tennis, bowls, basketball, volleyball and martial arts. The proposal is for a feasible, flexible facility which will be used on a long-term basis for the college's core purposes of education and training, but which will also have the capacity for use by a wide range of users, such as the 9,000 students and members of the community, engaged in a wide range of sports.

The Minister said of the Manchester bid:

> "A successful bid, well executed, would be a great boost to the regional economy and urban regeneration in Manchester and the north-west. I have, for example, seen estimates that suggest that the event could add £0·5 billion to the United Kingdom invisible exports . . . Partnership is a common theme of our whole approach to investment and regeneration . . . We expect local commitment, participation, value for money and well-constructed ideas that are capable of implementation."—[Official Report, 4 July 1991; Vol. 194, c. 540.]

The Hopwood Hall college bid for the satellite venue status meets all those requirements.

On 22 June 1992, the Secretary of State for Education agreed an additional capital resource of £2·5 million to enable the local education authority to discharge all outstanding liabilities relating to the purchase of the Hopwood Hall site and to the convenanted refurbishment of the college buildings. On Friday 17 July 1992, the Queen officially opened the college.

Accordingly, I can do no better than to invite the Minister to follow in the Queen's footsteps and to visit the college. I shall introduce him to the principal, Mr. Wailes, to Mr. Ronnie Todd, the resources manager, and to Mr. Peter Jackson, the sports development officer. All of them, together with York Consulting Ltd., have contributed so much to the college's bid for satellite venue status.

I am sure that the Minister will be impressed when he tours the college campus. To coin a phrase, the college intends to go for gold. There are no medals for coming second. I ask the Minister please to pay us a visit.

1.2 pm

Lady Olga Maitland (Sutton and Cheam): I am delighted that sport has now been energised and given a top priority by the Government. It has had a lead from the Prime Minister and I was delighted to see that sport has now been raised to Cabinet level, as has been mentioned this morning. Much has been achieved and a long catalogue could be recited, but much still needs to be done.

There is bad news about national fitness as was pointed out by the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) and by my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) who referred to the Allied Dunbar report. They could have added a few more facts. One in three of all men and two thirds of all women were unable to continue walking at a reasonable pace—3 mph—up a one in 20 slope without becoming breathless and having to slow down or stop. They could also have said that 8 per cent. of men and 13 per cent. of women are obese. In a survey on 16 to 24-year-olds, 70 per cent. of the young men and 91 per cent. of the women were living lives below the activity level necessary for a fit and healthy life.

If we cast our eyes around the Chamber, could we in all honesty claim that we maintain a proper fitness record? I had better come clean. My own record is one of running up and down stairs in the House, a spot of gardening, mothers' tennis, and sailing boats and turning them upside down. Perhaps I have a long way to go.

In no other country can there be such a gap between the theory of a fit and healthy populace and the actual practice —we are crying out to get something done. Never has more brain power, never have more pens pushing paper, been devoted to telling us how we can become fitter, but we still need to do more and continue our efforts to encourage health and fitness. We must persuade our citizens that they need to exercise at least 20 minutes three times a week if they want to increase their fitness. At first sight that seems rather demanding, but we must bear in mind that our starting point is very low and that we still have a long way to go. Many people could quickly move up the activity ladder from the lowest rungs by taking more brisk walks, using stairs, not lifts, walking to the shops instead of going by car, and spending more time doing heavy work in the house and garden.

Active living begins in childhood—hence the importance of sport in schools. Interestingly, during the past four years successive reports have established that most 16-year-olds do not even have one exercise period a week. Most school leavers do not take part in organised exercise, certainly nothing the equivalent of a 20-minute walk.

I congratulate the Government on recognising the importance of sport in schools. I declare an interest as a member of the Education Select Committee. I am delighted to see that the Education Department is liaising closely with the Department of National Heritage. Physical education is now a foundation subject in the national curriculum. I was pleased to see that in 1990 the Select Committee moved this issue up the political agenda, notably stressing the importance of children learning to swim and taking part in team games, which have now become compulsory up to the age of 16.

We need to bear it in mind just how important these sports in schools are. They induce not only physical but mental health. A child who does well on the sports field but is a low academic achiever will feel his morale lifted. He will feel better and that will reflect in his school work. It will raise self-confidence all round. We all know that if people believe that they can do something, they can. By lacking faith in themselves, many people fail to achieve, but sport enables non-academics to flourish. That is most important for children who think that they are failures and who may become problematic later in life. Sport can identify and develop special talent. It can divert potential hooligans by channelling their energies constructively in the sports hall.

Above all, let us remember the moral aspect of sport. Team sports teach leadership, responsibility, respect for rules and fair play, and good behaviour. The expression, "Be a good sport," has great value. We should not underestimate the importance of teaching manners in schools.

Although games and physical education lessons are now part of the core curriculum in school hours, it is a pity that we have such a struggle to provide enough back-up sport, with teachers helping with competitive matches between school teams outside school hours—when children play soccer, rugby and cricket after the school day or at weekends. As has already been said, those problems are compounded by the selling of school playing fields for development. There has been a decline in the number of state school teachers who are willing and able to maintain a commitment to teach sport outside school hours. I must take issue with the hon. Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Davies). He complained that teachers' pay and contracts had become overdefined and that they were unable to devote their energies and resources to extra-curricular activities. I must stress that it was the teachers' unions who boxed them in, not the Government.

I must also pay a tribute to the magnificently dedicated teachers who uncomplainingly and without seeking reward devote an enormous amount of time to help sport outside schools. There is also a minor cultural problem in that we must get children away from television sets and from their sedentary lives. We must make them accept that sport is a natural way of life.

Physical education is a subject in its own right. It is important that we recognise that physical education is now part of the core curriculum, but we must ensure that it is properly timetabled so that we know how often it is happening and what the pupils are doing. I hope that the independent inspectorate for schools will consider that matter very carefully and not accept sweeping statements like, "Oh, yes. The children are doing sport." Commitment and action are sometimes far apart.

I want to stress an education issue which stretches into sport. The Education Department supports the idea of specialised schools and vocational studies. However, no mention has yet been made of the fact that schools could add sport to the list of studies including languages and technology. I hope that the National Heritage Department will press for a greater recognition of the importance of sport as a special subject.

We should also bear it in mind how we balance physical education in schools. There is a tendency in the teaching establishment to believe that time spent on sport is wasted because pupils are not concentrating on academic subjects. Academic work is as important as sport and pupils should be able to devote equal time to both.

Dr. Spink: Does my hon. Friend agree that a healthy body can produce a healthy mind? The link between good achievement in sport and good academic achievement is not lost.

Lady Olga Maitland: I agree with my hon. Friend. The Swedes have devoted an enormous amount of effort to ensure that children with academic inclinations spend as much time on sport as they do on their studies. Sport is given a higher priority.

If we want more sport in schools, it must be paid for. That is a difficulty because every nation has its priorities. We must consider how to encourage teachers to play a role in out-of-school hours. I believe that it would make a lot of sense to give teachers a special payment in that regard.

Local authorities play an important part in sports provision. However, there is a danger that some local authorities may go overboard on sport at the expense of essential social services partly because people who need such services—the elderly, sick, vulnerable and handicapped—do not have the voice or numbers to state their own case. It is very important that local authorities have a balanced view of their priorities and how they should be funded.

I endorse the comments by the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell), who called for a national audit of local authority sports facilities. That is the nub of the matter. Are local authority sports facilities properly monitored? Are we getting value for money? Is there access for all to school facilities whether they be grant-maintained or under the local management of schools system? Are we making sure that the waste of resources is being monitored? Are new schemes properly costed? Do local authorities want to spend first and worry later? Will a scheme or facility be properly used and is it what the local community wants or needs?

I certainly would encourage the joint venture commercial schemes that my hon. Friend the Minister mentioned and also the need to monitor compulsory competitive tendering. Above all, I support the call for an national sports authority to co-ordinate all sport. Things have become far too haphazard because there are many rival authorities.

We have talked about business sponsorship of sport. Sponsorship is important—sport cannot live on thin air —but it is haphazard, although I welcome the Government's Sports Match initiative and the Institute of Sports Sponsorship.

In my constituency of Sutton and Cheam, we have the excellent Sutton United football club. It has rightly achieved recognition. I shall soon attend one of its games —I might even have the opportunity to do a kick-off. What has been exciting and encouraging about the football club is that it is well-managed, there is no hooliganism and it has organised its own sponsorship. It approached Securicor, a locally based company, when it did particularly well in 1989 and won a famous victory over Coventry City in the FA cup series. As a result of that, a deal has been struck. That is a one-to-one relationship. I should like more pro-active Government involvement to help companies and sports in local communities.

Sport has many roles, but one role that has not been mentioned is the role in the political world of healing sectarian passions. I have just returned from a visit to Northern Ireland. In Ulster, sport is the one sane activity which has been going on steadily over the past 20 years. International sportsmen have attended the Ulster games. The one piece of good news in Northern Ireland is sport. There is always a winner, and it is always Northern Ireland.

Mr. Pendry: I am sure that it was not lost on the hon. Lady when I mentioned that one of the reasons for that is that there is mandatory rate relief, which I have been asking the Government to consider for many years. That is one of the reasons—as a former Northern Ireland Minister, I agree with the hon. Lady—why there is so much sporting activity there, which is very good for the Province.

Lady Olga Maitland: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his comment. I am stressing not just the important financial input in sport in Northern Ireland but the spirit of the people. Although society might be divided, each culture has its sports, of which it is proud. In the same way as Yorkshire is famous for cricket, the Catholic community in Northern Ireland has sports at which it is successful such as Gaelic football, hurling and a sport which is new to me called Camoge—a women's stick-and-ball game halfway between hockey and lacrosse. Those sports are taught in Catholic schools. Protestant schools have their own sports at which they excel. They tend to be the English-oriented sports such as rugby and cricket.

It is encouraging that when the name and voice of Northern Ireland are at stake, everyone, whether Catholic or Protestant, routs for Northern Ireland. That is an exciting factor. When the football team headed by Billy Bingham plays against Denmark at Windsor Park stadium in Belfast the Protestants, and indeed the whole Province —even though the team is mainly Catholic—will root for the team. That is good news.

When other events such as county sports between the northern counties and those in the republic take place it is exciting to see that both the Protestants and the Catholics in Northern Ireland crowd around their television sets and watch, for example, the Down team triumph and beat in Gaelic games its rivals in the south. Sport in Ireland is important. It is important to recognise that sport can bring people together. We can explore that factor further in the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Geoffrey Lofthouse): Order. May I remind hon. Members that five hon. Members hope to catch my eye in the time available. I hope that they will bear that in mind and keep their speeches short.

1.21 pm

Mr. John Denham (Southampton, Itchen): I hope that hon. Members will forgive me for referring to a constituency matter that I mentioned earlier. I know that the Minister will take a personal, as well as a minsterial, interest in it. Many of his constituents sensibly choose to watch premier league football in Southampton. I should like to explore some of the problems that surround the conflict between the planning process and the efforts of clubs and local authorities which genuinely seek to meet the demands of the Taylor report. The Southampton football club, the Saints, has been located for many years at the Dell. The Dell is a city-centre ground with no car parking facilities. It is now very difficult to improve that site to provide modern spectator facilities.

When the Taylor report was produced, the football club and the city council responded enthusiastically to the challenge in that report. They worked together to draw up plans for a new community stadium on the northern fringe of Southampton at Stoneham. The aim of the exercise was to provide not simply modern facilities for the Southampton football club but a wide range of other sporting facilities such as running tracks and other leisure facilities for the people of Southampton and the surrounding area.

The plans were drawn up after a careful exercise by the city council to select a site, and discussions were initiated to raise city council funding, private funding and funding from the Football Trust as well as funding from the club itself. The difficulty is that those ambitious and good plans have not progressed anything like as fast as either the club or the city council would have liked. The reason for that is the basic failure of the strategic planning authority in Hampshire, the Hampshire county council. It displayed an obstructive attitude to the proposals from the beginning. When the proposals were launched the first response of the county council was to condemn them, then refuse to discuss them.

There was at last an agreement between Hampshire county council, Southampton city council and Eastleigh borough council, which covers part of the site, to have a joint expert study by officers to look at all the possible locations for a new football stadium. That official report, which was supported by professional planners from each of the three authorities, endorsed the Stoneham site as by far the best available. Since that date, the county council has ignored the report and, equally, failed to identify and back any alternative site for a replacement stadium. The Dell was identified as the worst possible site that one could find in Southampton. Because of the lack of strategic planning guidance, Eastleigh borough council—perhaps egged on by lurid and fantastic notions about the behaviour of football fans—also objected to the proposals.

The club and the city face the difficulty that they will not be able to get planning permission before the public inquiry. I am convinced that the planning arguments are so strong that they will win permission, but that is too far down the line to enable the club to meet the 1994 Taylor requirements.

The club has therefore been forced to introduce proposals, costing up to £2 million, to redevelop its existing site, which is an unsatisfactory solution. Although the club is putting a brave face on it, there must be some doubt whether it will be financially viable with reduced capacity at its existing stadium.

Southampton football club is not exactly a family-run club, but it has retained many of the merits of such a club, and has that feel. It is not one of the premier league clubs dominated by egocentric business men with millions of pounds to pour in. It is an achievement to be a premier league club, but the financial position that the club is likely to be put in must place a question mark over Southampton's retaining its position in the league.

I appreciate the problem facing the Government. Most constituents who write to me do not like the Taylor report, but the Government would be on a political and moral hiding to nothing if they did not back the report and another stadium disaster occurred. I understand why the Government do not want an open door on prevarication and backsliding by clubs which do not have any intention of meeting the report's challenges, but that is not the position in Southampton—as I am sure the Minister recognises—as the club has done everything reasonably possible.

The Minister referred to a letter from the Football Licensing Authority, which was attempting to be helpful. Without detailed planning permission it is impossible to press ahead, to acquire the sites and put together financial packages. Discussions can take place, but contracts cannot be signed if one does not have planning permission—some compulsory purchase may be involved in acquiring the Stoneham site.

Although it would like to meet the targets in the Football Licensing Authority's letter, the club feels that it must depend on a short-term project at the Dell, in the hope of reviving the Stoneham project later.

Will the Minister and his colleagues consider the matter afresh to find out whether there is some route—through the structures of the Football Licensing Authority, or through direct intervention by Ministers—to give the club a helping hand? No one is asking for the dangerous exercise of allowing all clubs to escape the Taylor requirements, but if the efforts made by Southampton could be recognised, if support could be given to the planning process, and if the Football Licensing Authority could be encouraged to give the club a dispensation—provided that it presses ahead with the planning application and a timetable on other elements in the authority's letter—it would be enormously helpful.

I am grateful to other Ministers, and especially to the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities, who visited Southampton recently and has been helpful on a secondary planning matter concerning the capacity of the local road network. I do not regard the issue as party political. Because of the importance of the football club and its role in the premier league, will the Minister look at the Southampton file afresh and try to find a way through the situation, which is not the responsibility of the club or of the local city council?

Mr. Nirj Joseph Deva (Brentford and Isleworth): The Government gave sportsmen a clear message of support and commitment when they appointed the first Minister with direct responsibility for sport. I take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) on his recent promotion to the Opposition Front Bench. I am sure that he will have an enjoyable and useful role to play.

I speak as the Member in whose constituency is the home of the Bees, otherwise known as Brentford football club, and as an armchair athlete who, no doubt like many other hon. Members, participated in this year's Olympics by yelling at the television to encourage our British Olympic team. I am sure that all hon. Members will join me in congratulating the British team who participated in the Barcelona Olympics. I also congratulate the Government on their positive stand and support for Manchester 2000. That will be a magnificent opportunity for Britain to shine on the world stage as hosts for the premier sports event of the millennium.

Manchester and the north-west will benefit from the major investment. I understand that about £55 million has been committed to the construction of an Olympic arena and many other sports venues and facilities. That massive investment will enable a new generation of budding athletes to have access to world-class facilities and will provide them with every opportunity to participate and win. I encourage everyone to support in every way the Manchester 2000 bid.

I commend the Minister's initiatives for improving the existing structure and funding for sport, and I welcome the setting up of a sports council for England which is long overdue. It will concentrate the minds of English sportsmen and women and foster and promote the provision of sports facilities in England.

Unlike the Labour party, I do not believe in the formation of bureaucratic and non-workable bodies to control sport. When Labour launched its document on sport the then shadow sports Minister, who is now in another place, made it clear that he would like to see Labour encourage a greater ministerial role on sports councils. That is in spite of the Opposition's call to keep sports representative bodies free from political bias. Labour's proposals threaten the voluntary and apolitical nature of sport as we know it.

Government grant in aid to the Sports Council has risen by about 30 per cent. in real terms to about £50 million in the past 12 years while local authority spending has grown by 5 per cent. in real terms from £362 million in 1987 to £456 million in 1990. We have also been told that sport will be one of the major recipients from the national lottery.

The private sector is invaluable to a wide range of sports, with sponsorship running at about £200 million per year. Another £40 million is generated every year for sport following the 2·5 per cent. cut in pool betting duty. There is also the business sponsorship scheme for sport. It was launched in September and sponsors money pound for pound up to a maximum of £75,000. Labour has announced that it would set up a major review of sports finance and sponsorship, levy, betting and taxation to ensure that a fairer proportion of the money taken out of sport is put back in. That is a laudable aim, but I share the concern of many of my hon. Friends who feel that that could well be seen as a threat to commercial sponsors, even if it is not, especially if sponsorship were subject to a special tax.

As I have said, Brentford football club, a first division team, is in my constituency. Therefore, football ground safety is of special concern to my constituents and myself. It is imperative that the recommendations in the Taylor report be implemented. We must at all costs avoid another Hillsborough.

[Mr. Nirj Joseph Deva]

I understand that second and third division clubs are bring allowed to retain some standing accommodation, but I should like to see safety as the paramount factor at all football league stadiums. For that reason I was quite concerned at the opposition to, and the condemnation of, the compulsory change to all-seater football grounds. I urge all who oppose that to join the call for safety first at all stadiums and support Lord Justice Taylor's recommendations.

It is encouraging to see that the Department of National Heritage is working in close conjunction with the Education Department on sport in schools. It is also encouraging to know that physical education is now compulsory under the national curriculum until the age of 14 years, and until the age of 16 years in 1995. I also support the Government's recommendation that all children be taught to swim—as I was when I was young —up to the age of 11 years. The champion coaching scheme should be consolidated and enhanced and I welcome the injection of £1·3 million into the scheme. I should like to see children given every opportunity to participate and excel. They should have an opportunity to choose from a wide range of sporting activities. They should be given an opportunity to take sport beyond school hours and have coaches and facilities to give them the training and choice, if they so wish, to become athletes and represent their country, possibly at the Olympics in Manchester in the year 2000.

Mr. Tom Cox (Tooting): The debate has been wide ranging, but, as an earlier speaker said, if we are to have such debates they should concentrate on specific sports; some sports have not been mentioned.

We have heard much about the amount of money that the general public puts into sport and the hundreds of thousands of people who are employed in sport. Without doubt, vast sums of money are now available, but, taking football as an example, I wonder whether that money is really for the benefit of all football clubs in the country and not solely for that of those in the premier league. The top clubs will always be the attraction, but the real lifeblood of football is the clubs now in the first, second and third divisions—teams such as Doncaster, Fulham and Chester. They may never be champions or get to Wembley, but local people relate to such teams.

It has not been mentioned much in this debate, but we often hear it said in the House that there is an enormous amount of violence in this country. Much of that violence and vandalism is done by young people. With much closer co-operation between local authorities and local football teams within communities, much of it could be stopped. However, the great problem is that many clubs do not have the necessary money because they are not an Arsenal, Tottenham or Liverpool. I hope that the Minister will look into that problem.

A sport that has not been mentioned this morning is boxing, which is followed by many people. How boxing is organised I frankly do not know, and I do not know whether the Minister knows. Whatever one may think of the sport, one often reads that boxers who have a great deal of ability and who, based on their record, should be given an opportunity to fight for British, European or world titles rarely get that chance because, sadly, they do not belong to the right syndicate that controls boxing.

I do not expect the Minister to reply to my points in detail now, although I should like him to find out and let me know exactly who controls boxing in this country.

Mr. Pendry: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Cox: No, with respect, I shall not give way.

Why are the managers, promoters and advisers often the people who organise boxing here? If boxers do not belong to their syndicate, they do not get a look in. That happens time and again. Will the Minister find out who controls British boxing and who appoints those who control it?

We all go into pubs and chat to people about sporting events. People say to me, "Tom, how do such things happen?" Why do boxers with the most appalling records come from other parts of the world to fight British boxers? The resulting fights are fiascos, as we have seen with fights arranged for Frank Bruno. We have a right to know who arranges and controls boxing in this country.

Mr. Key: I should very much welcome a quiet chat with the hon. Gentleman. I have explored that difficult problem with the British Boxing Board of Control. Like the hon. Gentleman, I am still a little confused about who runs British boxing.

Mr. Cox: I should willingly take up the Minister's offer, and I am sure that he would be only too willing for my hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) to attend the meeting, as he could help us.

Seeing you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in the Chair gives me pleasure. The subject of boxing has not been touched on in the debate, but I know that the sport of which you have a great love and in which you are involved, not only now that you are Deputy Speaker of the House but when you were a Back-Bench Member, is rugby league. From having served with you on Committees dealing with local government issues I know that you are deeply involved with Wakefield, as well as your constituency of Pontefract and Castleford—which both have rugby league clubs. I am sure that had you been on the Back Benches today you would rightly speak of the sport of rugby, which you support and of which you have such a wide knowledge. Sadly, that has not been discussed.

Many of us will have watched last week's match at Wembley on television; and there is to be a great match in the north of England this week. I am sure that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, will be there; I only wish that I could be there with you. We do not have the opportunity to mention boxing and rugby league in debates such as today's, but I hope that we shall in future.

I do not criticise the Minister for painting the best picture of what is happening in sporting activities in this country, but there is another side. We shall have to wait and see whether the national lottery helps the position. Sadly, organisations that are now committed to working with young people are not receiving help. We know that young people love sport.

I sent a letter from the Methodist church dated 12 October which states:

> "For three years we have sustained correspondence, completed grant aid application forms and, in some cases made visits to the new Authorities"— local government ones.

"After all this work, in common with many similar bodies, we have only minimal offers of grant amounting to around £300 from any of these sources. Nearly all are unable or unwilling to take on, in whole or in part, this level of financial support."

The financial support mentioned amounts to about £7,000 a year, which is not a large sum.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde that many local authorities that would like to help young people's sporting associations cannot do so, due to the legislation imposed on them by the Government. If we are talking of sport and trying to stop vandalism and crime, we must listen to such organisations. To his credit, the Minister paid tribute to the hours and hours of work that those associated with voluntary organisations give to this country, but if there is no willingness by our Government to make money available to such organisations, the youngsters and those who run the groups lose interest. The resources necessary cannot be raised by jumble sales and the sale of raffle tickets, although such methods can help.

I welcome both the Minister and my hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde to their Front-Bench posts. I hope that we shall have further such debates, but I beg the Minister to consider seriously having debates in future on specific sporting subjects.

Mr. John Bowis (Battersea): It is a pleasure to follow my close neighbour the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox). At one point, I thought that he was about to invite you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to engage in some sparring on the Floor of the House. I take the hon. Gentleman's point about boxing. Amateur boxing, in the best sense—as undertaken by boys' clubs and the like—is a tradition of the part of south London that we jointly represent. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister will have noted the hon. Gentleman's point.

As I have explained to Madam Speaker, I could not be here for the beginning of the debate, although, thanks to the wonders of modern technology, I was able to see and hear the two Front-Bench speeches and thus to enjoy the challenge to my hon. Friend the Minister to meet the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) in the gym. I am not sure that I would wish to encourage such delights. My challenge to hon. Members is that they should first take part with me in Oxfam's forthcoming fast. That might make us fitter and more able to participate in gymnastics or in sporting activities more energetic than rising to our feet from these Benches.

My old sports—rugby and squash—are, alas, sports with which it is unwise to continue for too long, and these days my sporting activities tend to consist of walking in the Lake district or, more locally, wherever my border terrier chooses to take me.

Sport is important to the health and education of our society, and the role model provided by our fine sportsmen and women is important in encouraging good citizenship. One has only to think of my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe), Gary Lineker and Daley Thompson and the success stories of the recent Olympics. No one will forget our oarsmen's moment of triumph as they stood on the rostrum, the face of the cox —not the hon. Member for Tooting—creased with emotion, while the British national anthem was played. I am sure that that great moment will have inspired many young people to take up rowing.

My hon. Friend the Minister referred to sportsmen and women with disabilities and to the paralympics and paraplegic games. We should do whatever we can to encourage people with disabilities to take part in sport. That objective was for long neglected, but, in recent years, the opportunities have been much more evident and with the opportunities come the achievements that we salute. Disabled people should have the opportunity not just to participate but to spectate. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will continually remind sports bodies that they should provide access for people in wheelchairs. We need to be able to bring people to grounds and stadiums where there have traditionally been a lot of steps, narrow turnstiles and so on. Access to our great sporting grounds is as important to people with disabilities as their ability to participate in sport.

Some 35 million of our citizens participate in one sport or another. That is a great record. As the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde said, sport is also a great creator of jobs. I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman gave the figures, but 467,000 jobs are now provided by sport in this country—an increase from 376,000 in 1985. Sport has a good record in providing jobs as well as a great deal of pleasure.

Sport provides £3·5 billion for the Exchequer, half of it in income tax and national insurance. For every £1 that sport receives in grants, it repays £7 to the taxpayer. For that reason, we need constantly to keep an eye on the tax burden on sport. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister will be constantly aware of that in his talks with the Treasury. Where possible, the burden should be lifted or alleviated, and I am thinking particularly of the voluntary, non-profit making clubs and the amounts that they have to pay.

Funding for sport will be boosted enormously by a national lottery. I am an unashamed supporter of that concept, which I hope will soon enable us to contribute to sport, the arts and heritage. The existing foundation has not been as good as we should have liked, not least because the pools promoters sought to finance sport and arts through the foundation by imposing a levy on punters rather than by taking money from their profits. The lottery will be a better way of raising finance, which will be over and above what the pools companies provide through their contributions and taxation.

Hon. Members have referred to school sport, on which the debate has rightly focused. I think that the Opposition now recognise the mistakes that some Labour-controlled local authorities made, especially those in London, and the damage that was done by their hostility to competitive sport. I know that the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde has a good record on fighting within his party to restore sport to schools. Nevertheless, there was a damaging period when it was excluded.

The Government included physical education in the national curriculum, which gave new opportunities to achieve health among the youth of our nation. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will talk to the Department for Education about the surveys that the Secondary Heads Association and the National Association of Head Teachers have conducted, which show a sad decrease in sport in our schools at weekends and after school hours. The last survey found that 71 per cent. of 14-year-olds had less than two hours' physical education a week. Two hours should be the minimum and I hope that it can be restored as the norm. Some 89 per cent. of primary school teachers are involved in teaching physical education, but only 8 per cent. have any qualifications or training. In-service training must be considered carefully.

I endorse what has been said about playing fields. Without the right facilities, particularly in schools, we cannot expect young people to have the opportunities that we wish for them. We must consider the question of selling playing fields, the circulars that have come from the Department in the past, and the grant-maintained schools. I believe that the Education Bill, which deals broadly with grant-maintained schools, has been given a First Reading today, so it may not be long before there is an opportunity to clarify this.

I endorse what the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) said about drugs. I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to look at the drug list, because there is some doubt about what drugs are on the list. Athletes take medicines for specific complaints—often in good faith—only to find that, unbeknown to them or their trainers, they are banned. We want to stop the cheats, but we must do so openly and fairly.

The hon. Member for Tooting and I share an interest in various football clubs, not least Wimbledon, which, thanks to difficulties in obtaining planning consent from Merton council, is experiencing ground problems. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will try to encourage people to get together to discuss the opportunities for the club; otherwise there will be a danger of its being homeless, stateless, rootless and supporterless.

Last week, Wimbledon appeared live on television for the first time ever. That is thanks to the new television agreement with the premier league clubs and shows how that agreement can help the less fashionable clubs in the way that previous agreements did not. That is worth reporting.

I also pay tribute to the police forces of the country. An often-forgotten contribution that the taxpayer makes to sport is the funding of police in the areas around football grounds. They sometimes have a difficult task and should be saluted on performing it well.

I remind my hon. Friend the Minister of a private Member's Bill that I promoted some years ago to do with public safety information. It arose out of the Bradford fire tragedy, when it appeared that information had been made available by the emergency services to the club and to the local authority, but the public were unaware of it. We must always bear in mind the public's right to know if they are going into a place of risk, particularly if it is a sporting venue. It may be that a family sending children would not have done so had it known of the risk, thereby saving their lives. We must always keep this issue under observation.

Lastly, I join other London Members of Parliament, London having been an unsuccessful bidder for the Olympic games, in wishing Manchester good luck.

1.56 pm

Mr. Clive Betts (Sheffield, Attercliffe): I congratulate the Minister and my hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) on their Front-Bench appointments. I am sure that we all look forward to debates on how to advance the cause of sport in Britain. I should be only too pleased to join hon. Members in a few rounds at the gym, if that challenge is generally open. I should also be only too pleased to challenge any Conservative Member who wished to join me in a game of squash. Bearing in mind what the Minister said about the dangers of that game, that may be the only way that we are likely to get the Government's majority down, as these promised Back-Bench rebellions never happen.

I shall concentrate on two issues, the first of which is the excellent sporting facilities that we have in Sheffield, which were built for the world student games, the future for them and what we can do with them. The second is football grounds and their safety.

The Minister's view of the quality of sporting facilities in this country is somewhat rosy. The reality is that in most sports, our major facilities do not bear comparison either in quality or in numbers with those of most other countries in Europe. For example, in Belgrade there are more Olympic-standard swimming pools than there are in Britain. That is repeated in many other sports. The examples for tennis were given by my hon. Friend the Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Davies).

I take exception to the Minister's comments about what local authorities are able to do in the current financial climate. He mentioned that capital receipt rules had made the development of sporting facilities by local authorities more difficult. He did not say that, on top of that, since 1979 there have been successive and severe cuts in local authorities' borrowing abilities, particularly in the other services block, which is meant to provide resources for sporting development. He did not mention that leasing availability has been restricted by the most recent legislation.

The Minister did not mention another factor. Where local authorities have sought to enter into partnerships with the private sector, recent legislation has meant that when local authorities gave guarantees to enable the private sector to proceed on terms that it found acceptable, the guarantees effectively made all of that capital expenditure count as part of the local authorities' borrowing allocation and credit approval. That is another recent Government restriction. On top of that, capping is a major inhibiting factor in local authority spending on sport. Quite rightly, local authorities have to give priority to spending on education, social services and other key services when their resources are being steadily eroded.

The example given of the village in Wiltshire and what it did is a great credit to the people in the area. However, what they could do with their resources cannot be repeated in inner-city Sheffield constituencies, where 30 per cent. or more of the people face unemployment. Those who are in employment often earn low wages and simply do not have the extra resources to contribute to such projects. They have to rely on local and central Government to find the money.

I turn now to the facilities available in Sheffield which were built for the world student games. The games had some financial difficulties, mainly caused by the inability to raise sponsorship money in what was becoming a difficult financial climate. However, the games did not default on their responsibilities, unlike the Edinburgh Commonwealth games a few years before. In sporting and organisational terms, the games were a success, and both Sheffield and British sport gained a great deal of credit. We received a great deal of praise from competitors and sporting administrators from other countries for what was presented to them

The facilities were recognised not merely as the best in Britain, but as being as good as anything available throughout the world. Great credit was paid to the Ponds Forge swimming complex which is as good as anything in the world. The Don Valley stadium is certainly the best athletics stadium in Britain and the indoor arena is the best indoor arena. I was disappointed that when the Minister gave a resumé of the sporting facilities available in Britain, he did not mention one of the Sheffield sporting facilities, although they are acknowledged as being of international quality.

I hope that we can enter a new period of more co-operation between Sheffield and the Government on these matters. We should consider how we can use the facilities for the future, because international events will come to them. The European swimming championships will come to Sheffield next year.

I greatly welcome the Government's support for the Manchester Olympic bid and I wish Manchester every success. It is important to Britain and to British sport. In the meantime, other things will happen in sport in Britain, many of them in Sheffield. I hope that the Government will consider how they can help by working together with local people in the city to maximise the benefit of the existing facilities for the benefit of Sheffield and of Britain.

Already the fact that the city sees sport as part of a package of economic regeneration has benefits in terms of employment. We have talked a lot about jobs directly involved in sport. The spin-off from sporting development can be significant in helping areas to regenerate when they have lost much of their basic industry.

In the mid-1980s, Sheffield had unemployment of more than 4 per cent. above the national average and rising. We obviously have problems today; everyone is suffering from the recession. At least unemployment in Sheffield is now only 2 per cent. above the national average, not 4 per cent. as it was a few years ago.

The facilities are not only available for international events; the community is now using them. More than 1 million people used the swimming facilities within a year of their opening. The Minister referred to the Milton Keynes ice arena and to the success of the ice hockey team there. By comparison, the Sheffield Steelers ice hockey team attracts 8,000 people a week to watch ice hockey games, which is far in excess of any other ice hockey team in the country. Again, the team uses one of the facilities built for the games. All the facilities have been designed so that disabled people can participate in support and can watch sport in comfort, which is extremely important.

Sheffield, together with the local sporting organisations, seeks development programmes so that young people can become more expert in sport. One classic example in which I am sure you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, are interested, is the development of rugby league in Sheffield and the success of Sheffield Eagles. Success has come not only at the professional club. There has been a real development programme in which the city council, the Sports Council and governing bodies have come together to try to work at sports development. The development programme for rugby league, encouraging young people through the schools to start playing a sport that has not been traditional in the city, has been a great success.

In Sheffield, we believe that we are the city of sport. We now want to see how we can further the development programmes and bring together some of the best athletes and sports people in the country. We want to see how we can give them the benefits of our great facilities. We are therefore trying to launch a project known as Sport Sheffield. We would like the Government to support it and get involved in it.

The idea of the project is to bring national sporting squads to the city to use the facilities and to work with the university, which is offering its help and expertise in sports and sports medicine, about which we have heard a great deal today. They will work with our tertiary colleges with the support of the Sheffield business community and the chamber of commerce. Already active discussions are taking place with the regional sports council. The Sports Council is on the project group, as are other governing bodies, especially those in charge of diving and volley-ball. We want to launch a pilot project in which those will be the two lead sports. Already 70 per cent. of the Olympic diving squad has been to Sheffield because of the facilities there. Now we want to put in a bid to the Sports Council for funding of the project which we believe is of great importance not only for the proper use of the facilities but because it will enable people, by benefiting from them, to make British sport competitive with sport in other countries.

We want to involve the British Olympic Association, the National Coaching Foundation, the British Association of Sports Sciences and the British Association of Sport and Medicine. We must not just sit back and admire the facilities that we have built in Sheffield. They are for the benefit of the local community and for British sport in general, providing national centres of sporting excellence. I hope that the Government will display their commitment to this important process.

My other main topic concerns football, football grounds and their safety. I agree with the hon. Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle) about the development of the premier league. Its only success has been to put prices up. I cannot see what football fans have gained from that. The league was born of the greed and ambition of a handful of people and a small number of clubs. I regret the fact that football has fragmented. I should like football to unite under one governing body that would look after not only premier league and other professional clubs but the amateur game too, so that football could be seen as one game.

The premier league clubs may have made a wrong move by thinking to benefit from the money coming in from BSkyB. In the end Channel 4 stole a march on the whole proceedings. It saw a gap in the market and put on Italian soccer on Sunday afternoons. The vast majority of sports fans and of avid followers of football to whom I have spoken say that they would not buy a BSkyB dish when they can watch AC Milan play Fiorentina and see the difference between that style of play and what passes for football here in a game, say, between Wimbledon and Crystal Palace—a more direct way of playing. The premier league has done nothing to benefit football as a spectacle, and I hope that the Government will look into that.

I have been to every football ground in the country bar one, so I have seen a few of the problems and some of the deplorable facilities in our grounds. I welcome the Government's commitment to assisting football with improvements to those grounds, but the Government turned a deaf ear to the pleas of football for many years before they decided to help. That did nothing to help develop football or the quality of facilities for spectators.

Now we are thinking about safety. I was at Hillsborough that terrible day when the disaster occurred. I was the leader of the city council at the time and I took a particular interest in the licensing of football grounds. In response to the Government's proposals and the Taylor report, and in disagreement with some hon. Members who have spoken today, I must say that I do not regard the provision of seating and the provision of safe facilities as necessarily synonymous. I know that that view is not shared by all in the House, but I spoke to Lord Justice Taylor after he had made his report, when he came to meet politicians and football administrators in South Yorkshire. He said that if he had known that there was a move in football to remove the appalling so-called safety fences, which I believe were a major cause of the Hillsborough disaster as people could not get on to the pitch from the enclosure, he might not have been so firm in his recommendation for seats at football grounds.

I welcome the Government's commitment to flexibility in respect of second and third division clubs. I should also like to see flexibility for premier and first division clubs. The rules for safety in standing areas are now more strict and more appropriate. There is a requirement for proper barriers, safety checks and a counting-in procedure. The problem at Hillsborough arose because there was no counting in for separated parts of the ground. Clubs are now obliged to carry out that clear Taylor recommendation. I believe that we should go further and also insist that fences in front of grounds should be removed as a major safety improvement.

I have seen seating areas at football grounds that are potentially more unsafe than many standing areas. Because of a shortage of money, clubs place seats on existing terracing. When people sit on them, they cannot see. As soon as the ball approaches a corner flag or the goal, they stand up. I have seen spectators standing on their seats for the last 10 minutes of a game to see what was happening. That is dangerous and it is happening at many football grounds.

The tragedy at Hillsborough occurred in a standing area although, as I have said, I believe that the problem involved the fences and the lack of a counting-in procedure. The Ibrox tragedy had nothing to do with the viewing area. It occurred when people left the ground. The tragedy at Bradford occurred in a seated area. It is no good simply to say that getting rid of standing areas is essential for safety at football grounds. Most grounds on the continent are not all-seater. There are standing areas at most continental grounds and those grounds seem to be able to cope.

I believe that the money would be better spent on safety per se rather than on a simple requirement to abolish standing areas. With regard to the consumer interests, the Football Supporters Association has stated that it does not believe that standing areas should be removed automatically from all football grounds. We should start to listen to people who go to matches every Saturday afternoon and enjoy their football in a way that may be anathema to people who have never stood on a kop behind a goal and enjoyed that particular atmosphere. It should not be beyond our power to enable those people to enjoy football in absolute safety.

I should like the Minister to commit himself to exploring, with all the people involved in Sheffield, ways forward to use our superb sporting facilities as centres of national excellence. I also ask for a reconsideration of the requirement that football grounds in the premier and first division should be all-seater ones. I do not believe that that is necessarily the best way to make grounds safer and better places for people to watch football.

2.12 pm

Mr. Pendry: With the leave of the House, I want to intervene for a few minutes. I am sure that the Minister would agree that it is better for all hon. Members to take part in a debate than to have long winding-up speeches. It is important that the Minister should have the longer time to reply because he has been asked many questions.

I am sure that the Minister will have realised by now the wisdom of promoting this debate. A great deal of popular acclaim has been heaped on him. My gosh, I have never known a Tory Minister be praised as much as the Minister has been in this debate. In fact, I am beginning to suspect some of my colleagues.

We have heard some very constructive speeches and I would normally want to refer to some of them and to the points that were made. However, I will not do that because it is important that the Minister should reply to the debate. The hon. Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle) was more constructive than ever. If ever there was an occasion when a sinner repenteth on the question of sports boycotts, it occurred today and long may that continue.

I want to refer to only one point. My hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) would not allow me to intervene when he wanted to know who should control boxing. As a steward of British Boxing Board of Control, I was about to answer his point. However, it will be sufficient for me to participate in the meeting with my hon. Friend the Minister and educate them both.

It has been an extremely good debate. Long may we have debates of this kind. I once more congratulate the Minister on initiating it.

2.14 pm

Mr. Key: With the leave of the House, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I should like to reply to the debate.

When my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) first addressed the House as Secretary of State for National Heritage, he made it absolutely clear that he intended that the purpose of the Department of National Heritage should be to improve the quality of life for everybody wherever they are, and to improve access to sport, and that he would always do his best to ensure that it did not become a matter of party political wrangling. He stood true to those objectives, as do my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I.

This has been a remarkable debate. It has also been well informed. It proves again that the House of Commons is the best university in the country. There is always somebody who is a great expert on whatever happens to be under discussion at the time, and that has certainly been true of this debate.

Fourteen hon. Members, including myself, have contributed to the debate. The hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) made a very challenging speech and I shall attempt to answer the questions that he raised. My hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle), who spoke wisely about expenditure in sport, has spent all his time in the House as an expert on sport. The hon. Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Davies) made a distinguished speech. I shall try to pick up some of his points, particularly those about television and sport. My hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Dr. Spink) spoke enthusiastically, energetically and passionately about smoking and health, as well as about other issues, including swimming, which are important to his constituency.

The hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) also spoke. We perfectly understand his disappearance to Inverness. We sympathise with him in his long travel and hope that he arrives there. If it is on skis, what a wonderful entry it will make for him. The hon. and learned Gentleman made important points, some of which I responded to at the time. My hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) spoke with great enthusiasm about the lottery, and I was grateful for that.

The hon. Member for Heywood and Middleton (Mr. Callaghan), with whom I spent a happy time on the Select Committee on Education, Science and Arts from 1984, spoke with passion about Hopwood Hall college and the role that that institution hoped to achieve. He laid down a challenge which will be hard to resist when I am in the north-west, which I am glad to say I regularly am. I shall certainly bear in mind his kind invitation and weigh carefully the arguments that he laid before the House.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) spoke with great sprightliness about physical fitness, and she is a fine example to all of us, if I may say so, on that subject. She also spoke with passion about education being about not only mental education but moral and physical education as well. The hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) spoke about the Saints. I give him the assurance that he seeks. I will indeed have another look at whether there is anything that I can do, possibly in conjunction with my hon. Friend the Minister in the Department of the Environment with responsibility for planning. We will see how we might be able to help.

My hon. Friend the Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Mr. Deva) spoke warmly of the Bees and wider issues. I am grateful to him for having such a broad knowledge of the issues which confront the Government and indeed all those concerned with sport.

The hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) spoke passionately, too, about boxing. When I was 10 years old, I won the school boxing cup. If you look closely at my nose, Mr. Deputy Speaker, you will discover that it has a slight bend at one point. However, that was caused not in the boxing ring but in the swimming bath by hitting the bottom rather too fast.

My hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) mentioned the importance of policing at all our sporting events. It does not matter whether one goes to football matches or to grand prix races, one finds that the police are always there with the other emergency services. If it were not for them, and often for the services of the St. John Ambulance Brigade and of other voluntary organisations, sporting events would be more dangerous and less easy to control. I join my hon. Friend in thanking all those dedicated men and women for their contribution to sport.

The hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Betts) spoke with great knowledge about Sheffield and its sporting contribution. I must say in response to his challenge to join him, whether in the gymnasium or elsewhere, that from looking at him he clearly has absolutely no stamina and I would go many rounds further than him in almost any sport. But that is enough of that.

The hon. Gentleman made important comments which I shall deal with later. I am well aware of Sheffield's investment in sporting facilities. I have seen them and they are impressive. Sheffield is fortunate to have them. The Sports Council is working on initiatives to designate certain cities as cities of sport which would be equipped to host international sporting events. I urge the hon. Gentleman to encourage Sheffield city council to make its views known to the Sports Council if it has not already done so. We cannot ignore the issue. We have many fine international sporting venues and we need to take the initiative forward constructively.

We have had a constructive debate. It has been a breath of fresh air in ventilating an issue about which so many people feel passionately. I sometimes have to point out to my colleagues in the Government that, whereas they scan the column inches, we scan the number of pages which deal with all the issues that confront the Department of National Heritage every day. Therefore, I look forward to many more debates on sport.

I noted the comments of the hon. Member for Tooting about the need to have debates on specific sporting issues. Of course, it will be up to the business managers to decide whether we should have an annual debate on sport, but they will have noted the success of today's debate. I shall make it clear that I wish to have more debates on sport. It is significant that today's debate was the first debate on sport that the Conservative Government have initiated in Government time.

Funding has occupied a great deal of time. I paid tribute earlier to the role of local authorities. Several hon. Members called for additional resources. As my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North said, it is too easy to call for extra money. We need to be sure that the money currently devoted to sport is well used. As I said, compulsory competitive tendering has helped local authorities. City challenge has also targeted money to inner-city areas. My predecessor published a document on sport in inner cities. I recognise that it is crucial, for social reasons and to the health of people who live in the inner cities, that we do what we can to encourage sport and the provision of sporting facilities.

Of course, I am aware that the best local authorities are good. I have met them; I have been there; I have seen it. However, there is some way to go before we have a general assurance of value for money. That is not a party-political comment. I have seen the good and the bad under all types of political control and none. We must be sure that clear objectives are set to which resources are applied economically and efficiently.

My hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North also referred to the need to control administrative costs in sport. We shall examine carefully the future control of administrative costs in the new United Kingdom sports commission and the sports council for England. That will occur as part of the current national structural reforms.

I welcome the broad support of the House for the current reforms. It may help if I make a few remarks about the role of the United Kingdom Sports Council. The council was not conceived as a supranational talking shop with a nebulous co-ordinating role. It has clear functions to lead on United Kingdom-wide strategic issues, especially performance and excellence, to encourage rationalisation of sport and the voluntary sector and to promote the United Kingdom's interests internationally.

The precise split of the resources of the present Sports Council between the successor bodies is a matter on which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State awaits proposals from the Sports Council. We expect the United Kingdom sports commission to have the resources necessary to do the job properly, based on the functions which the Government have specified in the policy document "Sport and Active Recreation".

The Manchester bid for the Olympic games has been widely welcomed on both sides of the House. In view of the comments of several hon. Members, I give a further assurance, if any such assurance were necessary—I guess that it is as we approach the public spending round—that resources are available for the Olympic velodrome and arena and for the acquisition and preparation of the stadium site. Let us not be in any doubt about that.

On tax issues, although we welcome the valuable contribution made by sporting bodies, successive Governments have believed that it would not be right to single them out for special privileges which equally worthy organisations do not enjoy. Many sports organisations are unincorporated associations, which means that they pay no tax on income from subscriptions and many funding-raising activities, nor do they pay any tax on gratis donations. That tax treatment recognises that many of their activities are not undertaken for commercial reasons.

To extend tax exemption to activities carried out on a commercial basis, even though profits are intended to be used for the benefit of sport, would raise wider questions of fairness to taxpayers. Furthermore, it would put sports organisations in a more favourable position than charities, which are exempt on trading income only, in limited circumstances. Any change in capital allowances is a matter for Treasury Ministers to consider.

The Opposition spokesman, the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde, mentioned Great Barr grant-maintained school in Birmingham. Sadly, it has become apparent that agreement is unlikely to be reached between the school and Birmingham city council about the dual use of facilities on that site. The matter has been referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education for determination. I am sure that the House will understand that in those circumstances I cannot comment on the merits of the case. The standard procedure for determination incorporates a period of consultation with the local authority and the Education Assets Board.

Mr. Pendry: Will the Under-Secretary assure the House that he will have an input into that determination with his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education?

Mr. Key: Yes, I shall raise that issue with my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Schools when I see him in the near future. Each case must be considered on its merits. There is no standard timetable, but I shall inquire from my hon. Friend about the progress being made.

On playing fields, I appreciate the case for automatic eligibility and that playing fields should remain for the benefit of the community in perpetuity. The case-by-case approach means that each application can be considered on its merits. Nearly 3,000 playing fields or recreation grounds in England are registered as charities. We must continue the case-by-case approach.

I have been asked what the Government are doing to help the National Playing Fields Association and the Sports Council to prevent the loss of recreational land. The Sports Council's grant-in-aid settlement from the Government in 1991-92 included £500,000 to enable the establishment of a register of recreational land. Work is in hand on the register, with the Sports Council, the National Playing Fields Association and the Central Council of Physical Recreation as co-sponsors. The register should be up and running by May 1993.

In addition, planning policy guidance note No.17, issued by the Department of the Environment, emphasised the importance that the Government place on the need for recreational land and open spaces. It asks local authorities to take full account of the community's need for recreational space, to consider the long-term need for playing fields before allowing them to be developed, and to consult sporting bodies when planning for sport and recreation.

On the sale of television rights, I was asked why the Government have not intervened to prevent live premier league matches from being shown exclusively on BSkyB. Although live screening is restricted to BSkyB, more football is probably being shown on terrestrial channels —including live matches—than ever before. The BBC has the right to show extended highlights of premier league matches in "Match of the Day." Live FA cup and European cup matches and highlights of international matches are also shown on terrestrial television. For those who are interested in international football, Channel 4 regularly televises Italian serie A matches on Sunday afternoons.

The Broadcasting Act 1990 sets out the framework for the coverage of listed sporting events, which may not be provided on pay-per-view terms. Some hon. Members suggested that that should be extended. The events that are covered are cricket test matches involving England, the Derby, the FIFA world cup finals, the FA cup final, the grand national, the Olympic games, the finals weekend of the Wimbledon tennis championships and any days that the championship overruns, and the Scottish FA cup final. The list does not include live coverage of football games apart from the FA cup final, the Scottish FA cup final and the world cup tournament; nor has there ever been any suggestion that it should.

The community use of sports facilities, the dual use issue, is being addressed in the Education Bill which has just been placed before the House. I hope that that anomaly can be cleared up without delay. There is no doubt——

It being half-past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

EUROPEAN LEGISLATION

Ordered,

That Mr. Jimmy Wray be discharged from the Select Committee on European Legislation and that Mr. Jimmy Boyce be added to the Committee.—[Mr. Arbuthnot.]

M20 (Junctions 3–5)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Arbuthnot.]

2.30 pm

Sir John Stanley (Tonbridge and Malling): I fear that this week I am not the favourite son of the Department of Transport—perhaps not in any week—because yesterday I voiced my concerns about the Department's rail policies as they may affect my constituents and today my attention is directed to roads with special reference to the widening of the M20 between junctions 3 and 5. My hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic, who is in his place, has, I am sure, a glowing account in his brief of the Department's conduct of that widening scheme. I shall start by giving him a view from the Tonbridge and Malling end of the telescope.

The Department's critical mistake occurred when the scheme was announced in the May 1989 White Paper "Roads for Prosperity". The announcement was not accompanied by any detail of how the scheme would be carried out. As a result, the maximum possible blight was created. The Department should have carried out its own internal design work. If it had done so even a relatively cursory examination would have led it to the conclusion that it eventually reached—that the widening scheme would have to be carried out essentially within the boundaries of the existing line of the motorway as it is heavily built up on both sides. If the Department of Transport had announced that at the outset, the incidence of blight would have been fractional compared with what has taken place.

Having announced its intention to widen without specifying how, the Department found that it had to serve hundreds of statutory blight notices along the length of this section of motorway. Following the service of those notices the Department acquired, or is in the process of acquiring, about 300 properties along the motorway. At least three quarters of those properties would not have been acquired if a different procedure had been followed. As a result I estimate that about £25 million of taxpayers' money has been unnecessarily spent.

I referred that expenditure to the Comptroller and Auditor General and I am glad to say that Sir John Bourn is currently examining the Department's handling of public money in connection with this widening scheme. I look forward to his conclusions. Unhappily that is not the end of the story and the acute difficulties continue, because the Department is trying to get its money back. It is trying to get its money back by securing vacant possession of the hundreds of houses that it now owns and, by getting vacant possession of houses that are the subject of short-term lettings, it is creating a serious homeless problem which has considerable ramifications for the local housing authority.

I sincerely hope that lessons for the future have been learnt from that scheme. One lesson that I beg the Department to learn is that when it proposes widening schemes in future, they should be done on a basis that minimises the statutory blight created.

My hon. Friend will be aware that when statutory blight is created, particularly if it is on a large scale, secondary blight will often be created alongside the area of statutory blight. That is exactly what has happened in my constituency. Those living immediately adjacent to the blighted area find it impossible to sell their homes because people are understandably reluctant to buy property immediately adjacent to many properties owned by the Department of Transport—properties which may not be well maintained and in which maintenance standards may be falling, and property that is all on short-term lettings.

The Government have dealt with the problem in their Planning and Compensation Act 1991. I wish to make a positive comment on that point. My constituents were afraid that the Secretary of State for Transport would not make proper use—or would make no use whatever—of his discretionary acquisition powers under section 62. I am glad to say that that fear has proved to be wholly unfounded and, as I know from the written answer that I received earlier this week, the Secretary of State has now authorised the acquisition of 18 properties under section 62 and is considering acquiring a further 32. Therefore, he is dealing in a proper, compassionate and sensitive way with some heart rending cases of people who are facing chonic ill health—in some cases terminal illness, mental breakdown, marriage breakdown and so on—and who have been unable to move house when they were desperate to do so. I am sure that my right hon. Friend will continue to exercise his discretionary powers in a compassionate and sympathetic way with the remaining cases.

I wish to put four specific points to my hon. Friend. The first is in the critical area of homelessness that is now being created by the Department of Transport endeavouring to get vacant possession of those hundreds of houses now in the Department's ownership. The difficulty being created is the difference of legal view between the Department of Transport and the housing authority under the Tonbridge and Malling borough council regarding the statutory homeless position that has arisen. I have raised the matter with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State who, in a recent letter to me, said:

> "it is by no means certain that displaced tenants will necessarily place a rehousing liability on the local authority even if they apply to them for accommodation".

The legal view of the Tonbridge and Malling council—a view shared by the Housing Corporation and officials within the Department of the Environment—is that some statutory liabilities under the homeless persons legislation will certainly fall on the Tonbridge and Malling borough council. They will be short-term rehousing liabilities and, almost certainly, a degree of long-term responsibility for rehousing. That being so, I would regard it as unacceptable if central Government sought to stand aside from the homelessness problem and its financial implications for which they are wholly responsible.

Central Government, through the Department of Transport, created the blight in the first place. Central Government acquired the houses, and have decided to let them. Central Government have sought vacant possession of the houses and have asked the tenants to go. Those tenants are left facing homelessness as a result. It is fairly and squarely a central Government responsibility and, in my book, it is also fairly and squarely a central Government financial liability. I say to my hon. Friend the Minister and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in the starkest terms that I expect central Government to discharge their financial responsibilities towards Tonbridge and Malling borough council.

Secondly, there were difficulties with the management of the properties in the early stages. A small minority of unsuitable and disruptive tenants were put into the Department of Transport houses. I thought that those management difficulties had largely been overcome, but I am not sure that they have.

[Sir John Stanley]

I recently received a letter from a constituent complaining strongly about the menagerie of animals being kept by the Department of Transport's tenant in the adjacent house. I took it up with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. When he replied, he confirmed that four dogs, one of which had to be put down as it was dangerous, and two hunting ferrets had been kept in the property. My constituent, who lived next door, had a nine-month-old baby and both the dogs and ferrets had been escaping into her property. I do not think that it is particularly satisfactory to have a nine-month-old baby and ferrets close together, and I trust that my hon. Friend the Minister will look closely at the need to tighten up and get a grip on the management of the large number of Department of Transport properties.

Thirdly, when the road widening scheme was originally announced in 1989, Department of Transport officials said that they hoped that the scheme would be completed before the channel tunnel opened in 1993. We are now only a few months away from 1993, and nowhere near even starting the construction of the road widening scheme.

In 1991, my hon. Friend's predecessor, Mr. Christopher Chope—who is sadly no longer a Member of Parliament—said that it was hoped to start construction of the widening scheme in 1995, and to complete it two years later. Is it still intended to start construction in 1995? I earnestly hope that it will start soon, particularly as I have many constituents with a legal case for injurious affection compensation against the Department of Transport under the Land Compensation Act 1973 for depreciation in the value of their houses caused by the scheme. Under the provisions of that Act it is not possible to secure compensation until one year after the new highway scheme comes into operation. Therefore, the longer the delay in commencing the scheme, the longer it will take my constituents to receive compensation to which they are legally entitled.

Fourthly, I raised the environmental aspects of the widening scheme in the two previous Adjournment debates on the subject that I have requested. When I raised the matter in the debate on 17 January this year, the then Minister, Mr. Christopher Chope, assured me:

> "the road will be constructed to a very high standard and the most modern noise attenuation measures will be included in the scheme."—Official Report, 17 January 1992; Vol. 201, c. 1291–92.]

I warmly welcome that commitment, but may we have more detail on how it will be discharged? As I said, the road passes through residential areas and noise quietening will be of the utmost importance.

In June, I wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport urging that consideration be given to the use of porous asphalt for the surface of that section of the motorway. By mid-October, I had not received a reply, and so wrote him a further letter. I do not know whether he has replied in the past day or so, but, to the best of my knowledge, no such reply has yet reached me. Perhaps my hon. Friend the Minister has an answer for me this afternoon. I hope that the Department will consider seriously the use of porous asphalt. It is a quiet and safe material, and I warmly welcome the Department's change of policy in relation to its use.

Can my hon. Friend give me any more details today about what form of

will be use in connection with the widening scheme, and an assurance that, when those measures are developed and ready for discussion by the Department, there will be full and proper consultation with the local authority and local people?

I seek four specific assurances from my hon. Friend. First, I seek a clear assurance that central Government will discharge their financial responsibilities towards the housing authority in relation to the inescapable homeless persons expenditure that will follow from the Department's gaining vacant possession of the properties alongside the M20. Secondly, I seek an assurance that the management of the properties will be tightened up—and, I hope, improved. Thirdly, I hope that my hon. Friend will give me an assurance about the timetable and an assurance that the widening scheme will be proceeded with as quickly as possible so that my constituents can gain their injurious affection compensation. Finally, I hope that he will assure me that the earlier commitment that the would be adopted will be fully implemented.

2.47 pm

The Minister for Roads and Traffic (Mr. Kenneth Carlisle): I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) on securing this Adjournment debate. The fact that it is his third such debate shows his care for his constituents, his deep concern about the matter and his determination that we should pursue all possible efforts to ensure that the road is built as carefully as possible for the benefit of his constituents and the travelling public. I take his comments very seriously, particularly those about blight and the way in which we tackle and plan such roads. Wherever we can learn lessons, we must do so. The widening scheme was one of the first proposals of its kind and since it was devised we have been learning lessons and applying them to schemes that we are now introducing. I am nevertheless grateful to my right hon. Friend, and I respect his efforts on behalf of his constituents. He is quite right to pursue the matter.

I want first to give a general view of the roads in the area because it is important to see the matter in a strategic context. My right hon. Friend will be aware of the Government's commitment to a fully improved M20 which, with the proposed A20 route, will provide the main high-quality road artery connecting the channel tunnel, Folkestone and Dover, the M25/M26, London and the rest of the United Kingdom road network.

Much progress has been made. The "missing link" of the M20 between Maidstone and Ashford was completed and opened to traffic in May 1991. Work on the road between junctions 5 and 8 started in July 1991 and is well on target for completion before the channel tunnel opens in 1993. Good progress is being made on all three contracts for the construction of the new A20 between Folkestone and Dover, which also will be completed in time for the tunnel opening.

That leaves the Department's proposals for widening the M20 between junctions 3 and 5, which were announced in October 1991. As my right hon. Friend knows, publicity brochures were widely circulated in the locality of the proposed works and a local exhibition of plans was held. The comments that were received by the Department are being taken into account in the detailed development of the scheme, which is now under way. Subject to statutory procedures, we hope to start work in 1995. It will take two years to build. We still hope to stick to that timetable.

I understand my right hon. Friend's frustration about the time taken to bring the scheme to this stage, and I truly sympathise with his constituents who have suffered uncertainty during this period. One of the great problems of building roads is that it creates blight and uncertainty. It is one of our prime tasks and duties to limit that as far as possible and to offer compensation where we cannot do so.

We must, however, take time in preparing our roads. We must investigate properly the right design for a motorway widening scheme and must develop the project with much care and attention to detail, especially where it goes through an urban area. Many schemes and options were investigated, including a number of ways of widening the road and even a new off-line solution. My right hon. Friend rightly said that where it is proposed to build a road through an urban area it behoves us to be more precise at an earlier early stage. That is a useful suggestion.

Most of the options that we considered would have required substantial land acquisition, and in the end the preferred scheme requires the loss of only a few homes along the motorway. Nevertheless, because of the uncertainty that then existed about how the widening would be implemented, it was only right that people living within the 67 m band, who needed to sell their houses but could not do so because of the blighting effects of the scheme, should have been able to require the Department to acquire the properties from them under the planning and blight rules. Not to have allowed that would have penalised unfairly the many local householders who had genuine reasons for wanting to move during the period when the scheme options were being evaluated.

Some regard the 67 m band as too restrictive, but a line must be drawn somewhere, and however one frames the rules, there will always be cases that fall just outside them. We tried to be as generous as possible in interpreting the rules.

My reply today to the two questions tabled by my right hon. Friend explains that, to date, we have acquired 264 dwellings under the statutory blight provisions. A further 28 are in the process of acquisition, following acceptance of blight notices. Acceptance of blight notices within the 67 m band effectively ceased on announcement of the scheme's proposals last October, but section 62 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 embodied discretionary powers which, for the first time, enabled us to acquire at this stage property within and outside the 67 m planning blight zone which we expect to be seriously affected by the widening.

Those new powers enable the Department to assist certain carefully defined categories of householders who wish to move but who are not eligible for consideration under the planning and blight provisions. As I announced in the House in January, the Department is now able to consider individual applications for acquisitions under the new powers and we have already agreed to acquire some 18 properties. Further applications are being considered on their merits and will be dealt with as quickly as possible. I am grateful to my right hon. Friend for his support for that compensation and these proposals.

My right hon. Friend was rightly concerned about the future of the houses currently in the Department's ownership which will be surplus to requirements for our proposed scheme and about arrangements for the rehousing of the tenants living in them when their tenancies expire. I confirm that the majority of the properties that have been acquired will not be needed for the scheme. My officials have been considering the timing and method of disposal of these surplus properties. I appreciate the concern of the local housing authority, Tonbridge and Malling borough council, that it could be faced with a major rehousing problem. I can give my right hon. Friend the assurance that the Department is in close liaison with the council about the programme of disposals. Following a number of meetings with officials of the council, the Department of the Environment, the Housing Corporation and the district valuer, the Department is working up a strategy to minimise the potential for homelessness.

My right hon. Friend referred to the letter dated 30 September that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to him and said that the Department and the council were in some conflict in their understanding of the situation. I believe that my right hon. Friend's letter clearly sets out our view, but if there is still misunderstanding, that is unsatisfactory and we need to sort out exactly what the position is, and we should do that. Our aim is also to avoid homelessness wherever possible.

As to disposal of surplus vacant property, we have already made an encouraging start despite the downturn in the housing market. Purchasers have been secured for 25 properties, two of which have already been sold. A further batch is under offer and if not sold will be put up for auction in December. Our objective is to dispose of our remaining stock in a phased, orderly manner extending tenancies where necessary to avoid homelessness and to secure value for money.

I take what my right hon. Friend said about suitable tenants because there is, as always, a problem and we need to work hard to ensure that the right people go into the houses as tenants.

My right hon. Friend also asked about noise reduction measures for the widened motorway, with particular reference to the use of a blacktop porous asphalt rather than a concrete surface. As a result of my announcement on 29 July on road surface noise, we shall not be using a concrete surface. We may use a blacktop surface, but I take what he said about porous asphalt. We can do far more than we have to surface our roads in a way that makes them quieter and to make more barriers against noise. I feel that it is one of my prime duties to make progress on this. However, we are slightly concerned about porous ashalt where roads are heavily used by traffic, especially by heavy goods vehicles, because we are worried about the lifespan of porous asphalt under such conditions. I shall certainly look at this carefully, but I cannot give any commitment.

As to other measures to reduce noise, we have employed landscape consultants who are looking to landscape the road carefully to make it as attractive as possible within that narrow corridor. We shall be looking at every way possible to reduce noise. We are examining various barriers such as those used on the continent to see whether we can devise an effective scheme to reduce noise. There will be help with insulation where houses meet the regulations. There will be much time to consult and consider how we should proceed.

I hope that I have answered the points raised by my right hon. Friend. I respect the efforts that he makes on behalf of his constituents with great tenacity. We shall do our best to learn all the necessary lessons. We are keen to consult local peole wherever possible. I know that he will keep me in touch with their views. We shall do everything possible to engineer this road quietly but in a way that will enable it to cope with the heavy traffic without too much disturbance to his constituents.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute to Three o'clock.

EDUCATION

Education Expenditure (London)

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how the cost of education provision has changed within inner London in comparison to those costs for outer London between the financial years preceding, including and succeeding the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Forth: The latest year for which information on local education authorities' actual spending is available is 1989-90. That was the last year of the Inner London education authority. In the three years to 1989-90, London LEAs' net recurrent expenditure on education was as shown in the table.

LEAs' net recurrent expenditure[1] on education

Year	Inner London £ million	[2]Outer London £ million
1987-88	1,103	1,202
1989-90	1,085	1,485

[1] Net recurrent expenditure includes total expenditure other than capital financing costs, less income other than from specific Government grants. Information is taken from LEAs' returns to the Department of the Environment of their actual spending.

[2] Excluding the following LEAs, which did not complete returns: 1987-88, Ealing and Haringey; 1988-89, Haringey; 1989-90, Haringey and Hounslow.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he intends to respond to ethical concerns over the use of genetically modified organisms as food.

Mr. Gummer: I have asked the Reverend John Polkinghorne, president of Queen's College Cambridge, to chair a study into this and various related issues. The other members of the group will be Professor Derek Burke, vice chancellor of the University of East Anglia, Professor Brian Heap, director of research at the AFRC Institute of Animal Physiology and Genetic Research, Mrs. Harriet Kimbell, vice-chairman of the Consumers Association, Mr. Richard Callaghan, controller of ASDA's technical division and the Reverend Arthur Peacocke, formerly warden of the Society of Ordained Scientists.

The study's terms of reference will be:

to consider future trends in the production of transgenic organisms; to consider the moral and ethical concerns (other than those relating to food safety) that may arise from the use of food products derived from production programmes involving such organisms; and to make recommendations.

Recently, we have seen significant developments towards the use of genetic modification in food production. This technology has the potential to benefit farmers, food producers and consumers by extending the range, quality and types of food available. However, the Government are also aware that these developments raise ethical and moral concerns.

Therefore, we thought it right to give early consideration to these issues. The new advisory group will consider likely future trends in the use of genetic modification in food production and the concerns that might arise from the consumption of food from such programmes, and recommend how those concerns might be addressed.

I believe that the issues with which the committee is concerned need to be widely debated and I know the study team will be inviting views from all interested groups and individuals. I have asked the study team to report to me within a year.

ENVIRONMENT

Property Services Agency

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to offer PSA Projects for sale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to his reply, 22 May 1992, c. 273]: I hope to exchange contracts with the selected bidder for PSA Projects shortly. Parliamentary approval of new expenditure on the main sale expenses will be sought in a winter supplementary estimate for the Property Services Agency of the Department of the Environment: PSA Services Vote—class VIII, vote 12. However, since completion may take place before the House has voted to approve the supplementary estimate, any money needed to enable the vendor to complete the sale will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

County Hall, London

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors will be considered in deciding the future of county hall; and when the matter falls to be determined.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1992, c. 197]: I have today written to the chairman of the London residuary body withdrawing the direction that I issued to that body on 22 July, prohibiting it from taking any steps in relation to the sale or disposal of county hall without first obtaining my consent.

That direction was issued for the purpose of giving the London School of Economics and Political Science the opportunity of submitting a bid for the county hall site. It was, however, one of the conditions that I agreed with the director of the LSE, before issuing that direction, that any proposal to acquire county hall should be endorsed by the Universities Funding Council as required by the rules that govern universities' property transactions. The Universities Funding Council has written to the LSE today that it did not feel able to endorse its proposal. The Government have therefore concluded that any bid by the LSE for county hall would involve a significant and unacceptable call on public funds.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Cultural Heritage

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage under what criteria areas of cultural heritage are to be classified as being areas of European significance, under the proposed article 128 of the treaty of Rome.

Mr. Brooke: Criteria will be agreed over time at meetings of the Council after the normal process of consultation among EC member states, the Commission and other interested parties has taken place.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Key: There is no specific financial provision for deregulation in the Department of National Heritage for the current financial year. This Department is fully committed to the Government's deregulation policy and will keep this under review in the policy areas for which it is responsible.

National Lottery

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what evidence his Department has gathered on the effects of national lotteries in other countries on public funding of the arts, sports and charities.

Mr. Brooke: Many countries have lotteries and the effects on public funding vary accordingly to the policies of those countries' Governments. The position set out in the United Kingdom Government's White Paper, "A National Lottery: Raising Money for Good Causes" was that > "the Government will not make any case by case reduction in conventional expenditure programmes to take account of awards from the lottery proceeds".

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what research his Department has undertaken or plans to undertake into the effects of a national lottery on (a) donations to charities, (b) small lotteries and (c) low income families.

Mr. Brooke: The Department has commissioned consultants to carry out research and advise on a number of aspects of the national lottery, including the matters raised by the hon. Member.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the dual viability of the proposed national lottery and the premium bond prize draw; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The products offered by these two schemes are very different. Premium bonds are a savings instrument. We expect both schemes to be viable.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish the contents of submissions he has received on the subject of the national lottery; and if he will place copies in the Library.

Mr. Brooke: I have no plans to do so.

Television Licences

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will review the code of practice governing the behaviour of television licence officers in respect of the carrying out of their work with full regard for courtesy and crime prevention.

Mr. Brooke: Under the Broadcasting Act 1990 responsibility for issuing TV licences and enforcing the licensing requirement was transferred to the BBC with effect from 1 April 1991. The question should accordingly be re-directed to the secretary of the BBC.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to review the regulations surrounding concessionary television licences for those resident in accommodation for short and long-term physically and mentally disabled persons.

Mr. Brooke: We have no plans to review the regulations governing the concessionary licence scheme.

"A Vision for Vauxhall Gardens"

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to "A Vision for Vauxhall Gardens" to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Key: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the Exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 16 to 20 November 1992.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total sum given by cigarette manufacturers in sponsorship for (a) sport and (b) other cultural activities in the latest year for which figures are available; and what proportion (a) and (b) represent of the total sponsorship from non-government sources in each case.

Mr. Brooke: Sponsorship of sport in the United Kingdom by the tobacco industry was worth £7·630 million for the year ending 31 March 1991. The total value of sports sponsorship is estimated to be in excess of £200 million a year.

Annual business sponsorship of the arts, including corporate membership, was more than £57 million on 1990-91, the latest year for which firm figures are available. Neither the Department nor the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts holds information on spending on arts sponsorship by the tobacco industry.

EDUCATION

Adult Guidance Service

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the adult guidance service.

Mr. Forman: Guidance for adults is provided in a variety of ways, including by LEA's as part of the careers service and in the form of free-standing services. LEA's are building up links with TECs in the provision of these services. We hope that LEA services will play an important part in the Government's assessment and guidance credits initiative, announced in the White Paper "People, Jobs and Opportunity".

Discretionary Grants

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will require local education authorities to make education discretionary grants with regard to the further education of residents within the local education authority's area at a college or university outside its area, in cases where the course undertaken by the student is not available within the authority's own area.

Mr. Forman: It is for local education authorities to decide their own policies when exercising their discretionary powers. My right hon. Friend has no power to require authorities to exercise their discretion in particular ways.

National Curriculum Technology

Mr. Malone: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) whether, after the review of national curriculum technology has been completed, the definition of construction materials as contained in the present order governing national curriculum technology shall still apply;

(2) if he will consider the widening of the definition of construction materials contained in the present order governing national curriculum technology.

Mr. Forth: The independent review of national curriculum technology aims to clarify the learning requirements for the subject. It would be inappropriate to comment until my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and for Wales have received the review group's report and published joint proposals for consultation. A full statement will be made in due course.

Spelling Standards

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to make the grant of mandatory awards for university students conditional upon individual achievement of satisfactory spelling standards.

Mr. Forman: No. My right hon. Friend has recently reminded the higher education institutions of their responsibility to require appropriate entry standards—including standards in basic skills—and to make those clear to schools and potential students.

Departmental Objectives

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Education pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Harwich of 15 July, Official Report, column 726 when he expects to complete the review of these objectives of each branch and division within his Department; and if he will set these objectives out separately for each division and branch in the Official Report when his review is complete.

Mr. Forman: I have written to my hon. Friend. A copy of my reply is available in the Library.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Forman: Deregulation issues are dealt with within current resources: the Department is responsible for very few regulations affecting businesses.

Rudolf Steiner Waldorf Education

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received regarding the funding of Rudolf Steiner Waldorf education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received 120 letters from hon. Members and 20 letters from others interested in Steiner education. A deputation led by Mr. Brien Masters, chairman of the Steiner Schools Foundation was also received by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education—my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman)—in September. Steiner schools offer a distinctive approach to education and one which is clearly valued by parents and supporters of the schools. They thus contribute to the richness and diversity which is the hallmark of independent school provision in this country. There is, however, absolutely no justification for supporting this particular group of independent schools from public funds either now or in the future.

Schools, Greenwich

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to be able to approve the application for capital approval for extra forms of entry for St. Thomas More and St. Paul's schools in the London borough of Greenwich.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to be able to announce his decision on these proposals within the next few weeks.

School Budgets

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out for each local education authority the percentage of the aggregate schools budget represented by (a) the potential schools budget, (b) GM-related expenditure and (c) the general schools budget in the most recent year for which information is available.

Mr. Forth: The tables set out, for each authority, the aggregated schools budget as a proportion of the potential schools budget, and other information relating to the extent to which resources are retained for spending by the authority and the extent to which resources are allocated to schools on the basis of their pupil numbers. Figures for spending on local authority schools of a type which governors of grant-maintained schools have to make themselves could only be calculated for all local education authorities at disproportionate cost. I will write to my hon. Friend with a detailed explanation of the factors involved.

Footnotes to table showing the extent of delegation.

1. All 109 local education authorities (LEAs) in England have LMS schemes in operation and are required to publish budget statements showing planned expenditure, under section 42 of the Education Reform Act. The LEAs are ranked, according to the percentage of funds delegated to schools, with those delegating more at the top of the ranking order. Schemes for the 12 inner London LEAs other than Westminster came into operation later than the rest, on 1 April 1992. These LEAs are listed separately.

2. The potential schools budget (PSB) consists of the major part of the general schools budget (GSB)—ie the GSB less planned expenditure on certain excepted items: capital expenditure; expenditure supported by central government grants; and expenditure on school meals, home to school transport and transitional exceptions (eg grounds maintenance). The amount which the schools themselves decide how to spend, as a proportion of the PSB, is a percentage used as an indicator of the extent to which LEAs have delegated resources to their schools. A new requirement from April 1993 (1995 for the 12 inner London authorities listed separately) is that this percentage should be a minimum of 85 per cent. The percentage for the previous year 1991-92 is given in brackets. Where a figure is not given in brackets the LMS scheme was not in operation during that year.

3. The proportion of the PSB held back by each LEA (ie not delegated to schools) expressed as a cash amount per pupil—rounded to the nearest £10. LEAs are not required to state the price base used in their estimates and no adjustment has therefore been made: comparisons between LEAs should consequently take into account that a different price base may have been used. Pupil numbers have in most cases been taken from LEAs' section 42 statements.

4. Planned expenditure on central administration—one of the discretionary exceptions included in the PSB—expressed as a percentage of the PSB. The previous year's percentage is given in brackets. Following the publication of accounting guidance by CIPFA this year, LEAs may have changed from last year their method of calculating central administration expenditure. In addition, not all LEAs have followed CIPFA's quidance this year. Consequently, there may not be a consistent basis for comparisons between years and between LEAs.

5. Planned expenditure on central administration expressed as a cash amount per pupil—rounded to the nearest £10. The qualifications on price base and the basis of LEAs' calculations of central expenditure (see notes 3 and 4) apply to these figures as well.

NB The percentages stated may differ from the percentages calculated by individual LEAs because of the effects of rounding.

Footnotes to table showing the extent of pupil-led funding.

1. The LEAs are ranked according to the proportion of funds allocated to schools on the basis of pupil numbers and ages, with those allocating a greater percentage of pupil-led funding at the top of the ranking order.

2. The aggregated schools budget (ASB) is that part of the potential schools budget which is delegated to the school level. The current requirement is that at least 75 per cent. of an LEA's ASB is based on pupil numbers and ages. From April 1993 (1995 for the inner London authorities which only started LMS this year) the minimum percentage will be raised to 80 per cent. (but that will include any pupil-led funding allocated in respect of special needs which does not currently count towards the 75 per cent. minimum). The percentage of pupil-led funding in 1991-92 is given in brackets. Where a figure is not given in brackets the LMS scheme was not in operation last year. All figures are derived from LEA's published budget statements, but the percentages stated may differ from the percentages calculated by individual LEAs because of the effects of rounding and other adjustments.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that local management of schools' budgets fairly takes account of the extra costs to a school with long-term stable staffing.

Mr. Forth: Within the national local management of schools framework, LEA schemes may provide for small school budget shares to reflect actual staff costs for as long as the LEA considers necessary. LEAs may also extend the transitional period to larger schools which face exceptional difficulties because of higher than average salary costs. We have said that we will review the policy of funding teachers' salaries within LMS schemes. However, it remains our view that governors should be responsible and accountable for the financial implications of their decisions.

Examination Statistics

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a list of local education authorities in England in rank order by the percentage of pupils achieving five higher grade GCSEs in the last year for which information is available, showing in each case (a) that percentage and (b) the rank order position and percentage for each of the previous four years.

Mr. Forth: The attached table gives details of the estimated percentage of school leavers achieving five or more GCSE/O/CSE grades A-C in rank order. The latest available data based on a 10 per cent. sample of school leavers aggregated over three years—1988-89 to 1990-91—in order to reduce sampling errors. The aggregated figures for the earlier years are also shown.

Note: The figures used in this reply have been estimated from the School Examination Survey, formerly the School Leavers Survey. This survey is based on a 10 per cent. sample and therefore the estimated LEA figures have been aggregated over three years in order to reduce the effect of sampling errors.

Some local education authorities provide a substantial proportion of their A level teaching in tertiary or other establishments than secondary schools. The tables do not include statistics showing results arising from such provision.

Pre-school Education

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received concerning the standard spending assessment criteria for under-fives provision in Lancashire.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received letters from several hon. Members who represent Lancashire constituencies, including the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Ms. Anderson).

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of three and four-year-olds are in nursery education in Britain.

Mr. Forth: Nursery education in Wales and Scotland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland. Fifty-one per cent. of three and four-year-olds attended maintained and independent schools in England in January 1991. The figure for maintained schools alone was 48 per cent., that for maintained nursery schools and nursery classes of primary schools was 25 per cent.

Student Numbers

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has had from the Committee of Vice Chancellors and Principals concerning the real-terms increase in funding required to cope with growth in student numbers as regards (a) buildings, (b) plant and equipment, (c) academic and (d) non-academic staff.

Mr. Forman: My right hon. Friend received the CVCP's statement on the 1992 public expenditure survey which was published last May, covering all of these areas. The CVCP's views will be taken into account alongside advice from the Higher Education Funding Council for England and others.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consultations he has had, or intends to initiate, with statutory, religious, professional, charitable, and voluntary organisations whose current function or roles are of significance in the operation of the schools system, as presently in operation, prior to the publication of a Bill designed to implement the proposals described in Cm. 2021.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has already received some 850 responses to his White Paper proposals. He, his ministerial colleagues and his officials at the Department for Education have also held meetings with representatives of the local authority associations, the churches and other interested bodies. All these responses and comments will be carefully considered before the publication of a Bill.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his statement concerning the savings he expects to accrue from the reduction, or elimination, of claimed surplus places in schools, on page 57 of Cm. 2021, if he will state the approximate amount of actual expenditure he hopes to save, together with the relevant arithmetical calculations.

Mr. Forth: The Department is currently consulting LEAs on the scope for removing surplus places on the basis of its estimate that in 1991 there were up to 1·5 million surplus places in England. The costs associated with surplus places vary considerably according to the particular circumstances, and not all of them can practicably be removed. It is therefore not possible to provide the information requested at this stage.

School Reports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the local education authorities that issued a school report to parents of their child's progress at the end of the 1991-92 school year.

Mr. Forth: The duty to send all parents an annual written report on their child's progress rests with the head teachers of all maintained schools. In 1992, head teachers were required to send written annual reports in respect of all school pupils of, and above, compulsory school age.

School Sizes

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in the calculation of teaching space per pupil place in secondary schools, what add-on factor of space he requires to permit teaching of small classes or groups, minimum movement of staff or pupils, and flexibility in construction of the timetable.

Mr. Forth: The requirements as to minimum teaching area in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 apply to the school as a whole based on the number and age of the pupils. The only specific requirement for the disposition of this area relates to study and social accommodation for pupils who have attained the age of 16. The details of the organisation of the teaching area are a matter for the school. No minimum area standard is specified for the movement of staff or pupils but the regulations do require that school buildings shall be adequate for the "convenient passage of persons".

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will state the current area of floor space now constituting a place within each primary and secondary school, respectively, together with the minimum areas he expects or requires to be allocated to teaching, circulation, assembly, kitchen and eating, staff, storage, and convenience or other non-teaching space, as an actual proportion of floor space for both categories of school.

Mr. Forth: The minimum teaching areas for maintained and grant-maintained schools are set out in schedule 4 of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981. They are related to the number and age of pupils in the school. There are no statutory minimum area requirements for circulation, assembly, kitchen and eating, staff, storage or other non-teaching space, which are a matter for local discretion, subject to the general requirements of the regulations.

Mature Students

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations she has received about tuition fees and grant aid for mature students who withdrew from courses in the past, and who now wish to recommence further education; and if he will make a statement relating to award regulations.

Mr. Forman: My right hon. Friend receives representations from time to time on this matter. Under the present regulations, a mandatory award is not normally available for a second higher education course if a student has previously attended a higher education course of more than two years' duration with the help of an award. But, exceptionally, a student whose previous attendance did not exceed one term and seven weeks of a second term, or was at a long term residential adult education college, is eligible for another mandatory award. The regulations also allow a student to transfer with a mandatory award from one course to another, in certain circumstances. A student ineligible for a mandatory award may apply to his local authority for a discretionary award.

Religious Education

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 3 July, Official Report, column 713, what plans he has for funding the standing advisory committees for religious education, or their equivalents, if plans described in Cm. 2021, are implemented.

Mr. Forth: Under the proposals set out in the White paper, "Choice and Diversity" (Cm. 2021), local education authorities would remain responsible for establishing and funding standing advisory councils on religious education.

Higher Education

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will establish a pay review body for higher education academic staff.

Mr. Forman: As we have made clear on a number of occasions in the House and elsewhere, my right hon. Friend has no intention of establishing such a pay review body.

GCSE

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he requested Her Majesty's inspectorate of education to consider and report on the three aspects of the GCSE examinations in its recent report; and if he will indicate the date and nature of similar requests previously made by a Secretary of State and the reference of the relevant published report.

Mr. Forth: The recent report on GCSE examining standards in 1992 is the only published report by HMI on the conduct of GCSE examinations. It was not specifically commissioned by my right hon. Friend, but the previous Minister of State did ask HM inspectorate to monitor awarding procedures with especial care following concerns expressed by them in connection with the 1991 examinations.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what evidence he has as to the cost of providing each pupil with the Shakespearian texts he has added to the GCSE syllabuses; and how much extra he is allocating to schools to meet this expenditure.

Mr. Forth: The works of Shakespeare have traditionally been included in most GCSE English syllabuses.

My right hon. Friend, however, decided that 14-year-olds should be tested on their knowledge of a Shakespeare play—chosen from "Julius Caesar", "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "Romeo and Juliet"—in the first national curriculum tests of this age group in English in 1993. The plays selected were chosen in part because a supply of at least one of the chosen plays can be found in most schools.

Some schools may need to top up their current stock. In doing so, schools will be able to draw on the £15 million worth of schools' expenditure specifically on national curriculum books which the Government have supported through the 1992-1993 grants for education support and training programme.

Special Needs Pupils

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to introduce proposals to amend the Education Act 1981 in order specifically to state which authority has the responsibility for providing therapy back-up for special needs pupils.

Mr. Forth: The Department's circular 22/89 on "Assessments and Statements of Special Educational Needs: Procedures within the Education, Health and Social Services" contains guidance on the need for local education authorities to work closely with district health authorities and social services departments on the provision of non-educational services to pupils with special educational needs.

The addendum to circular 22/89, published in March 1992, offers further advice to authorities on responsibilities for the provision of speech therapy. I do not consider that any further clarification of the responsibility for providing speech and other therapy services is necessary.

A-Levels

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on his proposals to increase access to higher education for students unable to succeed at the A-level exams.

Mr. Forman: Universities and colleges are responsible for setting entry standards to ensure that students have the necessary intellectual competence to benefit from higher education. A-levels are traditional indicators of such competence, but they are by no means the only ones.

Institutions are becoming more prepared to consider qualifications other than A-levels and their Scottish equivalent. More than 20 per cent. of those entering full-time first degree courses in 1990 did so on the basis of such qualifications. We welcome such flexibility, and are promoting the development of vocational and other routes into higher education.

We are introducing general national vocational qualifications—GNVQs—which offer a broadly based preparation for work and an alternative ladder to higher education. GNVQs at level 3 will be as demanding as A-levels.

We have encouraged the development of access courses for mature students without traditional entry qualifications for higher education. There are now well over 1000 such courses.

Education Expenditure

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of the national income was spent on education in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Forman: The information requested is as follows:

Financial year	UK general Government expenditure on education as a percentage of GDP
1991-92[1]	5·0

[1] Estimated.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, in respect of determining the current expenditure limit on the basic needs building costs of a new secondary school place, what ratio is assumed between the notional number of pupils in the school and the actual pupil capacity in learning space at any one time which is the minimum necessary to ensure the essential flexibility required in a timetable for a fully occupied school meeting the requirements of the national curriculum.

Mr. Forth: In determining the distribution of annual capital guidelines to LEAs, allowance for the provision of new schools places is made on the basis of cost multipliers. These reflect the average cost of providing a new school place. They are based on actual LEA building projects, which are themselves subject to the space provision requirements of the school premises regulations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what proposals he has to obtain relief for British business men whose firms have suffered from the freezing of Iraqi assets held in the United Kingdom;

(2) what action he intends to take to deal with the release of Iraqi funds held in the United Kingdom for (a) the settlement of United Kingdom creditors' claims in respect of legitimate trade with Iraq prior to the imposition of sanctions and (b) the financing of trade in goods not embargoed under United Nations Security Council resolutions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Nations Security Council Resolution 778 provides for the temporary sequestration of certain unencumbered frozen Iraqi assets to be paid into a UN-administered account to fund UN operations in Iraq and to provide interim funding for the UN compensation commission and fund. The resolution expressly forbids the release of assets for the financing of trade in goods not embargoed, except to the sub-account of the UN escrow account or directly to the United Nations for humanitarian activities in Iraq.

British companies may claim from the compensation fund for direct losses as a result of Iraq's invasion and occupation of Kuwait. Losses resulting from the operation of the UN embargo and related measures are not within the scope of the compensation commission. The same is true of debts and obligations of Iraq arising prior to 2 August 1990, which should be pursued through the normal mechanisms.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that the essential aim of the British Government's action in the post-Gulf war situation should be the establishment of peace and democracy in Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We aim to ensure that Iraq implements its obligations under all the relevant United Nations Security Council resolutions in full. These include the elimination of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction so that Iraq can never again build a capacity to threaten its neighbours with nuclear, chemical or biological weapons; and arrangements for compensation for those who suffered as a result of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait.

We want to see a democratic and pluralistic system in Iraq in which all sectors of the population would enjoy respect for political and human rights. It is difficult to see how this can be achieved while Saddam Hussein remains in power.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the number of Iraqi Shias sheltering in the marshes; what information he has of air attacks on Iraqi Shias in the marshes and of the continued use by Iraqi forces of chemical weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is difficult to obtain accurate information about the number of people in and around the marshes of southern Iraq but we believe that there are about 200,000 people in the area. There have been no flights of Iraqi aircraft over the marshes since the imposition of the no-fly zone on 27 August. We have no conclusive evidence of the use of chemical weapons by Iraqi forces.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Sri Lanka to ensure the safety and protection of the Tamil community during the present military security actions now taking place in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have frequently made clear our concern to the Government of Sri Lanka that they should conduct the anti-terrorist campaign against the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam with full respect for the security and human rights of civilians. I emphasised this during my recent visit there. We shall continue to watch the situation closely.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Sri Lanka concerning human rights abuses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have taken every opportunity to raise human rights issues with the Sri Lankan authorities, including during my recent visit there. There has been a marked improvement in Sri Lanka's human rights performance over the last year. We shall continue to watch the situation closely.

Law of the Sea

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the informal consultations which the United Kingdom Government have been participating in regarding the United Nations convention on the law of the sea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom Government participated in the last round of informal consultations convened by the Secretary General in August 1992, with a view to resolving the difficulties over the seabed mining provisions of the United Nations convention on the law of the sea (part XI).

There was some progress in analysing the problem areas and we shall be participating in the next round of consultations.

Research Projects

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 410, if he will list the seven research projects, detailing the institutions involved and the value of each project; and what change in the number of these projects in universities and polytechnics there has been since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The seven research projects referred to in my answer of 29 June were as follows:

(a) Cambridge university, department of pure mathematics and mathematical studies, research fellowship, £109,683 over three years.

(b) Oxford university, Merton college research fellowship (this fellowship is with the college as a whole rather than with college department), £109,000 over three years.

(c) York university, department of electronics, electrical screening measurements, £101,823 over three years.

(d) York university, department of electronics, induction field wave impedence effects, £53,055 over three years.

(e) Leicester university, department of physics, development and construction of data collection and processing unit for HF radio propagation measurements, £33,151 over one year.

(f) Leicester university, department of physics, analysis of HF radio propagation measurements with reference to high latitude effects, £35,392 over three years.

(g) Leicester university, department of physics, analysis of HF radio propagation measurements, £64,849 over one year.

All these projects are still current (or have been renewed) except for that with York university on induction wave impedence.

The foregoing list omitted two recently signed contracts with York university for:

(h) classification of fax image, worth £5,000.

(i) research support in the field of communications simulation and modelling, worth £14,547.

A further contract has since been signed with the Gloucester college of higher education for work on fax image counter orientation image worth £10,000.

The number of projects is subject to change, but to the best of GCHQ's knowledge in the time available there were four contracts current in 1979, with the universities of Loughborough, Leicester, Birmingham and Surrey. The total value of these was £69,000 in 1979.

European Union

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attempts he has made to extend the provisions of title VI, article K.3(2) of the Maastricht treaty permitting initiation by member states to cover other aspects of Community policy making.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Article K3.2 is one of the provisions governing intergovernmental cooperation, where the Community institutions operate under different rules than under the treaty of Rome. The article could not therefore be extended to cover areas of Community policy.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to alter the status of the United Kingdom within the United Nations as a result of article J2(3) of the treaty on European union.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The text of the treaty on European union does not necessitate any alteration of the status of the United Kingdom within the United Nations. Article J.5(4) of the treaty safeguards the United Kingdom's ability to fulfil its responsibilities as a permanent member of the Security Council effectively.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effect on the overseas responsibility of the United Kingdom, including the dependencies of Hong Kong and the Falkland islands, and in Cyprus and Belize, of the common foreign and security policy under article J1(1) of the treaty on European union.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Implementation of the common foreign and security policy under article J1(1) of the treaty on European union will not alter the United Kingdom's existing overseas responsibilities. Further, the "Declaration on the representation of the interests of the overseas countries and territories referred to in article 227(3) and (5) (a) and (b) of the Treaty establishing the European Community" (annexed to the Maastricht treaty) confirms our right and that of other member states to represent the interests of their dependencies in the exceptional case of a divergence between their interests and those of the union. Nor will the common foreign and security policy affect the United Kingdom's military commitments in Cyprus and Belize.

European Ombudsman

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government will take to facilitate any inquiries into maladministration by European Community institutions in the United Kingdom which might be made by the Ombudsman of the European Parliament.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Since the ombudsman is to enquire into maladministration by Community institutions or bodies it will be for those institutions and bodies themselves to facilitate his or her inquiries.

Cyprus

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take during the forthcoming round of talks on Cyprus to be held in New York under the auspices of the Secretary General of the United Nations to effect a resolution of the issue of the Greek Cypriots who have been missing since 1974; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The problem of missing persons is one of the most tragic aspects of the Cyprus dispute. We are making every effort to support the United Nations Secretary General in his work for a just overall settlement in Cyprus.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the response of his Department to Council of Europe Document 6589 on the demographic structure of the Cypriot communities; and if this response will be made when this document is discussed at the Council of Europe meeting in Strasbourg in October.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office regards Council of Europe document 6589 as a useful contribution to the limited knowledge on this subject.

This response was not given when the report came before the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly as the Members of Parliament who attend it to speak in their own capacities and not as Government representatives.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy as to the extent to which officers of the British High Commission in Cyprus should encourage British parliamentarians on visits to Cyprus to visit the occupied areas in the north; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: As a courtesy to visiting parliamentarians, our High Commissioner in Nicosia offers to arrange appointments with members of either Cypriot community or both.

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps towards permitting international commercial air services to northern Cyprus direct from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Garel-Jones: No. Direct flights to northern Cyprus are permitted by no country except Turkey.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many diplomats serve in the United Kingdom commission in Nicosia, Cyprus; how many of these have previous experience of service in Greece and Turkey; and what is his policy on ensuring a balance of experience in this high commission office.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There are 15 accredited diplomats in the British high commission, Nicosia. Of these two have previously served in Greece. Our policy on staffing the high commission is to ensure that the best available officers are sent to Nicosia and that both Turkish and Greek speakers are on the staff.

UK Nationals (Deaths Abroad)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent steps have been taken to record the number of United Kingdom nationals who die abroad.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our posts report, and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office records, the deaths of British nationals abroad in the following circumstances:

(a) where substantial assistance of a consular official has been requested, and provided;

and/or

(b) where consular death registration has been effected.

There is no requirement for the death of a British national overseas to be registered at a British consulate.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make further representations to the Spanish Government to secure the prosecution of those responsible for the death of Gary Maher in Tenerife in 1985.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Spanish authorities investigating this case concluded in August 1992 that there was insufficient evidence to bring a prosecution, and the case was closed. It can be re-opened at any time if new evidence is produced.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to facilitate a second opinion on the diagnosis of Spanish doctors to ensure that they do not misdiagnose the cause of death of United Kingdom nationals in Spain.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: One way of obtaining a second opinion on the cause of death of a British national in Spain, following an inquest in Spain, is to repatriate the body to the United Kingdom. When the body of a British national dying abroad from other than natural causes is repatriated to this country, coroners in England and in Wales must hold an inquest. In Scotland the Procurator Fiscal's office is not obliged to conduct a fatal accident inquiry.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances an autopsy is performed or an inquest held on United Kingdom subjects who have died abroad.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The decision to hold an autopsy or inquest overseas on a United Kingdom subject who has died abroad follows the law of the land in which the person died.

Where the body of a British national dying abroad from other than natural cause is repatriated to this country, coroners in England and Wales must hold an inquest. In Scotland the Procurator Fiscal's office is not obliged to conduct a fatal accident inquiry.

A coroner may call for an autopsy should he consider one necessary to complete the inquest.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Spanish Government over United Kingdom nationals who are left untreated in hospital wards pending checks on their insurance cover.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have not been notified of any such cases.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Spanish Government to ensure that a full court hearing is held in Spain on the death of Gary Maher in Tenerife in 1985; and what explanation he has received for the delay.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It would be wrong for us to try to influence Spanish judicial procedures. The Spanish authorities have already decided, after a full investigation, that the criminal case should be closed because of insufficient evidence to bring a prosecution. The civil case, which is a private matter, continues.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he has made or intends to make in the procedures for informing relatives when British citizens die abroad on holiday.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following a recent case in which the organisation which had undertaken to break the news of a British national's death overseas to the next of kin failed to do so, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has introduced procedures for checking in all cases that such undertakings are met.

BBC World Service

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to commence BBC World Service broadcasts to Uzbekistan in Uzbeki and to Albania in Albanian.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans at present for the BBC World Service to introduce an Uzbek service to Uzbekistan. Broadcasts in Albanian to Albania will commence shortly, as soon as the BBC World Service has recruited the necessary staff. The planned output will be one hour per day.

CSCE

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the resolutions passed at the first meeting of the CSCE Assembly, held in Budapest.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 9 July 1992 at column 278.

Association Agreements

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to proceed with ratification of the association agreements with (a) Poland, (b) Czechoslovakia and (c) Hungary.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Draft Orders in Council designating the EC association agreements with Poland and Hungary as Community treaties under section 1 of the European Communities Act 1972 will be laid before Parliament shortly. United Kingdom ratification will be concluded once the designation procedure has been completed. This requires affirmative resolutions from both Houses of Parliament. No further steps will be taken at this stage on the Czechoslovakia agreement pending decisions on the future of the federation.

Treaty of Rome

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has made to amend the treaty of Rome to allow non-European states to become EC members.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The treaty of Rome provides that any European state may apply for membership of the Community. There are no proposals to amend the treaty to allow non-European states to become EC members.

European Security Policy

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he will propose to the structure of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in the light of the implementation of a common European security policy by article J1 of the treaty on European union.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The position of the United Kingdom as a signatory of the North Atlantic treaty will not be affected by a common foreign and security policy. The Maastricht treaty (article J.4.4) makes it clear that the common foreign and security policy

> "shall respect the obligations of certain member states under the North Atlantic treaty and be compatible with the common security and defence policy established within that framework."

Macedonia

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will open diplomatic relations with Macedonia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since Her Majesty's Government have not recognised the republic as an independent state, the question of opening diplomatic relations has not arisen.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I am not responsible for any regulatory measures.

Western Sahara

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what actions have been taken at the United Nations to ensure that the proposed referendum in the western Sahara takes place;

(2) what discussions he has had with the Government of Morocco concerning the referendum in the western Sahara; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During my visit to Morocco earlier this year, I underlined the need for parties to co-operate fully with the UN Secretary General in his efforts to resolve this dispute. Differences over who should be eligible to vote in the proposed referendum have delayed the implementation of the UN settlement plan, but the Secretary General and his special representative have been working hard to try to overcome these differences. The Secretary General is expected to make a further report to the Security Council in the next few weeks. As a permanent member of the Security Council, we shall continue to give our full support to the Secretary General.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of France concerning the referendum in the western Sahara.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Officials have regularly discussed the Western Sahara with the French. It has been discussed at ministerial level in the framework of European political co-operation.

Bangladesh

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Bangladesh concerning the allegations of human rights abuse in the Chittagong hill tracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We continue to be concerned about reports of human rights abuses in the Chittagong hill tracts. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Home Department, raised the matter with the Bangladesh Home Minister on 29 September.

International Investments Ltd., Gibraltar

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will investigate the circumstances which led to the collapse of International Investments Ltd., Gibraltar, and seek compensation for British subjects whose investments were misappropriated.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given on 14 July 1992 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in reply to a previous question on this subject by the hon. Member for Antrim, East (Mr. Beggs) International Investments Limited was registered in Gibraltar, not in the United Kingdom, and this is therefore a matter for the Gibraltar authorities, not Her Majesty's Government.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what conclusions he has reached as a result of studying the recent Argentinian/Chilean joint declaration concerning territorial disputes; what are the implications for the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There are no implications for the future of the islands: sovereignty is not for negotiation. We have repeatedly made that clear to the Argentine Government, and have reminded them and the Chilean Government of that since the joint declaration.

Russia (Seal Culling)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what written representations he has made to the Russian authorities concerning seal culling; if he will make it his policy to place a copy of any such representations in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We continue to draw the attention of the Russian authorities to public concern in the United Kingdom about the seal culling.

Consular Services

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the circumstances under which he advises British holidaymakers abroad to contact the consular services.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are numerous circumstances in which British holidaymakers abroad may seek help or advice from British Consulates. They include:

i. heightened danger from civil unrest;
ii. arrest and/or imprisonment;
iii. death of a British national or serious injury;
iv. lost or stolen passports, tickets or money;
v. need for help with repatriation;
vi. requests for general information, such as names of lawyers, doctors, dentists, translators;
vii. requests for travel advice.

China (Death Penalty)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations have been made to the Government of China about the use of the death penalty in that country for offences other than murder.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have made no specific representations on this point. The Chinese Government have been made aware repeatedly of the widespread concern in this country about human rights abuses of all kinds which occur in China.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when it is intended for names to be put on the list of those held to be responsible for crimes against humanity in the current fighting in the former Yugoslavian state; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: UN Security Council resolution 771 calls on all states to submit substantiated information on "grave breaches" of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia to the UN Secretary-General. Her Majesty's Government will submit any such information they receive as requested.

South Africa

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of the British Council on the encouragement of cultural exchanges between Britain and South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The British Council's policy in South Africa is to promote Britain's role as a key partner in education, science, technology and culture by providing British expertise and assistance to those who will be in positions of authority and influence within a democratic, multiracial society. This policy enjoys the full support of the Government.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the cultural exchange visits between Britain and South Africa funded by the British Council in each of the last three financial years; and what was the financial support provided in each case.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

	Number of Visits to UK (including British Council fellows)	Financial support (£)	Number of Visits from UK	Financial support (£)
1989-90
English Language	13	21,868	4	4,893

British Council

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the total funds available to the British Council for supporting cultural exchanges in the current financial year; and if he will provide a breakdown of the application of these funds by country.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government are giving the British Council grants-in-aid of £116·99 million to support cultural exchanges (including development activities) in the current financial year.

British Council country allocations for cultural exchanges in 1992-93 are as follows:

Visa Applications

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what records are kept of personal interventions made by hon. Members in respect of visa applications for each year since 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No records are available before 1988. The hon. Member will be aware that the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department which was set up in May 1989 deals specifically with inquiries about entry clearance applications made at posts overseas. Details about the Unit were last circulated to hon. Members under cover of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs' letter of 24 April 1992. From 1988 to date the Department and subsequently the unit has handled 20,850 inquiries from hon. Members as follows:

Whaling

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the effect on Norway's proposed membership of the EC of its policy of continuing commercial whaling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel Jones: Many members of the public have expressed their opposition to Norway's recent decision to resume commercial whaling. The Government regret this decision, which we hope will be reconsidered. Community legislation prohibits trade in whale products and requires member states to protect whales; new members will be expected to accept this legislation.

El Salvador

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest information he has on the abuse of trade union members in El Salvador; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel Jones: We are deeply concerned by recent reports of deaths of, and threats to, trade unionists and others in El Salvador. We continue to urge restraint on all concerned, to allow full implementation of the peace agreement signed in Mexico City on 16 January.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all the next steps agencies and indicate the date on which they began operating, the number of staff each employs and the personnel costs each agency is incurring or is estimated to incur on an annual basis.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The information requested in respect of launch dates and staff numbers is as follows. Personnel costs for each agency are not held centrally: further details may be obtained from individual agency annual reports or direct from the appropriate chief executive.

Scientists and Technologists

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what efforts are being undertaken by his Department to attract more scientists and technologists into the senior ranks of the civil service.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Under the policy of fair and open competition for civil service posts the Civil Service Commissioners within my Department see that many appointments for scientists and technologists are widely publicised. These include appointments at senior level, including agency chief executives and heads of research establishments, posts in the scientific and engineering fast stream and, more widely, the full range of opportunities for scientists and technologists to work in the civil service. In addition, Departments, agencies and research establishments publicise their own vacancies.

Pesticides

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what research his Department has undertaken concerning the relationship between the use of pesticides and the incidence of atopic illness.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. Neither the Agricultural and Food Research Council nor the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through my office, are supporting any research projects specifically on the relationship between the use of pesticides and the incidence of atopic illness.

The research councils are always ready to consider, in competition with other applications, soundly based research proposals.

Civil Research and Development

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to raise the Government's share of the funding of civil research and development and to set a target date for achieving such a goal.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. It would be wrong for the Government to set a target for their share in the funding of total civil research and development—R and D—not least because this share would vary as a result of decisions on R and D funding by the private sector and other bodies. The Government fund the R and D they need on the basis or merit and value for money, consistent with what can be afforded.

EC Biomedical and Health Programme

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what monitoring he has undertaken of the biomedical and health programme of the EC.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Office of Science and Technology maintains contact with developments through officers of the Medical Research Council, who represent the United Kingdom on the programme advisory committee.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Waldegrave: I do not have responsibility for any regulatory measures.

Justices of the Peace

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list for each year since 1987, the number of people submitted for consideration as justices of the peace in Rossendale broken down by (a) gender and (b) political affiliation; if he will indicate how many of these have not been approved, both as a total number and a percentage of all submissions; and if he will specify the criteria for the appointment of justices of the peace.

Mr. Waldegrave: The statistics requested are set out in the tables.

As regards criteria for the appointment of magistrates, these are set out in a handbook for the guidance of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster's advisory committees on the appointment of justices of the peace in Lancashire, Greater Manchester and Merseyside. This broadly follows the pattern of the handbook from the Lord Chancellor's Department. The deliberations of my advisory committee in Rossendale are, of course, confidential.

A candidate's political persuasion is neither a qualification nor disqualification for appointment as a magistrate. Political persuasion as well as other factors such as age and experience are taken into account in order to try and achieve a bench which broadly reflects the area it serves.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Trevi Group

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will publish a list of the Trevi group of Ministers and officials;

(2) if he will list the meetings of the Trevi group since 1990 and the Ministers and officials who attended in each case.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There is one Trevi ministerial meeting held during every EC Presidency, which is attended by the Minister from each EC member state with responsibility for interior and justice matters. In the United Kingdom this is the Home Secretary. Ministers are supported by officials normally from their respective Departments. In the United Kingdom these are from the Home Office.

Ministers who have attended Trevi ministerial meetings since 1991 are Mr. Kenneth Clarke—Lisbon, June 11-12 1992, Mr. John Patten—The Hague, 1-2 December 1991 and Mr. Kenneth Baker—Luxembourg, 13-14 June 1992.

Individual Trevi working group meetings are attended by a delegation led by officials from each interior and justice ministry of the EC. United Kingdom delegations comprise Home Office officials and, generally, a police representative.

I have written to the hon. Member with dates of Trevi working group and ministerial meetings since January 1991, which is when full records are available. These are repeated in the table.

Records of the dates of meetings of the TREVI group are not held centrally before 1991. The following meetings have taken place since then:

30 September 1992—1 October 1992	TREVI Working Group III
18 September 1992	Ad Hoc TREVI/Immigration Ministers
3-4 September 1992	TREVI Working Group I
20-21 July 1992	TREVI Working Group III
9-10 July 1992	TREVI 1992 Working Group
2-3 July 1992	TREVI Senior Officials TROIKA
11-12 June 1992	TREVI/Immigration Ministers
14-15 May 1992	TREVI Senior Officials
9-10 April 1992	TREVI 1992 Working Group
19-20 March 1992	TREVI Working Group III
27-28 February 1992	TREVI Working Group II

30-31 May 1991	TREVI Senior Officials
18-19 April 1991	TREVI 1992 Working Group
28 March 1991	Ad Hoc TREVI/Immigration Ministers
14-15 March 1991	TREVI Working Group III
1 March 1991	TREVI Working Group II
14-15 February 1991	TREVI Working Group I
31 January-1 February 1991	TREVI 1992 Working Group
22 January 1991	Ad Hoc TREVI/Immigration Ministers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what decisions were taken by the Trevi group of Ministers in the past 36 months; and if he will deposit a copy of the decisions in the Library;

(2) what was on the agenda for the meetings of the Trevi group of Ministers, during the past 36 months; and if he will place copies of the agenda in the Library.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Successive Secretaries of State for the Home Department have reported to the House on the decisions of Trevi and Immigration Ministers by means of a written answer after each ministerial meeting. I refer the hon. Member to the replies given on those occasions: 7 July 1992, column 132; 20 December 1991, column 351; 20 June 1991, column 242; 18 December 1990, column 110; 4 July 1990, column 582; 20 December 1989, column 276.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions the United Kingdom Government have taken part in relating to EC-wide measures to introduce compulsory fingerprinting for all asylum seekers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: EC Immigration Ministers meeting in The Hague in December 1991 agreed that a feasibility study should be undertaken of a Communitywide system for matching the fingerprints of asylum applicants in order to detect multiple and successive applications being made in different member states. This work is continuing.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers were detained in Her Majesty's prisons during the past 24 months; and what was the most frequent period of custody to the nearest month.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is not available in the form requested. However, on 7 October 1992 a total of 138 asylum seekers had been detained in prisons, including Haslar, for more than seven days. Of these 32 had been detained for less than one month, 20 for between one and two months, 46 between two and six months and 40 for over six months.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what inquiries immigration officials will be required to make of immigration officials in another member state in order to assure the admissibility of an asylum seeker being returned to another member state under the 1990 Dublin convention, before such person is so returned.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Under the terms of articles 11 and 13 of the Dublin convention (Cm. 1623), where a member state considers that another member state is responsible for examining an application for asylum it may request that member state to take charge of or take back the applicant. That member state is obliged to respond to the request within specified timescales, and in so doing it will indicate whether or not the applicant is admissible to its territory.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of seniority an immigration officer must have to make a decision to return an asylum seeker to another member state of the European Community as permitted by the 1990 Dublin convention and whether such a decision will be reached and implemented without a reference to the asylum and special cases unit at the immigration and nationality department.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All decisions to refuse an application for asylum are taken by the asylum and special cases division and not by immigration officers. This will remain the position when such decisions are made under the terms of the Dublin convention (Cm. 1623).

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what safeguards will be taken to ensure that all relevant information, including the presence of family members, which affects the member state responsible for determining an asylum application under the 1990 Dublin convention, is obtained and considered before a decision is reached.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Article 15 of the Dublin convention (Cm. 1623) provides that each member state shall communicate to any member state which requests it such information on individual cases as is necessary for determining the member state responsible for examining an application for asylum. The member state that forwards the information must ensure that it is accurate and up to date. The applicant has the right to know what information is being exchanged concerning him or her and to have it corrected or erased if it is inaccurate. Where the removal of an asylum applicant is contemplated on third country grounds the applicant will also be invited as at present to explain why the United Kingdom should be considered the most appropriate country of refuge, and if there are any compassionate factors or family links which weigh against removal. All these matters will be considered before a final decision on removal is made.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what precautions are taken under the 1990 Dublin convention to ensure that all information about the identity of the asylum seeker and the nature of his application are kept confidential and are not revealed to unrelated third parties, including crew members of carriers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Article 15 of the Dublin convention (Cm 1623) contains safeguards on the transmission and storage of information about asylum applicants. It sets limits on what information may be exchanged between member states on individual asylum applicants for the purposes of implementing the convention and requires that information shall be exchanged only between specially designated authorities in each member state. The article requires all exchanges of information to be recorded and limits the period during which information can be retained. It requires any computerisation of such information to be compatible with the 1981 Strasbourg convention on data protection. Crew members of carriers or other third parties are not informed of the basis of a person's application for admission or further leave to remain in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest proposals of the group of EC Ministers concerned with immigration on the position of a person who is being removed or deported through another member state who applies for political asylum in transit.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No specific proposals have been made, but in general these circumstances are covered by the convention determining the state responsible for examining applications for asylum lodged in one of the member states of the European Communities—the Dublin convention, Cm 1623. Article 3.1 of the convention makes it clear that every application for asylum will be considered by one of the member states. Which member state is responsible will depend upon the precise circumstances of the case.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost in producing and processing the Asylum Bill in Session 1991-92.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The readily available information suggests that staff costs of £48,000 were incurred in the Home Office.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the numbers of staff who determine asylum claims; and how many of the proposed number are now in post.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 1 October 1992 there were 495 staff in post in the asylum division. Of those, 350 staff, including clerical support, are involved in the determination of asylum claims. Present plans provide for the total number of staff in the asylum division to rise further, to about 550, next year.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what evidence an immigration officer decides that a passenger has arrived from another member state of the European Community.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In some cases, most notably at the channel ports, the immediate point of departure will be self-evident. Otherwise, where there is any doubt, the immigration officer takes into account the passenger's own statement and such documentary evidence as is available, including endorsements in travel documents, travel tickets and carriers' records.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 15 July, Official Report, column 775, if he will make a statement on progress under the United Kingdom presidency on the work programme of EC Ministers concerned with immigration.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Progress is being made under the United Kingdom Presidency on a number of matters identified in the work programme adopted in December 1991 by EC Ministers concerned with immigration. We are carrying forward the work begun under the Portuguese Presidency on the harmonisation of family reunification policy; and have introduced proposals concerning the admission of non-EC nationals for purposes of employment. We are also working towards an agreement on the expulsion of illegal immigrants and on a resolution on manifestly unfounded asylum applications. There has been continuing progress on practical measures to prepare for the implementation of the Dublin asylum convention and the draft external frontiers convention.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, (1) further to his answer to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) of 15 July, Official Report, column 77, what policy implications for United Kingdom immigration law stem from the progress made under the Portuguese presidency on family reunification; and what changes to primary or secondary legislation are required;

(2) what administrative measures may need to be taken to implement the progress made on family reunification under the Portuguese presidency of the EC Ministers concerned with immigration.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Discussion of family reunification policy did not reach a sufficiently advanced stage during the Portuguese Presidency to enable conclusions to be drawn about the possible implications for United Kingdom law and practice.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of precisely which areas of family reunification discussions are currently taking place in the EC group of Ministers concerned with immigration.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The basic issues being addressed are which family members are to be admitted to join third-country nationals resident in a member state and under what conditions.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements have been agreed with the other EC Ministers concerned with immigration for the transit through member states of persons removed or deported.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No arrangements have yet been agreed with other EC Ministers. However, draft guidelines have been prepared, which it is intended should be considered by EC Immigration Ministers at their meeting at the end of November. These recommend that, where possible, removal of third-country nationals through other EC member states should be avoided; that, where such a removal is necessary, for example in the interests of efficiency, speed or economy, the removing state should make satisfactory arrangements for the individual's onward journey; and that there should be proper consultation with the transit state on such matters as documentation and the use of escorts.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to change the green form legal aid option for immigraiton advice and representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My noble Friend the Minister of State announced on 10 February in another place, column 459-60, that the Government did not intend to proceed with the proposal to transfer advice on immigration and asylum from the green form legal aid scheme to the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service. Green form legal aid continues to be available in immigration and asylum cases.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what matters were discussed by the ad hoc group of Home Affairs Ministers responsible for immigration matters in the European Community at its meeting on 10 and 11 September; and if he will make a statement as to decisions or agreements reached at that meeting, the areas in which discussions are on going, and the form in which conclusions will be presented to Parliament.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The ad hoc working group on immigration is composed of senior officials. It reports to EC Immigration Ministers, who meet towards the end of each Presidency. At its meeting on 10-11 September, the group discussed a range of issues, including admission for the purpose of employment, implementing work in respect of the draft external frontiers convention and the practices to be followed by member states as regards the expulsion of third country nationals unlawfully present in their territories. Discussions will continue on these and other matters in preparation for consideration by Ministers.

My right hon. and learned Friend will report to the House in the usual way the conclusions of the meeting of Immigration Ministers due to take place in London at the end of November.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all EC directives, draft directives and other EC proposals which currently pertain to immigration, nationality and asylum.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The area covered by Community law is that of free movement and residence rights for EC nationals and their families. The operation of these rights is currently governed by Council directives 64/221/EEC; 68/360/EEC; 72/194/EEC; 73/148/EEC; 75/34/EEC; 75/35/EEC; 90/364/EEC; 90/365/EEC and 90/366/EEC; and by regulations EEC No. 1612/68, EEC No. 1251/70 and EEC No. 2194/91. A Commission document, COM(90)108, contains proposals to amend regulation EEC No. 1612/68 and directive 68/360/EEC. These proposals are currently under discussion.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out in tabular form the annual salary scales for those employed in the immigration service up to and including the permanent secretaries and Ministers, giving the numbers employed at each grade.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information is set out in the tables:

		Salary scales

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in relation to the ad hoc group of Home Affairs Ministers in the European Community responsible for immigration matters, what treaties, agreements, resolutions or protocols are currently being considered by the group; when the group will next meet; and if he will publish the names of sub-groups, the person chairing them and the frequency of meetings.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The ad hoc working group on immigration is composed of senior officials. It meets approximately eight times a year and reports to Ministers concerned with immigration matters. The group will meet next on 12-13 November. Work currently in hand in the group under the immigration and asylum work programme agreed at Maastricht in December 1991 includes the preparation of resolutions for adoption by Ministers on manifestly unfounded asylum applications, harmonisation of family reunification policy, and expulsion practice. Other areas under discussion include admission for employment and transit for the purposes of removal. The current chairman is Mr. A. R. Rawsthorne, an Assistant Under-Secretary of State in the Immigration and Nationality Department of the Home Office.

There are currently five sub-groups reporting to the ad hoc group, each chaired during the United Kingdom Presidency by a senior official of the Immigration and Nationality Department, as follows:

Sub group	Chairman
Admission/Expulsion	Mr. N. R. Varney/Mr. C. B. Manchip
Asylum	Mr. N. C. Sanderson
External Frontiers	Mr. N. R. Varney
False documents	Mr. C. B. Manchip
Visa	Mr. R. G. Yates

The frequency of meetings varies, but a total of 22 days had been allocated in total to meetings of the sub-groups during the United Kingdom Presidency.

Carriers Liability

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the United Kingdom Government have fined airlines under the provisions of the Immigration (Carriers Liability) Act 1987 in the past 24 months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The total of sums demanded of airlines under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 for the two years up to 31 August 1992 was about £24 million.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the provisions of the carriers liability schemes which exist in the OECD countries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The following is a list of the OECD countries which we understand have carriers' liability schemes, with the charges which may be imposed on carriers in each case.

Australia	$1,000 Aus (approximately £430)
Belgium	100,000 BgF (£2,070)
Canada	$100-$5,000 Can. (£50-£2,500)
France	10,000 FF (£1,260)
Germany	2,000-5,000 DM (£850-£2,135)
Italy	170,000-500,000 Lira (£80-£240)
Turkey	$3,000 US (£1,785)
United Kingdom	£2,000
United States of America	$300-$3,000 (£175-£1,785)

Schengen Group

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what liaison takes place between the United Kingdom and the Schengen group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no formal liaison arrangements between the United Kingdom and the Schengen states, although the Schengen presidency has on occasion briefed British officials on developments in implementing the Schengen convention. There are, however, frequent contacts between United Kingdom Ministers and officials and their counterparts in the Schengen states, both bilaterally and in the course of discussions among the Twelve.

Commissioner Bangermann

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with EC Commissioner Bangermann.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: At my meeting with Vice-President Bangemann on 1 September, it was agreed that we should avoid disputes over the interpretation of article 8A of the treaty of Rome and should concentrate instead on practical measures to make it as easy as possible for EC nationals including British citizens to enter and leave the United Kingdom. Discussions with the Commission are continuing.

Child Abuse

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to change the legislation regarding the cross-examination of child witnesss in cases of alleged child abuse, neglect and sexual abuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: None, at present. The Criminal Justice Act 1991 introduced new provisions relating to the taking of evidence from children. These provisions derive from the recommendations of Judge Pigot's advisory group and are designed to reduce the stress of criminal proceedings for child witnesses.

In particular, video recorded interviews with child witnesses will now be admissible in place of a child's evidence in chief and the availability of live television links for abused children giving evidence and being cross-examined—introduced by the Criminal Justice Act 1988 —will be extended. Under no circumstances will the accused be allowed to question a child in person.

We will be monitoring the effectiveness of these reforms and in the light of experience with them will, of course, consider whether any further changes are needed.

United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest position over the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service and its replacement; if the UKIAS staff and offices have been retained; if he will name the members of the replacement committee and where appropriate the organisations they represent; what arrangements have been made for the election of an executive of the new body; what funding it will receive from the Government; and what response has been made by the UKIAS staff to the replacement committee.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I announced in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 8 July, column 202-3, that Mr. Humfrey Malins had been invited to lead a planning group outside Government to draw up proposals for a new voluntary body to take over UKIAS's general immigration work and in due course to establish such a body. The members of the group are Baroness Flather, Mr. Alf Dubs, Dr. Z. U. Khan and Ms. Rachel Pickavance. All have been invited to participate as individuals, not as representatives of particular organisations. The planning group hopes by the end of the year to put forward recommendations on the constitution and structure of the new organisation. The group would welcome views from any interested party.

On 24 July UKIAS appointed a standing executive committee, separate from the previous executive committee, to administer the organisation while the planning group does its work. This is chaired by the Reverend David Haslam of the Council of Churches for Britain and Ireland and the members are Mr. Navnit Dholakia of the Commission for Racial Equality, Mrs. Helen Ellis of the Kent Committee for the Welfare of Migrants, Mr. Bob Purkiss of the Trade Union Congress and Mrs. Sabiha Shahzad of the National Association of Race Equality Councils. In addition, Mr. Victor Kasinathan is the treasurer and Mr. Andrew Puddephat of Liberty is a co-opted member. The Government are providing funds on a monthly basis so that UKIAS's staff, working from the existing offices, can continue to provide advice and representation for appellants until the successor body is established.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to continue the services currently offered by UKIAS.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 8 July, Official Report, column 202-3.

Faroes Citizens

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rules govern the settlement of citizens of the Faroes in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Faroe Islanders are not EC nationals and do not, therefore, enjoy the free movement rights set out in the treaty of Rome. Any applications for settlement in the United Kingdom fall to be decided in accordance with the immigration rules.

Metropolitan Police

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out in tabular form the annual salary scales for the ranks of commander to commissioner for the Metropolitan police and show for each rank all other allowances payable.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is set out in the tables.

Table 1 (Salaries)

Rank	Salary on promotion £	Salary after one year £	Salary after three years £	Salary after five years £

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many radio control rooms there are in divisional and other units of the Metropolitan police; and what is the total number of police officers and civilians employed in them.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In addition to the central command complex at New Scotland Yard, there are 69 divisional control rooms and 11 others in specialist units, with a total staff of 726 police officers and 477 civilians.

Police Salaries

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out in tabular form the annual salary scales for the ranks of police constable to chief superintendent with effect from 1 September; and in the case of London, if he will show for each rank and scale point the London allowance, special London allowance and maximum rent allowance payable, respectively.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is set out in the table.

New Refugee Unit

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for establishing a network of advice offices for applicants and appellants regarding political asylum status outside London for the new refugee unit.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is for the refugee legal centre, as the new refugee unit is now called, to decide where it locates its advice offices. I understand that it has no plans to establish advice offices outside London at present, since the great majority of the centre's clients live in the London area.

Police (BMW Motor Cycles)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police forces that have fleets of BMW 1000cc K100-RT motor cycles; what is the strength of that fleet; how many have been taken out of service during the last 12 months as a precautionary safety measure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Earlier this year, the Association of Chief Police Officers issued advice to forces on measures which could be taken to improve the stability of these and other motorcycles.

Carl Bridgewater

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long he has had the report from Merseyside police into the Carl Bridgewater murder; and when he expects to reach a decision regarding the cases of the three men who received life sentences for this offence.

Mr. Jack: The report was received at the end of July and its findings are now being very carefully considered. Once this exercise is completed my right hon. and learned Friend will decide as soon as possible whether there are grounds for any action on his part.

Prevention of Terrorism

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce proposals to amend the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 to take account of the role of the press with a view to freedom of expression and the provision of legitimate information to the public.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Nuisance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police forces that are currently using the Justices of the Peace Act 1361 instead of the Public Order Act 1986 to combat anyone causing a nuisance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The only extant power from the Justices of the Peace Act 1361 is for magistrates to make binding over orders. Information on the number of orders made under the 1361 Act and on the circumstances leading to the making of those orders is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Probation Officers

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proposals he has to alter the funding arrangements and selection procedures for probation officers; and what consultations he has had with the National Association of Probation Officers, Central Council for the Training of Social Workers and the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals regarding such changes and their timing;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the training of probation officers.

Mr. Jack: The funding arrangements for students starting courses which would qualify them for entry to the probation service were revised in the summer. This followed a decision by the special commissioners of taxes that Home Office payments to probation students were not taxable, with the consequence that national insurance deductions, too, would not be appropriate. Following this decision we reviewed the grant arrangements and concluded that probation students should now receive their grants in the same way as the majority of social work students, but at a higher rate in view of the additional training involved. The selection procedures have not been altered. Discussions about the new arrangements have taken place with the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work and the National Association of Probation Officers. We have received a number of representations from the association and from individual students.

Lord-Lieutenants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the names and (b) the occupation of each Lord-Lieutenant and Deputy Lord-Lieutenant currently in post in England and Wales; who is responsible for their nomination; and what (i) salary and (ii) honoraria, allowance or expenses each receives.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend's responsibilities are limited to the reimbursement of certain expenses to Lord-Lieutenants, and the appointment of Deputy Lieutenants, in England. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, upon whose behalf I am also replying, has similar responsibility in Wales.

Lord-Lieutenants are appointed by the Queen under section 130 of the Reserve Forces Act 1980, on the advice of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Deputy Lieutenants are appointed by the Lord-Lieutenant under section 133 of the Act, subject to Her Majesty's non-disapprobation, which is signified as appropriate by the Secretary of State for the Home Department or the Secretary of State for Wales. There are some 2,250 Deputy Lieutenants in England and Wales and a list of their names and occupations could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Lord-Lieutenants and Deputy Lieutenants are unsalaried. Lord-Lieutenants, but not Deputy Lieutenants, may claim from central funds reimbursement of the cost of travel, postage, telephone calls and other non-entertainment expenses incurred in the course of their official duties.

Reginald Dudley and Robert Maynard

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what actions he is taking regarding a referral back to the Court of Appeal of the convictions of Reginald Dudley and Robert Maynard following the fresh evidence submitted by their solicitor at the beginning of July.

Mr. Jack: I am considering the representations and material submitted to me in this case and will come to a decision as soon as I can.

Accidents (Police Vehicles)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out for each police force in England and Wales for each of the last 10 years, the number of persons killed or injured by police officers when driving motor vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information which is available centrally relates to accidents where death or serious injury has arisen in the course of either police pursuits or responses to emergency calls. The information is available only from 1987 and the figures do not show the cause of the accident or the injury.

Information in respect of the Metropolitan police is as follows:

Year	Fatal injury (Civilian)	Fatal injury (Police)	Serious injury (Civilian and Police)
1988	8	0	103
1989	11	1	139
1991	3	0	82

For the other police forces in England and Wales information for 1987 is not available by force, but it is as follows:

16	8	152	141

For those other forces, the information for 1988 to 1991 is set out in the table:

Drugs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to make it illegal for anyone to be in possession of the drugs (a) Clenbuterol, (b) Norditropion and (c) Gonadotrophin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I have no present plans to do so, but I am willing to support any private Member who brings forward a Bill to make it an offence for an unauthorised person to supply anabolic steroids and related substances to minors. Precise substances to be included would need to be considered.

Attack Deterrents

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider proposals to amend the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 to allow the importation of deterrent products using pepper against attacks.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 provides the powers for Customs to enforce the prohibition of any goods on their importation.

Devices capable of discharging a noxious substance are classed as prohibited weapons under section 5 of the Firearms Act 1968. Such weapons may be imported only under the authority of an import licence issued by the Department of Trade and Industry to importers who are authorised by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to possess them. If such weapons are imported without a licence, Customs seize them under section 49(1)(b) of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979. We consider that spray devices, which are designed to discharge pepper into a person's eyes and face in order temporarily to incapacitate them, are prohibited weapons under section 5 of the Firearms Act 1968. They could be used effectively in crime and it would not be in the public interest to permit their importation or possession.

Mr. David Brown

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the detention by immigration officers of Mr. David Brown, of Shepherd's Bush, London, a British citizen leaving for a holiday in New York.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have written to the hon. Member.

Drug Couriers

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons are currently serving sentences of imprisonment as drug couriers (a) in total and (b) who are foreign nationals either without the right of abode in the United Kingdom, or who would be subject to deportation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information readily available does not distinguish the different types of drugs offence. On 30 June 1992, the latest date for which information is available, about 3,440 prisoners were held under sentence in prison service establishments in England and Wales for drugs offences, excluding any where drugs offences were not the principal offence. Of these about 1,020 were recorded as foreign nationals and the nationality of a further 140 was not recorded. Information on their liability for deportation on completion of sentence is not recorded centrally.

Immigration and Nationality Department

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to bring forward proposals to convert the immigration and nationality department into an agency.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no proposals to change the administration of the Immigration and Nationality Department at the moment.

Safer Cities Programme

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the expenditure of his Department (a) on the safe cities programme in the past financial year and (b) on each of the cities included in that programme.

Mr. Jack: The total expenditure under the safer cities programme in the financial year 1991-92 was £7·2 million of which £2.0 million was for the running costs of the 20 projects including staff salaries, accommodation and other administrative expenditure. A total of £5·2 million was paid in grants to support local crime prevention activity, as follows:

Treaties

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish a list of all treaties, European Community documents and accounts that the United Kingdom has agreed to in the past three years.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I have been asked to reply.

Such a list cannot be provided in Hansard without disproportionate cost. However, major treaties and agreements signed by the European Community and its member states are listed and explained in the six monthly White Papers on "Developments in the European Community", which are deposited in the Library of the House. The most recent was published on 12 October. The Official Journal of the European Communities, which is also placed in the Library of the House, publishes in the "L" series monthly and annual indices listing legislative measures adopted by the Council of Ministers of the European Communities.

Prisoners

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were held in police cells in each of the police forces in England and Wales on the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On Friday 16 October 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, the total number of prisoners held in police cells in each force area was as follows:

Avon and Somerset	31
Cheshire	33
Cumbria	2

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which local authorities and emergency services have been involved in exercises to practise the Government's contingency plan to deal with the effects in the United Kingdom of an overseas nuclear accident;

(2) what improvements have been made to the original Government contingency plan to deal with the United Kingdom effects of an overseas nuclear accident based on exercises to practise the plan;

(3) how frequently and on what occasions exercises have been carried out to practise the Government's contingency plan to deal with the effects on the United Kingdom of a nuclear accident occurring overseas.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

My Department has lead responsibilities for responding to overseas nuclear accidents, under the United Kingdom's national response plan arrangements.

There have been two exercises: the first, held in October 1988, did not involve local authorities. The second exercise was held in November 1991, and three local authorities were involved: Avon county council, Lancashire county council and West Midlands metropolitan borough council. Emergency services were not involved in either exercise.

Lessons learned from these exercises, and from our response to the St. Petersburg incident last March, have resulted in several improvements to internal procedures, but the national response plan itself remains unchanged from the statement made in the House on 30 June 1987, Hansard, columns 65-67, by the then Prime Minister, and subsequently set out in a booklet published by HMSO, entitled "The National Response Plan and Radioactive Incident Monitoring Network (RIMNET), A Statement of Proposals", copies of which are held in the Library.

HEALTH

Psychiatric Care

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which local social services authorities do not have social workers approved under the Mental Health Act 1983 available on a 24-hour basis to deal with psychiatric emergencies which require consideration of compulsory admission to hospital.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally.

Social Workers

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the post-qualifying system of credit accumulation for social workers and probation officers now being piloted by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work.

Mr. Yeo: One of the aims of the Government's training strategy launched in January 1991 was to provide a coherent framework for post qualifying education and training addressing the need to improve service provision.

The Central Council for the Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW) post qualifying framework includes the following components:

- credit accumulation and transfer (CAT) system linked to academic awards;
- post qualifying and professional development leading to two CCETSW awards.

The requirements made by CCETSW to implement the CAT system were developed in consultation with Council for National Academic Awards and other awarding bodies, and can link to other CAT systems including that of the Open university. When fully established, in-house training, programmes of study at educational institutions, and accreditation of prior learning will all contribute "credits" towards the post-qualifying award and the advanced award.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make it her policy to provide an impartial assessment of the adequacy of the relevant authorities' provision of social care to meet the needs of severely mentally ill people;

(2) if she will make a statement on the finding by the social services inspectorate that in some local authorities evidence of any sense of direction in terms of mental health services is lacking.

Mr. Yeo: The care programme approach, implemented as from 1 April 1991, should ensure that mentally ill people living in the community receive appropriate social care. We have asked regional health authorities to monitor its implementation consulting the regional offices of the Department's social services inspectorate as necessary.

Under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, local authorities are required to draw up and publish their community care plans for all client groups, including mentally ill people, after consultation with a range of statutory and independent sector bodies, and users and carers.

The White Paper "Caring for People" stresses the importance of health and local authority co-operation in planning services, and in the White Paper "The Health of the Nation", this is extended to joint purchasing of mental health services. The Ministerial Committee on Health Strategy will oversee development in respect of "Health of the Nation" and periodic reports on progress will be published.

We are not aware of a finding by the social services inspectorate that in some local authorities evidence of any sense of direction in terms of mental health services is lacking.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost per week of psychiatric treatment in (a) an acute, (b) a long-stay ward in a specialist psychiatric hospital, (c) similar provision in a local hospital or unit and (d) long-term treatment and care in a high dependency hospital hostel.

Mr. Yeo: The average cost per day in 1990-91 for patients in the mental illness specialty was £55. The average costs for groups within the specialty cannot be identified separately.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the "Health of the Nation" White Paper represents a change in Government policy that the transfer of services away from large psychiatric hospitals to a balanced range of locally based services remains dependent on the actual provision of such services by health and local authorities; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: District health authorities and local authorities, as purchasers of health care, are responsible for securing a comprehensive range of psychiatric services to meet the needs of their resident populations. Health authorities will secure these services by means of contracts with national health service trusts, directly managed units and the independent sector. Local authorities will effect contracts with voluntary and private organisations, as well as providing their own services.

The White Paper "Caring for People" stresses the importance of health and local authority co-operation in planning services, and in the "Health of the Nation" White Paper this is extended to joint purchasing of services.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that the monitoring of local authority mental health services by the social services inspectorate should be focused on authorities whose residents, or former residents, are short or long-stay patients served by those specialist psychiatric hospitals with plans to close by 1997.

Mr. Yeo: No, since confining monitoring of services only to those mentally ill people who have been in-patients would exclude those services to people who have never been admitted to hospital for treatment.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the Government plans to replace the services currently provided for many patients in large psychiatric institutions for occupational and recreational therapy, long-term high dependency care, and secure wards for mentally ill offenders and others needing security, including access to fresh air and sheltered gardens or grounds.

Mr. Yeo: Ministers have repeatedly made clear that the closure of obsolete psychiatric institutions should be preceded by the development of adequate alternative facilities which address the health, social and security needs of the re-located people.

The responsibility for providing these services rests primarily with district health authorities and local authority social services departments.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the Government plans to achieve significant improvement in the health and social functioning of severely mentally ill people.

Mr. Yeo: We are preparing detailed guidance to managers in both the health service and in the personal social services on their part in harnessing together the existing initiatives and new developments generated by the White Paper "Health of the Nation", to achieve demonstrable improvement in mental health services by specific target dates.

Child Psychotherapists

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many child psychotherapists are employed (a) within the National Health Service, (b) within the west midlands region and (c) within north Staffordshire.

Dr. Mawhinney: The most recent figures available are for September 1991 when the following whole time equivalent child psychotherapists were employed:

	Number
Great Britain	198·6
West Midlands	6·1
North Staffordshire	1·0

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs to report on its proposals for targets for the reduction of solvent abuse.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs is considering a broad range of issues relating to the problem of volatile substance abuse, and will report in due course.

Social Workers (Training)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are taken by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work to ensure that approved social workers are trained to deal with the violent and potentially violent mentally ill person.

Mr. Yeo: The Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work's (CCETSW's) requirements for the training of approved social workers include prescribed training in the management of violent behaviour. CCETSW is currently reviewing its requirements to ensure that they are up-to-date and effective in preparing approved social workers for all aspects of their responsibilities and to emphasise the skills with which they must be equipped through training. The council will be formerly considering the recommendations of the review at its November meeting.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial provisions, and how much, she has made within her Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which she has responsibility.

Mr. Sackville: Deregulation considerations form an integral part of the Department's normal working practice in respect of both EC and domestic legislation. It is not possible to provide separate figures for the cost of work on the subject.

Neuroscience

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names and distances from Westminster of the nearest six hospitals offering neuroscience services.

Mr. Sackville: The information is as follows:

	Miles
The Middlesex hospital	2·0
The National hospital	2·5
St. Bartholomews hospital	2·75
The Maudsley hospital	3·5
The Royal London hospital	4·0
The Royal Free hospital	4·5

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she expects decisions following the Tomlinson report to precede major spending on moving neurosciences from Shooters hill to Denmark hill.

Mr. Sackville: The South East Thames regional health authority is committed to centralising neuroscience services in the region and moving to a single site service. Its plans will be reviewed in the light of the recommendations of the Tomlinson enquiry.

Abortions

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what self-help groups are available for survivors of attempted abortions; and what assistance her department gives to such groups.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health does not have information on such self-help groups.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what records are kept of the cost to the NHS of treating a damaged foetus, and subsequent child and adult, in either the physical or psychological sense, where the damage has arisen as a result of a failed abortion attempt.

Mr. Sackville: Such information is not collected centrally.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are issued by her Department to doctors on the counselling of pregnant women who attempt to have the foetus aborted, but where the foetus lives.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) where an abortion fails and the foetus survives to a live birth, what specific records are kept of the consequent damage to that child arising out of the unsuccessful abortion attempt;

(2) what records are kept of attempted abortions which fail and where the foetus survives.

Mr. Sackville: Such information would be recorded in the appropriate clinical records of the woman and child concerned.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many attempted abortions in the United Kingdom failed and ended in a live birth for each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given to doctors in regard to dealing with abortions where the attempted abortion fails and a live birth follows and, in particular, on the advice given to mothers about whether they should disclose this to the surviving person.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the number of people who have attempted to gain legal redress, against the National Health Service or any other body or person, for damages suffered where an abortion failed and the pregnancy resulted in a live birth.

Mr. Sackville: I am not aware of any such cases.

Anaesthetists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by regional health authority the current establishment requirement for anaesthetists; and how many are in post.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are currently no "establishment requirements" set for hospital doctors in the National Health Service. The table gives the provisional number of consultant anaesthetists, expressed in the form of "whole-time equivalent", in England, by region as at 30 September 1991 (the latest date for which figures are available).

Hospital medical consultants anaesthetists in England and by region —30 September 1991 (provisional figures)

Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

Seals

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what beneficial medical by-products of the Greenland, harp, hooded or crested seal are recognised by her Department; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Records are held on licensed medicinal products and medical devices rather than medical by-products. These show that there are currently no such products making use of, or containing, extracts of seal.

Drug Imports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans her Department's Medicines Control Agency has for proposals for reviewing the introduction of a requirement for all drug imports into the United Kingdom to have documentation certifying their country of origin; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no plans to review the introduction of such a requirement. The United Kingdom licensing system is kept under constant review and amendments are made when considered necessary.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress her Department is making in respect of extra-contractual referrals being made more readily available for patients requesting them; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have always made clear that general practitioners are free to refer their patients to whichever hospital or other unit best meets the needs of the patient. We remain committed to this principle.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of extra-contractual referrals were refused in each regional health authority in 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by regional health authority how many extra-contractual referrals were returned during the financial years (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

West Midlands Air Ambulance Service

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take steps to safeguard the funding of the West Midlands air ambulance service.

Mr. Sackville: Air ambulance services are currently under evaluation and, until this has been completed, no investment is being made from central funds. In the meantime, it is for health authorities in West Midlands region, as purchasers, to decide whether to fund this service from their financial allocations.

Theatre Sessions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the average weekly number of theatre sessions for each regional health authority for the year ended March 1992 and for the current year to date.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is given in the table.

Operating theatre sessions: average number per week in 1991-92 (provisional)

Air Pollutants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what preliminary reports she has received from the advisory committee she set up on the assessment of exposure to air pollutants on health; when she hopes to have the committee's final conclusions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 10 June at columns 221-22. The Advisory Group on the Medical Aspects of Air Pollution Episodes was set up to look at the short term health effects of exposure to specific air pollutants.

The Group's second report on "Sulphur Dioxide, Acid Aerosols and Particulates" is to be published shortly and a copy will be placed in the Library.

The group currently studying the oxides of nitrogen and its third report is expected to be published in 1993.

This year the Department also set up the committee on the medical effects of air pollutants which held its inaugural meeting at the end of May. Its terms of reference are:

> "At the request of the Department of Health,
> (a) to assess and advise Government on the effects upon health of air pollutants both in indoor and outdoor air, and to assess the adequacy of the available data and the need for research.
> (b) to co-ordinate with other bodies concerned with the assessment of the effects of exposure to air pollutants and the associated risks to health and to advise on new scientific discoveries relevant to the effects of air pollutants upon health."

The Department has asked the committee to advise on the link between exposure to low levels of air pollution and asthma, the effects of exposure to ambient levels of carbon monoxide in urban areas, and the effects of exposure to benzene.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of food poisoning have been notified to the OPCS for England and Wales for each year since 1980; if she will provide a total figure and a regional breakdown of the total; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the numbers of patients waiting for in-patient treatment on 31 March, for each individual health authority (a) in total and (b) by main speciality for periods (i) under 12 months, (ii) 12 to 24 months and (iii) over 24 months.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given in the publication "Hospital Waiting List, In-Patients and Day Cases" (ISBN 1 85839 003 6), a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the numbers of patients waiting for out-patient treatment on 31 March, for each individual health authority (a) in total and (b) by main speciality for periods (i) under 12 months, (ii) 12 to 24 months and (iii) over 24 months.

Mr. Sackville: Figures for out-patient waiting times are not collected centrally. All health authorities are required under the patients charter to publish information on the local standards they have set for waiting times for first out-patient appointments and on performance against these targets.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of patient waiting lists by regional health authority area for (a) July, (b) August and (c) September of the current year.

Mr. Sackville: On 11 August we announced that, in future, provisional waiting time figures would be published on a quarterly basis. Figures for the three months to 30 September 1992 are not yet available centrally.

Medical Records

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements exist for the transfer of medical records for the national health service to registered medical practitioners in other European Community countries when British citizens move to other countries in the European Community for work or retirement.

Mr. Sackville: General practitioner medical records are the property of the national health service and are retained in the country for NHS purposes including the possible future care and treatment of the patient. Patients who plan to live abroad may approach their GP to obtain a precis of their medical history or a copy of their medical records to give to any practitioner in the new country of residence.

Leukaemia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she is yet in a position to publish the findings of the study undertaken by the north London blood transfusion service on behalf of her Department, into the risks associated with blood transfusions involving human T-cell leukaemia; what plans she has to ask other blood transfusion services to carry out similar studies on behalf of her Department; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The north London blood transfusion centre (NLBTC) undertook a study on behalf of the United Kingdom blood transfusion services, to determine the prevalence of antibodies to human T-cell leukaemia/lymphoma virus (HTLV) in the blood of a sample donor population. Preliminary results of that study were published in abstract form at the British Blood Transfusion Society annual meeting, Nottingham 1991 and again in abstract form at the Montpelier symposium on HTLV held in March 1992. I have arranged for copies of those abstracts to be placed in the Library.

The NLBTC is now undertaking a more detailed analysis of the findings with a view to submitting them shortly for publication in a scientific journal.

The independent expert advisory committee which advises Ministers on topics relevant to the safety of the blood supply, will keep under review developments concerning HTLV and its detection. It will also review whether further studies or other measures are necessary to maintain the safety of the blood supply. I will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to hold centrally records by regional health authorities of the number of cases of cancer that have been reported that were associated with the virus human T-cell leukaemia, including the number of those cases that proved fatal; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I have no plans to introduce such a policy.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the criteria which need to be satisfied when calling for an ambulance to respond in an emergency.

Mr. Sackville: Anyone may call an NHS ambulance following an accident, sudden illness or collapse.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department has concerning the ratio between activated and stand-by time of emergency ambulance areas generally necessary to achieve ORCON standards under different patterns of population and traffic density.

Mr. Sackville: The deployment of ambulance personnel and vehicles to meet national emergency performance standards is a matter for local ambulance service providers and their purchasers.

Orimulsion

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been conducted by her Department on the effects of the toxic ash particles upon the human lung produced during the burning of orimulsion.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. Biomedical research is a matter for the Medical Research Council which is funded by the Office of Science and Technology.

The burning of orimulsion produces relatively high levels of sulphur dioxide, vanadium and nickel compared with other fuels. However, owing to tight controls being implemented as a result of European Community directives, trace quantities of toxic chemicals which are emitted from incinerators and other combustion processes, should not be at levels which would be expected to cause adverse health effects.

Inflammatory Bowel Disorder

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her practice to hold central records from regional health authorities of the average current delay between patients reporting (a) symptoms starting and (b) diagnosis of patients with inflammatory bowel disorder; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It would be neither appropriate nor cost effective to collect this information centrally.

Skin Cancer

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department holds on the United Kingdom morbidity and mortality rates for skin cancer in each year since 1979; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table. There has been a rise in the number of cases of skin cancer (non-melanotic cancer and the rarer malignant melanoma) in recent years. On the latest available information there are about 28,000 cases of skin cancer a year and about 1,500 deaths. The main risk factor which is believed to account for the increase in incidence is the increased extent to which people expose themselves to ultraviolet radiation (UV), primarily sunlight.

Mortality and incidence rates (per 100,000 population) for malignant melanoma of skin (ICD 172), and other malignant neoplasm of skin (ICD 173), for Great Britain 1979-1991.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate Her Majesty's Government has made of projected increases in skin cancer resulting from a 1 per cent. decline in the total column ozone; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Exposure to ultraviolet radiation (UV) is an important factor influencing the number of cases of skin cancer which develop, and levels of UV at ground level are influenced by changes of levels of ozone in the stratosphere. However, stratopheric ozone levels are just one of the factors influencing the amount of UV reaching the ground. Seasonal variations in solar UV levels and short term variations due to cloud cover and local weather conditions are far in excess of any variations anticipated as a result of ozone depletion. The position is further complicated by variability in people's behaviour in relation to exposure to sunlight. Estimates of increases in skin cancer based solely on an estimate of ozone depletion would be misleading.

Thyroid Cancer

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by regional health authority, and by year since 1985, including the current year to date, the number of cases of thyroid cancer that have been reported and the number of cases that involved (a) children and (b) adults.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Foster Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to introduce a minimum weekly allowance to foster carers on a sliding scale based on the age of the child cared for.

Mr. Yeo: No.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS trust boards have held (a) one to six or (b) more than six public consultative meetings.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not collected centrally. Every national health service trust is required to hold one public meeting every year, other than in the year it became operational.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by NHS trust, the number of staff who are currently in NHS pensions schemes and those who have elected to change to a private pension scheme run on behalf of the trust.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the current level of remuneration for (a) chairs and (b) non-executive directors of NHS trust boards.

Dr. Mawhinney: Chairmen are remunerated in one of three bands dependent on the revenue turnover of the trust (or its equivalent) in a given financial year (1988-89). The bandings are shown in the table.

Unit turnover 1988-89	Current rates £
Band 1
Turnover in excess of £50 million	19,285
Band 2
Turnover between £20-£50 million	17,145
Band 3
Turnover less than £20 million	15,125

Non-executive directors are paid at a flat rate of £5,000 per annum.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS trust boards admit community health council representatives into their meetings.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally. Community health councils have the right to attend any national health service trust meeting which is open to the public. It is up to the individual trust to decide whether to invite the community health council to attend meetings which are otherwise closed to the public.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria will determine her decision as between expressions of interest in trust status from south Manchester; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: These expressions of interest will be considered against five criteria, taking into account patient choice and competition, the extent to which clinical services and management are already integrated, size and range of services, effect on purchasing and local views.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what cost benefit analyses have been carried out by her Department on the reduction of dental caries in children that would result from fluoridation of the drinking water supply in those areas where no artificial fluoridation is being carried out and where naturally occurring levels are below 1 part per million; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for individual health authorities to consider whether water fluoridation in their area is cost effective, taking into account local factors. No cost benefit analyses have been carried out by the Department.

Potatoes

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department holds on the health risks to consumers through the consumption of potatoes that have been treated with Tecnazene.

Mr. Sackville: Tecnazene, as with all pesticides, is approved for use following advice from the statutory advisory committee on pesticides. It has concluded that there is currently no evidence of risk to the health of consumers arising from the use of tecnazene on potatoes but is continuing its review of all the available data.

The Department holds copies of the scientific papers on this matter that have been put before the committee. Once the committee has completed its review an evaluation document which will contain an assessment of all these data will be published.

Atopic Illnesses

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of asthma and other atopic illnesses were reported in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992 to date; and how many of these were children under 10 years of age.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

Dentistry

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she intends to take to increase awareness of patients' rights to claim reductions in, or exemptions from, charges for dental treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: Under the new dental contract introduced in October 1990, dentists are, for the first time, required to display in a prominent position at their practice premises a notice, indicating national health service charges which are payable under general dental services and giving details of entitlement to exemption from and remission of such NHS charges. In addition there are already leaflets available to the public on dental charges and NHS charges more generally. A complementary series of leaflets in ethnic languages is planned for the near future.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the current number of dentists (a) in the NHS, (b) in private practice and (c) practising both privately and in the NHS; what are the comparable figures for the previous five years; and if she will make a statement on the trends.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of dentists providing general dental services in England under the national health service as at 30 September each year was as follows:

Year	Number
1987	14,765
1988	15,070
1989	15,351
1990	15,480
1991	15,451

These figures are consistent with the increase of nearly 30 per cent. since 1978 in the numbers of dentists providing dental treatment under the NHS.

The figures do not include dentists who provide treatment under the hospital and community dental services.

The information requested on the numbers of dentists who practise privately, in whole or in part, is not held centrally.

Smoking

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the actions taken by Her Majesty's Government to assist the work of Action on Smoking and Health in publicising the dangers of cigarette smoking.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has a long history of supporting the valuable work carried out by Action on Smoking and Health (ASH) and awarded it a three year grant of £241,500 per year which began in 1991. In addition, the "Health of the Nation" gives a commitment to continued support to the leading role played by ASH in disseminating information, encouraging action by others and providing advice and support.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to increase awareness of the long-term effects of smoking during pregnancy on children.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department is providing funding of £1 million over two years towards a Health Education Authority project being run specifically for this purpose. In addition, the "Health of the Nation" gives a commitment to achieve a target of a 30 per cent. reduction in the number of women who smoke at the start of their pregnancy by the year 2000.

Disability Legislation

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the provisions of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 which (a) have been implemented and (b) have not yet been implemented.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested is as follows:

a. Implemented on 1 April 1987
Section 4 (duty on local authorities to assess need)
Section 8(1) (duty to have regard to abilities of carers)
Section 9 (provision of information)
Section 10 (duty to consult organisations of disabled people when making appointments)

Implemented on 1 February 1988
Sections 5 and 6 (identification and assessment of disabled school leavers)

Implemented on 18 December 1989
Section 11 (report to Parliament on community care for mentally ill and mentally handicapped people)

b. Non-implemented sections
Sections 1 and 2 (appointment and rights of authorised representatives of disabled people)
Section 3 (provision of written statements of assessment)
Section 7 (identification and assessment of the needs of people leaving hospital after treatment for six months or more for a mental disorder)

Sections 8(2) and 8(3) (these are linked to section 3)

The requirements of the non-implemented sections are now, to a very large extent, reflected in our new and wide-ranging reforms of community care, which demonstrate our commitment to high quality care which is responsive to the needs and wishes of service users and carers. The need to implement these sections will be reviewed in the light of several years' experience of the community care arrangements.

Asbestosis

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she will take to implement an ethical code of practice for the diagnosis and treatment of terminal victims suffering from asbestosis.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health has no plans to implement such a code. Ethical issues relating to the diagnosis and treatment of the terminally ill are primarily a matter for the health care professions.

Clinical Regrading

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each health district in England and Wales the number of applications for clinical regrading still outstanding.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not collected centrally.

Sir Alan Greengross

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what correspondence she has received from Sir Alan Greengross concerning his resignation as chair of Islington and Bloomsbury health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Alan Greengross wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 23 June 1992. His decision to stand down as chairman of the Bloomsbury and Islington district health authority with effect from 31 July 1992 has been accepted.

Tobacco-related Diseases

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the total number of tobacco-related deaths in 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is estimated that in the United Kingdom about 110,000 deaths each year are smoking related.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the cost to the NHS of smoking-related diseases in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: Treatment costs to the national health service are estimated to be £437 million annually. This figure is for hospital costs only and does not include the costs of the care given by GPs or at health clinics or other care in the community.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish the Smee report; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: A study on the effects of tobacco advertising will be published shortly.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the draft EC directive on tobacco product advertising (EC document 6748/91) will be discussed at the Council of Health Ministers on 13 November.

Dr. Mawhinney: The agenda for Health Council on 13 November is not yet fixed. It is likely that the tobacco advertising directive will be discussed without a vote being taken.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 15 May, Official Report, column 167, to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), when and in what form she now expects to make available the report of her chief economic adviser on the impact of banning tobacco advertising; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to make public the findings of the Smee report; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Health's report on the effects of tobacco advertising on tobacco consumption will be published shortly.

Wigan Area Health Authority

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current remuneration of the chairman of the Wigan area health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: The figure is £17,145.

Arts for Health

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proposals she has for ensuring that the arts make the fullest possible contribution to the quality of the health care environment; and if she will make a statement indicating, in particular, what role she sees for Arts for Health, established in 1988 at Manchester polytechnic, as the first centre offering a national service;

(2) what study her Department has made of the pioneering work and achievements of Arts for Health; what consideration is being given to funding an expansion of its work in hospital and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Ministers have long recognised the valuable contribution the arts can make within the national health service. My department has published three guidance documents on the subject, "Art in the NHS", "The Arts in a Health District" and "Art and Health Care". As part of the NHS management executive's quality initiative, the arts were introduced into the outpatient department demonstration project and have made a valuable contribution. At the "Hospital and Care Premises Management Conference" held in Birmingham between 29 September and 1 October 1992, the arts featured prominently in sessions on "The Caring Environment" and "The International Aspects of Healthcare Design".

While Ministers are supportive of the many initiatives throughout the country, it is for local decision, NHS trust or directly managed unit, as to whether they use the services offered by "Arts for Health" or any other organisation in this field. No moneys are specifically voted for the arts in my Department.

Cancelled Operations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing for each regional health authority area the proportion of operations cancelled in 1991-92 showing the figures in numbers and as a percentage of the total number of operations.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally.

Midland Centre for Neurosurgery and Neurology

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received on the lack of provision of magnetic resonance imaging at the midland centre for neurosurgery and neurology; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have received a number of representations on this subject. In March we announced the successful bids for additional money for whole body scanners and other medical equipment. This included a proposal for a magnetic resonance imager to support a combined neuroscience facility in Birmingham. Decisions on the provision of these services and location of this equipment are matters for West Midlands regional health authority.

Charitable Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals in (a) England and (b) London have access to charitable trusts; and what role her Department plays in monitoring the use of those trust moneys.

Dr. Mawhinney: Very nearly all hospitals in England will benefit from trust funds held by their health authority, national health service trust or special trustees. As charitable funds, these are subject to the supervision of the Charity Commission. The Secretary of State for Health prescribes the format of annual accounts and the financial central environment, and receives any reports produced by statutory auditors relating to these accounts.

Trust Hospitals

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trust hospitals have (a) public relations budgets and (b) use outside consultants for public relations purposes; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available centrally. It is a matter for national health service trusts to decide what use they make of public relations expertise to present themselves and the services they offer as part of the national health service to the authorities who purchase those services and the public who use them.

American Companies

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the activities of National Medical Enterprises and the Psychiatric Institute of America in relation to health services in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: National Medical Enterprises and its United States counterpart are parent companies of an independent United Kingdom health care provider but do not, themselves provide health care in the United Kingdom.

NHS Information

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the categories of information relating to the national health service of which her Department has discontinued publication since 9 April; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: There are no categories of information for which publication has been discontinued since 9 April.

The need for the national health service to provide information to the Department of Health is under review. If information which is currently provided is clearly identified as being unnecessary for the management of the health service, that burden will be lifted from the national health service. A consequence of this would be that the information would no longer be available for central publication.

Lung Cancer

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new initiatives she plans to reduce the incidence of lung cancer in women.

Dr. Mawhinney: Reducing the incidence of lung cancer in women will mainly depend on reducing the prevalence of smoking. "The Health of the Nation" includes a target to reduce smoking among women from 28 per cent. in 1990 to 20 per cent. by the year 2000. The White Paper sets out a comprehensive strategy to achieve the target, including action on price, health education, ensuring effective controls on advertising and a greater national health service role in reducing smoking.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Iraqi Shias

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is he will provide financial and logistical support for members of the all-party group for Iraqi Shias to monitor the delivery of aid in southern Iraq and related matters.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no provision within the aid programme or elsewhere within the FCO's financial resources for funding monitoring visits by members of all party groups. ODA is providing finance fcr assistance to southern Iraq through non-governmental organisations, including those with which my hon. Friend is associated.

While suitable arrangements for monitoring this aid are important, members of the all party group for Iraqi Shias will be aware of the Iraqi Government's consistent refusal to renew the United Nation's humanitarian operations in Iraq, and of their rejection of the proposal to place United Nations human rights monitors in the south to report on the situation. In these circumstances the United Kingdom Government would not wish to encourage United Kingdom citizens to enter the region.

Southern Africa

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking for the provision of extra resources to help the recovery of agriculture in the drought-affected areas of southern Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the beginning of 1992 we have committed over £60 million including our share of EC food aid, to help the victims of the drought in southern Africa. We are supporting activities in the region to assist recovery of agriculture. These include agricultural research, including local irrigation, livestock, veterinary and pest control schemes in Zimbabwe, seeds and tools programmes in Mozambique and Malawi, and a seed multiplication project in Namibia. We are also funding a project in Zambia which, through checking and treatment of imported maize consignments, should help reduce the risk of infestation to future local crops by pests such as the larger grain borer. We shall continue to help, in concert with our partners in the donor community.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support Her Majesty's Government are giving to the United Nations/Southern Africa Development Co-ordination conference appeal for US$854 million; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's Government have so far committed more than £51 million of bilateral aid in response to the drought in southern Africa. This is in addition to an estimated £11·3 million of food aid given by Britain through the EC special food aid programme. The Government will continue to monitor the situation closely in consultation with our EC partners and other donors.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to enlarge the social funds to aid the poorest in the drought-affected areas of southern Africa to cope with economic change, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have already committed over £51 million of bilateral aid to help drought victims in southern Africa in the form of balance of payments aid, food and support for non-governmental organisation programmes. More widely we are working closely with the IMF and World bank and both institutions are being flexible in modifying economic reform programme targets to help protect the populations of countries from the worst effects of the drought. Substantial extra multilateral resources have been made available to help cope with present difficulties.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the value of the British overseas aid programme in deutschmarks on 15 September; and what is its current value in deutschmarks.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The planned aid programme to developing countries for 1992-93 is £1,831 million. At the exchange rate of Dm 2·78/£ on 15 September this was equivalent to Dm 5,090 million, and at an exchange rate of Dm 2·50/£, Dm 4,578 million. Fluctuation in the Deutschmark/sterling exchange rate does not itself materially affect the real value of the aid programme.

Rain Forests

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to increase awareness of how individuals and communities can assist in the preservation of rain forests.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The individuals and communities best able to help preserve the rain forests are those living in and around the forests themselves. It is an important aim of many ODA-funded projects to encourage and enable these communities, along with their Governments, to participate in and benefit from the conservation and sustainable management of their forests.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives Britain has initiated at the United Nations or the EC to find a long-term solution to Somalia's problems.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have agreed within the EC and proposed to the United Nations, that the UN should develop a strategy for the rehabilitation, both physical and political, of Somalia. We would give this our strong support and have urged partners and other donors to follow the UN lead.

Poland

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give full details of all assistance given to Poland under the know-how fund, including cost.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The know-how fund for Poland is working well. Over 170 projects have been supported. The actual and anticipated expenditure to the end of this financial year should be over £34 million.

A list of the activities approved since the beginning of the know-how fund has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

South Africa

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has yet received a full report from the South African Government in respect of the two South African defence force agents arrested in the United Kingdom in April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We received an interim report from the South African authorities in June. Investigations are continuing. One of the two South African officers has been dismissed from service. Other disciplinary action may be taken when enquiries in South Africa are complete. The South African Government have undertaken to provide full details of any links between South Africans and loyalist extremists in Northern Ireland.

Russia

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the total commitment to date to Russia in pounds sterling, against the know-how fund programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The know-how fund has so far committed a total of £15 million for projects to Russia. The figure comprises £6 million spent in financial year 1991-92 and £9 million to date in 1992-93.

Developing Countries (Debt Relief)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if debt relief and rescheduling agreed for developing countries under the Trinidad terms is accounted for as positive aid receipts by the Overseas Development Administration; and by what criteria the Overseas Development Administration judges that debt relief equates to official development assistance.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Debt relief under Trinidad terms is counted as a positive flow of official development assistance in accordance with directives agreed by the OECD's Development Assistance Committee (DAC). Trinidad terms directly benefit developing countries by significantly reducing their foreign exchange obligations. Eight countries have already benefited and we expect more to do so over the coming months.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Male Cattle

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many additional staff will be employed to register male cattle as required by the common agricultural policy; and what is the estimated annual cost of this registration.

Mr. Curry: The European Commission has not yet proposed rules for the implementation of the beef special premium scheme after 1 January 1993, and it is therefore not yet clear whether a system of registration and passports will be required for eligible animals. It is not yet possible to estimate the staff numbers or cost of such a system.

Plant Health and Pesticides HQ

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to announce his decision on which site in York will be used for the new MAFF plant health and pesticides headquarters.

Mr. Curry: There is nothing to add to the reply given on this matter on 8 June 1992, Official Report, column 13.

Tobacco

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which areas of the EC tobacco is the only crop that can be cultivated.

Mr. Curry: In parts of southern Europe, and especially in Greece, infertile soils, dry climatic conditions, remoteness and poor transport links mean that no alternative crops can match tobacco's capacity to provide growers with a return.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total level of support, in sterling equivalent, for growing tobacco in the EC under the common agricultural policy in the latest year for which figures are available; and what measures are in hand to reduce this sum.

Mr. Curry: In 1991, the EC spent around £930 million (1,330 mecu) on the CAP tobacco regime. The substantial reforms agreed by the Council in the recent CAP reform package should progressively reduce annual EC expenditure on tobacco. The Commission estimates that, by 1997, this reduction should amount to over a quarter of current expenditure. A further review is to take place, effective from the 1998 harvest.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current sum paid per British family to support the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Curry: Estimates of the current cost of the CAP to United Kingdom households are extremely difficult and depend critically on the assumptions used. For instance, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) has estimated that the transfers from consumers and taxpayers resulting from agricultural policies in the European Community—separate figures for the United Kingdom are not available—were equivalent to some £18 per week for a family of four in 1991. However, as the OECD makes clear, this estimate does not take into account the impact on world prices, and on other variables, if farm support were to be removed. It is likely, therefore, to overstate to a significant degree the true cost to United Kingdom consumers and taxpayers.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will attach environmental conditions to the area payments that compensate farmers for the cuts in arable support under the CAP reforms.

Mr. Curry: We believe that direct payments to farmers under the CAP should be subject to appropriate environmental conditions. All farmers claiming area payments on over 15 hectares in England will have to set land aside. The land set aside will be subject to management conditions intended to help protect the environment.

The Community legislation establishing the new arable regime does not provide a legal basis under which such conditions could be applied to other arable land.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what environmental conditions he intends to apply to land set aside under the CAP reforms; and if those conditions apply to all arable land in the rotation.

Mr. Curry: Rules for the management of set-aside land are set out in the explanatory booklet on the arable area payments scheme, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. These include measures specifically intended to help protect the environment.

The Community legislation establishing the new arable regime does not provide a legal basis under which these conditions could be applied to other arable land.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what increase in expenditure implementation of the multi-annual zonal schemes in the agri-environment package of the CAP's accompanying measures will require over and above existing expenditure plans on support for agriculture in special areas, capital grants and alternative land uses as published in the Government's expenditure plans 1992-93 to 1994-95.

Mr. Curry: No decisions on implementation of the agri-environment regulation have yet been taken. We have until July 1993 to draw up our implementation plans and will consult widely in doing so.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the cost of the CAP to the United Kingdom in 1992-93.

Mr. Curry: Details of public expenditure in the United Kingdom under the Common Agricultural Policy in 1992-93 will be contained in "Agriculture in the UK—1992", which is currently being compiled and is expected to be published in March 1993. Copies will be made available to the House.

The forecast expenditure in the United Kingdom in 1991-92 (the last year for which figures are readily available) is contained in section 9 of "Agriculture in the UK—1991". Actual outturn information for 1991-92 is presently being gathered and will be published in "Agriculture in the UK—1992". In addition, however, the United Kingdom supports CAP spending elsewhere in the Community through our net contribution to the EC budget. This is not allocated to particular elements of the budget, such as agriculture.

Flags of Convenience

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Dutch fishing vessels sailing under flags of convenience have (a) area 7 beam trawl pressure stock licences and (b) area 4 beam trawl licences.

Mr. Curry: As at 9 October, 14 Dutch-owned or largely Dutch-owned United Kingdom-registered fishing vessels hold area VII beam trawl pressure stock licences. Ten of these also hold area IV beam trawl licences and a further five have area IV beam trawl licences only.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many flag of convenience fishery vessels operating from United Kingdom ports have not complied fully with the conditions attached to their licences; and what action has been taken against them.

Mr. Curry: Sixteen non-British-owned or largely non-British-owned United Kingdom-registered fishing vessels contravened the conditions of their fishing licence in 1991 and in 1992 to the end of August. In one case there has been a successful prosecution and in two other cases an official warning has been given. One case has been dropped and 12 cases are still pending, while prosecution is considered.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fishing vessels registered under flags of convenience are licensed by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport is providing the hon. Member with a list of the 81 fishing vessels which qualified for registration either pursuant to the interim relief granted by the House of Lords or as a direct result of the Factortame judgment. As at 9 October 1992 all of these held United Kingdom fishing licences.

Starlings, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the results of the inquiry carried out by his Department into the large number of starlings that have died on a Doncaster housing estate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The incident was reported by local residents on 1 July. It was investigated the same day by an official of the Department together with an environmental health officer from Doncaster metropolitan borough. More than 300 young starlings were found dead. Following enquiries and discussions with other experts, including the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, it was concluded that the immature birds probably died as a result of hypothermia caused by the strong cold winds and heavy rain on the previous night and during the morning.

Organic Farmers

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent assessment he has made of the extent of unmet consumer demand for organic farm produce; for what reasons organic farmers were included in the latest EC set-aside scheme; and if he will take steps to remove organic farmers from EC set-aside arrangements.

Mr. Curry: Demand is difficult to estimate in such a small market but it is clear that there is potential for growth in the organic sector as shown by the high level of imports. We are keen that United Kingdom farmers and growers should meet that demand.

Under the EC rules, the new arable area payments scheme must be open to all growers who meet the relevant scheme conditions, including the set-aside requirements. It is not possible to remove organic growers from these arrangements.

Eggs

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now pay the balance of sums due to the Sisters of the Monastery of Our Lady of the Passion; if he will increase the compensation paid to all egg producers after compulsory slaughter of their flocks under the Zoonoses Order 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: All moneys due to the Sisters of the Monastery of Our Lady of the Passion have now been paid. The final payment, as directed by the arbitrator, was made on 20 July 1992.

Compensation is paid in accordance with the Animal Health Act 1981 for all flocks which are required to be compulsorily slaughtered. Compensation is paid on the value of the birds immediately before slaughter. The Act requires compensation to be paid on poultry other than diseased poultry, and compensation is paid on the total number of birds in the flock less the estimated number of diseased birds. The value of each bird is calculated in accordance with a regularly reviewed scale of values which take into account the age of the birds at the time of slaughter. It is open to any flock owner who disputes the valuation of his flock to take the matter to independent arbitration.

Whaling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hon. Members wrote to him regarding whaling during the last six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Over the last six months, this Department has received and replied to some 5,000 letters. Of these, over 1,000 were from hon. Members on behalf of themselves or their constituents. Very many letters have welcomed the stand we are taking in the International Whaling Commission to help conserve and protect the world's stocks of whales and small cetaceans.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the steps he intends to take during his European presidency to press to end all commercial whaling, and protect whales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Trade in whale products by member states is already prohibited by the Community through regulations implementing the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES). Additionally, Council directive 92/43/EEC, adopted in May 1992, requires member states to take action to protect all species of whales by mid 1994. All forms of whaling within United Kingdom fishery limits are already banned and as far as we are aware, no whaling currently takes place within the fishery limits of other member states. Moreover, Denmark, France, Germany, Ireland, the Netherlands and Spain, like the United Kingdom, are members of the International Whaling Commission and, as such, are bound by its moratorium on commercial whaling.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Curry: Deregulation considerations form an integral part of this Department's normal working practice in respect of both EC and domestic legislation.

It is not possible, therefore, to assess separately what financial resources are utilised specifically for deregulatory purposes.

Agricultural Training Board

Mr. Conway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food following his Department's inspection of the Agricultural Training Board training services in 1988, what action has been taken to empower the director of ATB to adjust staff grades up to higher executive officer level within overall financial allocations.

Mr. Curry: The rules under which the director (now chief executive) of the Agricultural Training Board (ATB) currently operates are set out in the ATB financial memorandum which was signed on 10 May 1989. This gives the director the authority to create posts up to higher executive officer level without the prior consent of the Department. However the terms, allowances and conditions of service applicable must be approved by the Department.

Oak Dieback Disease

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his current assessment of the incidence and effect of oak dieback disease.

Mr. Curry: Oak dieback has been identified at about 40 sites in southern England, mainly in the east midlands. The growth of affected trees first started to decline in the mid 1980s, although the dieback did not become apparent until several years later. Similar problems on oak trees in several other countries in Europe have been recorded during the last decade.

There is no evidence that the dieback is caused by a contagious disease. Several different factors appear to be involved, of which water stress during the severe droughts in the 1980s seems to be the most important. The Forestry Commission is monitoring the situation carefully and so far it seems that oak dieback is unlikely to affect a large number of trees. Although fresh reports of dieback are still being received, the indications are that it has stabilised at most sites. Few new trees have been affected over the last two years, while trees affected in previous years have generally not deteriorated any further.

Further information is given in the Forestry Commission's Research information note 214, copies of which are in the Library.

Butterflies

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his conclusions from investigation by Government scientists for the Agricultural Development Advisory Service into the death of tropical butterflies at Fraddam in 1992, and the related matters of imported chrysalids and wind-borne farm pesticides.

Mr. Soames: The findings of a field investigation which was carried out on 9 June were inconclusive. No relationship was established between the deaths of the butterflies at Fraddam and the use of pesticides.

Mink

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms. Jackson) of 29 June, Official Report, column 401, if he will make a statement on the outcome of his consultations on the Mink (Keeping) Order 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I am considering the responses received to the consultation exercise, and I will make a decision in due course.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

County Courts

33. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what study he has made of the extent of the backlog of cases in the county courts in Greater London and the south east; and what action he proposes to take to improve the situation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department monitors closely the throughput of cases in the county courts by a system of performance indicators. The situation varies from court to court but average performance figures against targets are published in the Lord Chancellor's court service annual report.

Staffing levels have been increased in the London county courts by almost 5 per cent. in the past 12 months and 11 additional district judges have been appointed.

Legal Aid

34. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what recent representations he has received about the cost of legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor and I receive a good deal of correspondence about a number of aspects of the legal aid scheme, of which cost is one.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of people who were successful in obtaining legal aid certificates for civil cases during the year ended March 1992 had to pay an amount towards the cost involved; and what was the average cost per person.

Mr. John M. Taylor: For the year ended March 1992 16·1 per cent. of people granted legal aid certificates in civil cases were assessed as having to pay a contribution towards the cost. The average contribution received from each assisted person was just under £340.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give the number of people who were (a) granted and (b) refused legal aid in civil cases for the year ended March 1992.

Mr. John M. Taylor: For the year ended March 1992, 339,306 people were granted, and 100,030 were refused, legal aid certificates in civil cases.

Bankruptcy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) company bankruptcy debtor petitions and (b) personal bankruptcy debtor petitions were made in each of the last 12 quarters on the Wales and Chester court circuit.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The table shows the number of company winding up petitions and the number of bankruptcy petitions issued by both creditors and debtors in county courts on the Wales and Chester circuit for each of the past 12 quarters—the figures for 1992 are provisional. The company winding up figures include petitions issued in the High Court sitting at Cardiff. The number of petitions issued will not necessarily result in the same number of companies being wound up or individuals being made bankrupt.

Doncaster Magistrates Court

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the establishment figure of justices of the peace for Doncaster magistrates court; and how many are currently in place.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The establishment figure of justices of the peace for Doncaster magistrates court is 200, and the number of justices on the active list is 190.

PRIME MINISTER

Pitchford Hall

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what representations he has had on Her Majesty's Government's response to requests to take into public ownership Pitchford Hall and its contents in Shropshire;

(2) what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with (a) Lord Rothschild of the National Heritage Memorial Fund, (b) Hugh Stirling of the National Trust and (c) Jocelyn Stevens of English Heritage on the future of the contents of Pitchford Hall in Shropshire.

The Prime Minister: I have written to the hon. Member and have placed a copy of the letter in the Library.

Racial Harmony

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will use the United Kingdom presidency to promote a European Community directive on racial harmony;

(2) what steps he has taken under his presidency of the European Community to promote racial harmony in the Community.

The Prime Minister: The Government are opposed absolutely to discrimination on grounds of race. This position is reflected in all our discussions with our European partners on these matters.

The detailed legislative arrangements in other member states are, however, a matter for them, taking account of their particular circumstances.

During the United Kingdom presidency the Government will be taking any appropriate opportunity to encourage our European Community colleagues to consider best practice in combating racial discrimination. One such opportunity will be the equal opportunities conference to be hosted by the Department of Employment in Birmingham from 7 to 8 December.

Classless Society

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has brought forward in his presidency of the EC to realise a classless society.

The Prime Minister: The Government's policies are aimed, and will continue to be aimed, at widening opportunities for all members of society. The education, health and other public service reforms, including the citizens charter, will take this process forward during our presidency of the EC and beyond. A European conference on public services and the citizen will be held in London in December as part of the United Kingdom presidency.

Olympic Games

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement detailing the Government's financial commitment to Manchester's Olympic 2000 bid and the timing of its implementation.

The Prime Minister: On 26 February I announced a £55 million support package for Manchester's Olympic 2000 bid. Of this, £53 million is towards the provision of facilities in advance of the nomination and £2 million is to support the bid itself. The International Olympic Committee will decide the host city in September 1993. If Manchester's bid is successful, the Government will contribute to the provision of necessary facilities for the games.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Employment Statistics

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Protestants and Roman Catholics are employed by the Eastern area health and social services board; and what were the equivalent figures five years ago.

Mr. Hanley: The Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 required employers to monitor the religious breakdown of their work force by establishing the community background of each employee. The first date on which the breakdown of the perceived religious affiliation of the Eastern area health and social services board's work force is available is 1 January 1990 and the latest is 1 January 1992.

The figures are as follows:

	Protestant	Roman Catholic	Not known
1 January 1990	16,989	10,733	2,495
1 January 1992	16,299	10,878	3,237

Criminal Damage and Injury

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the legislative base for the payment of loss assessors and solicitors in Northern Ireland in respect of payments from public funds in (a) criminal damage claims and (b) criminal injury claims.

Mr. Mates: The reasonable costs and expenses incurred by applicants in making out and verifying their claims for criminal damage and criminal injuries compensation are payable under article 12(1) of the Criminal Damage (Compensation) (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 and article 13(1) of the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (Northern Ireland) Order 1988.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which colleges of further education have (a) higher education courses, (b) national diploma courses and (c) B tech courses.

Mr. Hanley: All 24 further education colleges offer national diploma and courses validated by the Business Technology Education Council. The following colleges also offer higher education courses:

Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education
North-West Institute of Further and Higher Education
Fermanagh College of Further Education
Limavady College of Further Education
Omagh College of Further Education
Ballymena College
Newtownabbey College of Further Education

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums he has provided in the current financial year, and what are his projections for each of the next three financial years, for extensions or rebuilding work at each of the colleges of further education in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: For major works in 1992-93, £350,000 was allocated for Fermanagh college and £2,157,000 for North Down and Ards college. The projected expenditure on North Down and Ards college for the next three years is as follows:

Year	Amount £
1993-94	4,058,000
1994-95	2,425,000
1995-96	1,045,000

Decisions have yet to be taken on new projects starting beyond 1992-93.

In addition the education and library boards are planning to spend some £394,000 of their minor works budgets in 1992-93 on adaptations and maintenance in colleges.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of full-time equivalent students at each college of further education in Northern Ireland; and what was the number of students for which the college was intended to cater.

Mr. Hanley: The initial capacity of many colleges is not known. In any case, adaptations of premises over the years to meet changing curricular needs have modified original intentions. However, the information that is available is as follows:

1990-91

College	Number of full-time equivalent students
Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education	8,604

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the funding for full-time equivalent students at colleges of further education in each education and library board area in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The latest year in respect of which audited accounts are available is 1990-91. The funding per full-time equivalent student in that year was:

Education and Library Board—Funding per full-time equivalent student

Belfast	2,427·25
Western	2,177·57
North-Eastern	2,525·80
South Eastern	2,363·56
Southern	2,282·56

Figures include the cost of students on the youth training programme based in the colleges.

Special Care Costs

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums were spent per child in each of the last three years on special care in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Hanley: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Electricity Arrears

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the total sums of arrears due to Northern Ireland Electricity; how much of this is for domestic property; and how much the corresponding figures were for one and three years ago.

Mr. Atkins: The arrears due to Northern Ireland Electricity at 30 June 1992 totalled £5·022 million. The corresponding figures for 1989 and 1991 were £6·064 million and £5·33 million, respectively. The proportion relating to domestic property generally remains constant at approximately 98 per cent. of the total arrears.

EC Students

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how manyy students from (a) the Irish Republic, (b) Great Britain, (c) other EC countries and (d) elsewhere were at each college of further education in Northern Ireland in the current academic year and in each of the last three years; and what is his estimate of the cost to United Kingdom funds of the studenss from other EC nations in each of those four years.

Mr. Hanley: Although it is not possible to calculate costs, the table sets out the information regarding student numbers over the past three years as follows. Figures are not available for the 1992-93 academic year.

[1] From 1991-92, Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to increase the amount of access funds available to students in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Department of Education for Northern Ireland, in making annual allocations for access funds available to students in Northern Ireland, follows the principle of parity with Great Britain. The amounts available for this purpose have been increased by 1·56 per cent. in 1992-93.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the amount of access funds allocated to teacher education colleges and universities in Northern Ireland for (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92; and if he will give the amounts paid out to date.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Under-fives

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the report on the inter-departmental review of policy and services for under-fives will be completed and ready for publication.

Mr. Hanley: The outcome of the under-fives review is expected to be announced later this year.

Quarrying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards the creation of coastal super-quarries.

Mr. Atkins: It is unlikely that the Northern Ireland coastline has the geological and marine conditions necessary for a coastal super-quarry.

However, should such a proposal come forward, an environmental impact assessment would be required as an integral part of the relevant planning application, which would be determined on its merits, if necessary after a public inquiry.

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the present proposals for reforms by the Northern Ireland milk marketing board were discussed with the European Commission; and if those proposals have the approval of the European Commission.

Mr. Hanley: The proposals for reforms from the Northern Ireland milk marketing board were sent, along with the proposals from the other United Kingdom milk marketing boards, to the European Commission in June. There have been no discussions with the Commission on the details of the Northern Ireland board's proposals. However in a letter to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Vice-President of the Commission, the right hon. Sir Leon Brittan, has said that the competition aspects of proposals presented by the Northern Ireland board do not have a real Community dimension and that the arrangements should be dealt with by the competent United Kingdom authorities.

Patients (Transfers)

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients have been transferred from Northern Ireland health board waiting lists to private health care surgeries in the Republic of Ireland; and what has been the total cost of this exercise since its commencement.

Mr. Hanley: The Northern health and social services board has contracted with Blackrock clinic, Dublin to provide plastic surgery for 32 patients on its waiting list. So far seven patients have been treated at a cost of £7,000. In addition one patient from the Southern health and social services board has received cardiac surgery at Blackrock clinic at a cost of £7,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Legislation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proportion of the time spent by the House in Report stages of Government Bills during the Session 1990-91 was taken up by debates on new clauses and amendments which did not conclude with a Division.

Mr. Newton: The total amount of time spent in Session 1990-91 on the Report stages of Government Bills was 95 hours and 47 minutes. The time taken up by debates on new clauses and amendments which did not conclude with a Division was 48 hours and 37 minutes, or 51 per cent. of the total time taken on Report stages of Government Bills.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on her policy on the continuation of wages councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government have made it clear on many occasions that the wages councils have no permanent place in the labour market.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workers are covered by each of the two largest wages councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is estimated that, in March 1992, 736,000 workers were covered by the retail trades (non-food) wages council and 538,000 by the licensed non-residential establishment wages council.

Unemployment

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current level of unemployment.

Mr. McLoughlin: In September 1992, the latest date for which claimant unemployment figures are available, the level of seasonally adjusted unemployment in the United Kingdom was 2,843,300.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were unemployed in each standard economic region, including Greater London, in June 1979, and in the latest monthly figures available, adjusted for seasonality and for discontinuities.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many men aged 16 to 64 years were registered as unemployed on 1 May 1992, 1 May 1991 and 1 May 1990 in (a) Blaenau Gwent, (b) Wales and (c) England; how many of them had been unemployed for more than six months and for more than 12 months; how many registered unemployed claimants in (i) Blaenau Gwent, (ii) Wales and (iii) England fail to qualify for unemployment benefit; and if she will present the unemployment figures as a percentage of all economically active males and provide comparable figures for unemployment rates and benefit entitlement for females.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information is contained in the tables.

(i) Figures for the number of claimant unemployed not in receipt of unemployment benefit are produced quarterly for the months of February, May, August and November, and are on the unadjusted basis. These figures are not available by gender or for parliamentary constituency areas.

(ii) Because of slight definitional and methodological differences the figures in the above table do not equate exactly with the figures in tables 1 and 2 relating to the total number of unemployed claimants.

(iii) The above figures include cases where entitlement to unemployment benefit has been exhausted and cases which, on the day of the count, had not been rated for benefit.

Social Policy

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which provisions on social and employment legislation defined by the agreement on social policy concluded between 11 member states of the European Community at Maastricht are also covered by articles 118a and 100a of the treaty of Rome.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Article 118a of the treaty of Rome provides for the adoption of directives establishing minimum requirements as regards workers' health and safety. Article 100a provides for the adoption of measures to assist the establishment or functioning of the internal market, but provisions are among those excluded from its scope.

"relating to the rights and interests of employed persons"

The United Kingdom is not a party to the separate agreement on social policy concluded between the other member states. The coverage and interpretation of that agreement's provisions are matters for the member states that signed it and, in the final analysis, for the European Court of Justice once the Maastricht treaty has entered into force.

Youth Training

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to increase the weekly allowance offered to non-employed 16 and 17-year-olds on youth training placements.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are no plans at present to increase minimum YT allowances. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment believes that the current minimum allowances are sufficient to meet the normal requirements of trainees living in the parental home. Trainees who live independently may apply for income support if they consider their income is insufficient to meet their needs. Employers benefit considerably from Government expenditure on YT and are strongly encouraged to supplement trainee incomes wherever possible.

Accidents

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give for each year since 1984 details of the number of times incidents have occurred at sites covered by the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 which required the activation of off-site emergency plans made under those regulations.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive does not hold information on the number of times incidents have occurred at sites covered by the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 which required the activation of off-site emergency plans made under those regulations.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the number of (a) deaths and (b) serious injuries on construction sites for each of the past five years and the names of those who were labour only sub-contractors; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information for Great Britain is provided in the following tables—extracted from Occasional Supplement No. 3 of the September 1992 Employment Gazette. Data for the latest year commencing 1 April 1991 are not yet available. Information identifying specific individuals is not released.

The Government and the Health and Safety Commission have recognised for some years that there needs to be a new approach to improve the management of health and safety in construction. Today, the commission is launching a major consultative document on proposed new construction (design and management) regulations and an approved code of practice. These will implement the design and management aspects of the European Community's temporary or mobile construction sites directive, adopted in June this year. The timing of the document is appropriate in view of the European Year of Safety's focus on construction as a high risk area. The regulations should help make construction sites much safer places to work in the future.

Social Action Programme

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list each initiative under the EC social action programme, indicating in each case (a) action and directives proposed or agreed by the Council of Ministers, (b) in which EC countries it has been adopted and implemented and (c) in which EC countries it has not been adopted and implemented.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is provided in the table.

Not all of the proposals in the EC social action programme are binding instruments required to be implemented by member states. Where binding instruments have been adopted, there is in every case some time still to elapse before they are required to be implemented in the domestic legislation of member states.

Disabled People

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what proportion of firms have complied with the quota for disabled people as laid down in the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944, supplying figures for each year since 1979 and by size of firm;

(2) what proportion of firms have been issued with block exemptions under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944, supplying figures for every year since 1979 and giving figures by size of firm.

Mr. McLoughlin: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Employment Agencies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals she has to strengthen her regulatory powers to register, monitor and supervise employment agencies; and what proposals she has to increase the supervisory powers she has over model agencies and to increase the minimum age at which young people can work as models without chaperones.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has no proposals to strengthen her powers over model agencies or employment agencies. There are no regulations which specifically govern the minimum age at which young people can work as models without chaperones. The Children (Performances) Regulations 1968 are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and are enforced by local education authorities.

Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the progress of the National Council for Vocational Qualifications programme and its implementation.

Mr. McLoughlin: The National Council for Vocational Qualifications is making good progress in meeting the target set by my right hon. and learned Friend, the previous Secretary of State for Employment, that by the end of 1992 national vocational qualifications covering 80 per cent. of the work force up to NVQ level 4 are available, and in all the most important occupational areas.

There are currently some 430 national vocational qualifications accredited by the council covering about 73 per cent. of the work force in over 40 major industries. The council is well on course to achieve the 80 per cent. target.

The council is taking a leading role in helping to ensure that awareness and take up of national vocational qualifications is raised. The council's national communications strategy, which was launched by the Prime Minister in January 1992, is involving employer and other organisations in promoting NVQs.

Employment (Over-50s)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new proposals her Department has to promote employment among unemployed people over 50 years of age.

Mr. McLoughlin: We believe that it is in employers' own interests to make effective use of the skills and experience that older people possess. Our new advisory group on older workers will meet later this autumn. It will identify and encourage examples of good employment practice with regard to older workers, and seek to persuade employers to treat all applicants on their merits.

Euroform Initiative

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 3 July to the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman), Official Report, column 714, which person or bodies are responsible for choosing successful applicants for the Euroform initiative; how many applicants were unsuccessful; by what means the fund was advertised; and if he will place in the Library a document showing the amount of grant made to each of the 175 projects mentioned in the answer naming the recipient organisation and the purposes to which the grant will be put.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A Euroform programme committee has been set up, comprising of representatives from local authorities, higher education institutions, voluntary bodies, training and enterprise councils, the European Commission and Employment Department. This committee made the selection of projects to be funded under Euroform. Out of 277 bids, 102 were unsuccessful.

Information about the Euroform initiative was made available through the existing European social fund committee structures, through Community action programme networks—FORCE and EUROTECHNET—and to all organisations which registered an interest.

Of the 175 projects originally given approval in principle, 62 have yet to be formally approved due to delays in applicants providing the necessary financial information and/or confirmation of transitional partnerships. Once these projects are cleared, a complete list will be placed in the Library detailing the projects to be assisted.

Redundancies

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what calculations or assumptions are made of the consequential effects of redundancies, and reduced purchasing power, on employment in the supply of other goods or services; what studies have been made of such effects in areas of local employment offices where major redundancies in shipbuilding, coal mining, engineering or other employment concentrations have taken place; and what conclusions have been drawn from such studies.

Mr. McLoughlin: The effect of redundancies varies with the circumstances involved. The Department does not therefore use any standard assumptions in assessing any knock-on effects of redundancies on the localities in question or on the economy overall.

Since 1990, the Department has commissioned two studies looking at the broader effects of large-scale redundancies on local economies. The first entitled "Sellafield Redundancies: Labour Market Effects" examined the rundown of construction activity at British Nuclear Fuel's Sellafield site. The research, which was undertaken by the Planning, Industrial and Economic Development Advisers (PIEDA) consultancy, indicated that for every 100 jobs disappearing at the Sellafield construction site, about 20 additional jobs would disappear in the rest of the west Cumbrian economy. The second study, entitled "Research into Redundancies at VSEL, Barrow", was also undertaken by PIEDA. This study looked at the effects of the expected fall in employment at the VSEL shipyards in Barrow on the local travel-to-work area. The consultants estimated that for every 100 jobs lost at the shipyards, an additional 11 jobs would disappear in the local economy. The studies did not examine the broader effects, either positive or negative, outside these localities on the United Kingdom economy overall.

Industrial Disputes

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many days were lost through industrial action by staff in higher education in (a) 1978 and (b) 1992; and how many separate incidents were involved.

Mr. McLoughlin: A breakdown of industrial action by staff specifically in higher education is not available for 1978. However, a total of 1,000 days were lost in six stoppages of work by staff in all educational services in 1978. This compares with a loss of 27 thousand days in 22 stoppages in 1991, the latest calendar year for which data are available.

As a result of changes in the industrial classification system, data on higher education have been available since 1982. On this basis, a provisional total of 4,000 days have been lost in three stoppages of work by staff in higher education in the eight months to August 1992, the latest period for which statistics are available.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Land

24. Mr. Steen: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, how many acres of dormant, vacant and derelict land are currently in the Church Commissioners' ownership; and how many offices and houses are currently vacant.

Mr. Alison: At 30 June, excluding woods, roads and verges, et cetera, 600 acres of our land were unlet as were 15 offices—or parts of offices—and 85 houses or flats.

25. Mr. Flynn: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what plans the commissioners have to change the conditions under which they let church land.

Mr. Alison: The commissioners have no such plans in respect of their own land. Letting of other church land is a matter for the diocese or parish concerned.

WALES

NHS Trusts

14. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to make an announcement following the consultation on trust status applications from health units in Clwyd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend is still considering the representations made during public consultation and hopes to announce his decisions shortly.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what policy considerations he will utilise in relation to whole health authority national health service trust applications.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The decision whether to seek national health service trust status is a matter for individual health units and the ambulance service. Each application for national health service trust status must demonstrate benefits to patients and quality improvement, management capability and capacity, involvement of key professional staff, especially consultants in management and financial soundness.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen and women of the Welsh health authorities, community health councils and family health service authorities regarding policy on community health services trust status applications.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Each application for national health service trust status is subject to public consultation, which statutorily includes the relevant community health councils. In addition, health authorities and family health service authorities are among a range of consultees who are invited to comment on proposals contained in an application.

Beaches

15. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to ensure that all Welsh beaches attain the highest standards of cleanliness.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A major investment programme is in hand by Dwr Cymru to enable all waters in Wales identified under the EC Bathing Waters Directive to meet the directive's mandatory bacteriological standards.

In addition, the Government have introduced provisions in the Environmental Protection Act 1990 which place local authorities and others under a duty to keep beaches clear of litter and refuse.

Unemployment

16. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he intends to introduce to curb the increase in Welsh unemployment.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Office and agencies which already operate a range of measures to increase employment opportunities will continue to look for further opportunities which will increase employment prospects.

Housing

17. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the figure for the total amount in local authority housing capital receipt accounts across Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest information available relates to 31 March 1991, when local councils held £32·7 million of housing capital receipts and this sum may be re-used by the councils.

At the same date, after allowing for redemption, Welsh local councils had outstanding loan debt of £976·3 million on their housing revenue accounts.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultations he has had with the chairman of Tai Cymru concerning the impact of the proposals contained in his consultation paper on the future development of Welsh housing associations on (a) smaller housing associations, (b) housing associations specialising in infill and refurbishment and (c) small builders;

(2) what standards of (a) building development and (b) management capabilities he proposes to set as a minimum quality threshold for Welsh housing associations; what consultations he has had with (i) Tai Cymru, (ii) the Welsh Federation of Housing Associations and (iii) the Welsh Association of District Councils concerning the relationship between the development of new-build housing association development and the management of the housing association-owned estate; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what consultations he has had with the chairman of Tai Cymru concerning the reduction of the number of housing associations in Wales approved and grant aided for (a) building new affordable housing and (b) managing estates.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: These are matters which it is for the board of Housing for Wales to consider in the light of the consultation process currently under way.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning supplementary credit approvals for local authority housing estate partnership programmes in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the estate partnership programme an initial supplementary credit approval of £3 million has recently been offered to Cardiff city council and one of £1·5 million to Merthyr Tydfil borough council to help them fund remedial works on the Ely West and Gurnos estates respectively. Discussions with Arfon borough council continue as regards their proposals for Tai Station estate, Bangor.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on the modernisation of aging council housing stock in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for local authorities to address when deciding their priorities within the framework provided by "Housing in Wales: An Agenda for Action".

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of Welsh households in 1991 (a) lacked or shared a bath or shower, (b) had no inside WC, (c) had no central heating or (d) lived in a density of more than one per room.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) has to date published only a selection of 1991 census results in the county monitor series (CEN 91 CM). The Wales percentages given as follows for 1991 are provisional as they are derived directly from the rounded statistics in those monitors. National level results will be released by OPCS in November 1992 and more detailed results published in county reports later this year and in 1993. Percentages for 1981 are also given in the following table.

Percentage of households in Wales

		Per cent.
		[1]1991	1981
a. and b.	which lacked exclusive use of a bath or shower and/or an inside WC	1·7	6·7
c.	which lacked central heating	18·5	([2])
d.	with more than 1 person per room	1·6	2·8

[2] This question was not asked in 1981.

Health Services, South Glamorgan

18. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the future of hospital services in Cardiff.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Our officials are in close touch with the authority about its strategic plan and my right hon. Friend expects to be in a position to consider it in the spring of next year.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the recommendation to the health authority at its meeting of 16 July that (a) all accident and emergency services and (b) all paediatric hospital services should be moved to the University hospital of Wales, the Heath, Cardiff; what assessment he has made of the need to review his acceptance of the authority's 10-year strategic plan; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the withdrawal of the third district general hospital from the authority's 10-year strategy;

(3) what consultations he has had with the vice-chair of the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the date of review of the South Glamorgan health authority 10-year strategic plan.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The health authority was asked in 1989 to review its strategic plan. The outcome is likely to be submitted to my right hon. Friend before Christmas. Until then, the proposals in the plan are a matter for the authority; and my right hon. Friend has not consulted the chairman or vice-chairman of the authority on any aspect of this issue, though naturally officials are in close touch.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to appoint a new chair of the South Glamorgan health authority; if he will advertise the post; and what proposals he has to ensure the appointing procedure achieves compliance with equal opportunities legislation and principles.

Mr. David Hunt: On 23 July I announced the appointment of Mr. Ian Grist as chairman of South Glamorgan district health authority for a four-year term commencing on 1 August 1992. Public appointments are not normally filled as a consequence of advertising. All public appointments are made irrespective of sex on the basis of aptitude and merit.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the date for decision on the application for waiting list initiative capital approval by South Glamorgan health authority for a third orthopaedic operating theatre at the Prince of Wales orthopaedic hospital, Rhydlafar at Cardiff.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I announced on 6 October an allocation of £94,350 to support the development by South Glamorgan health authority of a third operating theatre at the Prince of Wales hospital.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultation he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the suspension on full pay of the unit general manager of the Cardiff royal group of hospitals.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has had no consultations with the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority on this matter. This is an internal management issue for the authority.

District Council Boundaries

19. Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when next he plans to meet the leaders of local authorities in mid Glamorgan to discuss the realignment of district council boundaries in that county.

Mr. David Hunt: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has already met delegations from each of the Mid Glamorgan district councils during the present phase of consultation.

Family Expenditure

20. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average expenditure of a family consisting of two parents and two children in (a) Blaenau Gwent and (b) Wales; and what is the current level of income support for such a family.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Estimated average expenditure for all types of Welsh households for the two year period 1989 to 1990 was £212 per week. The average weekly income support of recipients in Wales who have dependants was estimated to be £66 in May 1991. More detailed breakdowns of these estimates, either by area or type of household, are not available.

Traffic Accidents

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children under school-leaving age had been injured in road traffic accidents in Wales (a) prior to the launch of his Department's target to reduce road casualties by one third by the year 2000 and (b) for the latest year for which figures are available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

Child Road Casualties[1]

	Number
1981-85 average[2]	2,326
1986[3]	2,181
1991[4]	2,344

[1] Children under 16 years of age.
[2] Baseline for reduction target.
[3] Year preceding target launch.
[4] Provisional.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of road traffic accidents in Wales in the latest year for which figures are available; and how many such accidents resulted in head injuries, according to each standard age cohort.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In 1991, the total number of road traffic accidents in Wales was 10,824. Information relating to head injuries resulting from road accidents is not collected centrally.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what has been the total expenditure over the last three available years by the Welsh Development Agency on projects involving the redevelopment of town centres;

(2) what was the total sum spent by the Welsh Development Agency in the latest available year on the acquisition of properties;

(3) what has been the total expenditure so far paid by way of the Welsh Development Agency to outside consultants in respect of the agency's involvement in the southern area project in Llanelli;

(4) what was the total expenditure of the Welsh Development Agency in the latest available year on outside consultancy services;

(5) what has been the total expenditure so far by the Welsh Development Agency on the southern area project at Llanelli;

(6) who are the representatives of the Welsh Development Agency on the joint committee set up by the agency and Llanelli borough council to oversee the management of the redevelopment of Llanelli town centre;

(7) What is the estimated likely total expenditure at current prices of the southern area project at Llanelli carried out by the Welsh Development Agency;

(8) what has been the total amount spent so far by the Welsh Development Agency on the acquisition of properties in connection with (a) the south Llanelli project and (b) the redevelopment of Llanelli town centre;

(9) whether he will list the names of all the outside consultants who have so far been engaged jointly by the Welsh Development Agency and Llanelli borough council in connection with the redevelopment of the Llanelli town centre;

(10) whether he will list the names of the three outside consultancies which received most remuneration by way of fees from the Welsh Development Agency in the latest available year;

(11) what is the limited contribution of the Welsh Development Agency to the joint venture between the agency and Llanelli borough council for the redevelopment of the Llanelli town centre.

Mr. David Hunt: Operational issues are a matter for the Welsh Development Agency. I have therefore arranged for the chief executive of the agency to write to the right hon. Gentleman and for a copy of his response to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list the outside directorships of each member of the board of the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not kept centrally. However, it is a condition of board membership that no outside interests are maintained which would be likely to conflict with such membership.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total sum spent by the Welsh Development Agency in the latest available year on the clearance of derelict land.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1990-91 the WDA spent £24 million on the reclamation of derelict land. Accounts for the year 1991-92 will be published shortly.

Youth Training

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many young people currently awaiting places on youth training schemes in Wales are currently in receipt of bridging allowance; and what is the total value of the allowance.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of young people in receipt of bridging allowances at August 1992 in Wales was 515.

The value of the allowance is £15 per week per person.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many trainees are currently on youth training schemes in Wales; and how many were deemed to need assistance with (a) numeracy and (b) literacy.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The most recent information available (estimates at 13 September 1992) indicates that there were approximately 14,300 trainees on youth training schemes in Wales.

Training and enterprise councils have an obligation to provide for young people with a numeracy or literacy need, but are not required to collect statistics indicating the numbers involved. The figures requested are, therefore, not available.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the percentage level for unemployment amongst youth training leavers in Wales in each year since 1989-90.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information relating to the percentage level of unemployment amongst youth training leavers in Wales is provided in the table.

Unemployment amongst youth training leavers (Wales)

	per cent.
April 1989 to March 1990	15·9
April 1990 to March 1991	22·5
April 1991 to December 1991[1]	26·2

[1] Latest period for which information is currently available.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the overall budget allocated for youth training in Wales during 1991-92 and 1992-93; if he will publish the estimated budget level for 1993-94; and how much has been allocated per youth training place on average in each instance.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The youth training budget for 1991-92 was £52·152 million and for 1992-93 is £48·441 million; information relating to budgets for 1993-94 is not yet available.

The average price per filled place was £53·80 per week for 1991-92 and is £49·40 per week for 1992-93.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of trainees on youth training placements achieved qualifications as part of their placement in each training and enterprise council area in Wales during each of the last three years; and what percentage of placements were brought to an end within three months in each training and enterprise council area.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information relating to the achievement of qualifications on youth traning and numbers of youth training leavers within three months is provided in the tables.

Qualifications obtained during 1990-91

	Full qualification Per cent.	Part qualification Per cent.
Gwent	26	17
Swansea	35	21
Cardiff	29	19
Wrexham	40	23

The figures relate to the four areas of Wales which existed prior to the setting up of training and enterprise councils (TECs). Reliable figures on qualifications obtained are not available for TECs for 1990-91, since TECs in Wales were mostly operational for only a small part of the year.

Table 2

Gwent	26	15
West Wales	36	22
Mid Glamorgan	27	19
South Glamorgan	26	15
North West Wales	46	24

These are the latest available figures for TECs, since follow up of YT leavers is undertaken six months after leaving.

Figures for north east Wales and Powys are not available owing to the low number of respondents to the follow up survey in those areas.

The figures show the percentages of all leavers who spent less than three months with a training provider. They include those who transferred from one provider to another during the period.

Information is not available on the number of placements brought to an end within three months.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department will publish an estimated figure for the number of 16 and 17-year-olds in Wales who are without a job or a place on a training scheme and who are not in full-time education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have recently introduced new measures which will enable this information to be collected on a monthly basis. The first monthly count has only just been completed and we intend to publish this information as soon as we are satisfied that it is both comprehensive and accurate.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many 16 and 17-year-olds have been (a) killed and (b) seriously injured in work-related training placement accidents on youth training and youth training schemes in Wales in each year since 1983.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of individuals who have been killed or injured on youth training schemes in Wales in each year since 1983 is given in the following table. Separate figures, by age, are not available.

Wales

1991	1	37	140

Notes

(a) Employment Department figures for trainees have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive for employed persons. However, the Employment Department's figures include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments, and road traffic accidents, which would not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individuals been employed.

(b) Major injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985. These regulations, which came into force on 1 April 1986, re-classified fractured wrists and ankles as major injuries. These were not classed as major injuries in the previous regulations, the Notifications of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 (NADOR).

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which training and enterprise councils in Wales are currently not fulfilling the Government's guarantee of a training place on youth training schemes for all 16 and 17-year-olds in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have recently introduced new measures which will enable information to be collected regularly to help identify localised difficulties, and which will encourage closer liaison between training and enterprise councils and careers services. The first monthly count under the new arrangement has only just been completed and it is therefore too early for the full picture to emerge. However, we have made it abundantly clear that we regard meeting the YT guarantee by TECs as of paramount importance and have said that no TEC will be prevented by lack of resource from meeting the guarantee.

Health Education

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what work is currently undertaken by his Department into the teaching of the dangers of alcohol abuse within the school curriculum in Wales;

(2) what research work is currently undertaken by his Department to evaluate the teaching of sex education in schools in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Teaching about the dangers of alcohol abuse and sex education are part of the cross curricular theme of health education within the national curriculum. It is subject to inspection by Her Majesty's inspectors of schools who have undertaken several surveys of provision in counties in Wales. Our new arrangements for inspections by registered inspectors will ensure more published reports on all aspects of the life of a school.

The Welsh Office provides funding for the appointment of local education authority health education co-ordinators who are closely involved in teaching in schools and make regular reports on provision and practice.

Weight Statistics

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of young people between the ages of 16 and 19 years are (a) normal weight, (b) 8 per cent. overweight, (c) 1 per cent. obese and (d) under normal weight in each health authority in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally. However, a survey carried out in 1990 by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales found that in the 18 to 24 year age group, 24 per cent. of men and 27 per cent. of women in Wales were overweight.

For the purpose of the study a person was considered to be overweight if that person's weight (measured in kilograms) divided by the square of their height (measured in metres^2) is greater than 24 in the case of men or 23 in the case of women.

Deregulation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. David Hunt: I have made all my staff aware of the need to consider the potential for deregulation of existing regulatory measures and of the need to assess compliance costs of any new regulations in Wales. I have provided £54,000 for my departmental deregulation unit to co-ordinate this work in my Department and with Departments in England since the Government introduced their deregulation initiative in 1985.

Job Creation Schemes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to conclude his attempts to produce a comparable methodology for the evaluation of job creation schemes undertaken by the Welsh Development Agency, the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Welsh Office Industry Department; what consultancy assistance he is using for this exercise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The development of evaluation techniques is a continuing process which the Department and other bodies will take forward in the light of the recent report by the Public Accounts Committee (HCP 76), calling on external consultancy advice as necessary.

Smoking

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the percentage of (a) males and (b) females between the ages of 16 and 19 years in Wales who are regular smokers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available estimates are given in the table:

	Daily smokers per cent.	Smoking at least weekly per cent.
Female	19	29

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the total earnings from tourism in Wales in each year since 1981; and if he will break the figures down according to (a) earnings from United Kingdom staying visitors, (b) overseas visitors and (c) day visitors.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Estimates of expenditure by overnight visitors to Wales are given in the table. Estimates of expenditure by day visitors are available only for the financial year ending on 31 March 1989 when an estimated £22 million was spent in Wales.

(Source: The leisure day visits survey 1988-89, conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on behalf of the Department of Employment and the British Tourist Authority.)

It is not possible to make a direct comparison between the results of this latter survey and those of earlier surveys.

Alcohol Consumption

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the percentage of young people between the age of 16 to 19 years who drink alcohol at least once a week in each health authority area in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available best estimates from the Health Promotion Authority for Wales are as follows:

Pregnant Girls

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many girls under 16 years became pregnant in each health authority area in Wales in each year since 1981.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Data on conceptions are not available at district health authority level. However, the number of conceptions to girls aged under 16 usually resident in Wales, which led to a maternity or were terminated by abortion under the Abortion Act 1967, are presented in the table. Conceptions which led to an illegal or spontaneous abortion are excluded.

Road Safety

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives of local councils in Wales to discuss levels of provision for road safety measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Local government finance issues are discussed at the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance, a meeting of which I chaired on 6 July.

Ecstasy

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to undertake detailed research on the use of MDMA (ecstasy) in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Data are currently collected on the incidence of drug misusers presenting for treatment in Wales. A specialist sub-committee of the Welsh Committee for Drug Misuse is already looking at methodologies for undertaking prevalence studies.

Children's Hospital

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of Welsh health authorities concerning the provision of a specialist children's hospital for Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. I am aware, however, that South Glamorgan health authority has commissioned the King's Fund to assess the feasibility and viability of a proposal to establish a comprehensive child health service providing specialist services to children across Wales.

Bruce Report

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the Bruce report on careers guidance and education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The review of careers guidance was an internal review carried out by the Employment Department. It is not customary to publish and release internal reviews. The review was taken into account in the consultation exercise which led to proposals for developing careers advice and guidance published in the White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century" (Cm. 156, Volume 1, Chapter 7).

Disability

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the latest available figures for the number of disabled people in Wales between the ages of 16 years and 64 years indicating the total number currently in work/training and the total number registered as unemployed.

Sir Wyn Roberts: At 31 March 1991 there were 147,918 people on the register of handicapped people in Wales. No information is held centrally on the numbers of disabled people between the ages of 16 and 64, nor the numbers in work/training or registered unemployed.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been allocated by his Department to each local authority in Wales, in the latest year for which figures are available, to provide portable ramps to assist physical access into buildings; if he will list the buildings which have been granted funds in each local authority area; and if he will indicate which of these buildings were utilised as polling stations during the last general election.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Expenditure on portable access ramps is a matter for individual local authorities in the light of the overall resources available to them and their service priorities.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what statistics he has concerning increased waiting lists for the fitting of adaptions and aids for the physically disabled under the disabled facilities grant scheme since 1 April; and what were the numbers on Welsh local authority waiting lists on (a) 1 January 1991, (b) 1 July 1991, (c) 1January 1992 and (d) 1 July 1992, respectively.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on such waiting lists is not held centrally.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people with disabilities are registered with the Employment Service and therefore qualify for a green card in Blaenau Gwent; what percentage of these people is registered unemployed; and what are the comparable figures for Wales as a whole.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of people registered as disabled under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 and who are therefore eligible to receive a certificate of registration (green card) in the Blaenau Gwent constituency is 504. The comparable figure for Wales is 21,998. These are the latest figures, based on a count conducted in April 1992.

Information is not available about the percentage of registered disabled people in Blaenau Gwent and Wales who are registered unemployed.

Young Offenders

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the Welsh Office working party on secure accommodation for young offenders to present its report.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The working party under the chairmanship of the chief executive of West Glamorgan county council, is charged with taking forward the detailed design and planning of the new secure unit and I look forward to the provision of secure accommodation being pursued as quickly as possible.

European Centre

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make representations to the European Community for additional structural fund monies so as to allow more Welsh companies and organisations to subscribe to the European centre project.

Mr. David Hunt: It would not be appropriate for me to seek specific additional structural fund resources from the European Commission to support such initiatives. It would be for the relevant programme committee to determine whether or not applications submitted by sponsors for assistance with their contributions to the Wales European centre were eligible for structural fund support and, if so, whether these should be afforded sufficient priority to secure a part of the available resources.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many visitors have called at the Wales European centre in Brussels to date; and what are the estimated targets for visitor numbers in 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of visitors calling at the Wales European centre from April 1992 to September 1992 was 260. This compares favourably with initial estimates for the number of visitors during 1992-93 of 400.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the companies and organisations which have subscribed to the Wales European centre project to date.

Mr. David Hunt: The following organisations have subscribed, or have agreed to subscribe, to the Wales European centre: the Welsh Development Agency, the Assembly of Welsh Counties, 34 of the district councils, six of the training and enterprise councils, the development Board for Rural Wales and the University of Wales College, Cardiff.

Children in Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children and young people were admitted to local authority care in each Welsh local authority area in both 1990 and 1991; and if he will express this both as total numbers and as a proportion per thousand children.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The numbers of children and young people admitted to local authority care for the years ended 31 March 1990 and 1991 are shown in the table.

All admissions were of children aged under 18 years.

Slate

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made by his Department to date on the promoting of the sale of Welsh slate within other member countries of the EC.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Office does not promote specific products. However, Government agencies like the Welsh Development Agency and the Development Board for Rural Wales offer help to individual companies with marketing and sourcing of their products and services both within the United Kingdom and overseas.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy not to change the formula for allocating central government finance to local authorities in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The formulae for distributing resources within the local government revenue settlement have been agreed annually between the Welsh Office and the Welsh local authority associations through the forum of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance. The formulae for 1993-94 need to take account of changes in local government functions from 1 April 1993 and the introduction of the council tax on the same date. The distribution formulae will be set out in the Welsh Local Government finance report 1993-94 to be laid before the House in the new year.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what policy considerations underlay his decision to change the financial allocation to local authorities for expenditure on the disabled facilities grants scheme from the basic credit approval sector to the supplementary credit approval with effect from 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Resources for disabled facilities grant are already provided within local authorities' basic credit approvals. This allows for the necessary flexibility of operational response in providing the support best suited to the needs of disabled people.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps have been undertaken to date by his Department to assist economic development and training in (a) Estonia, (b) Lithuania, (c) Slovenia, (d) Ukraine, (e) the Russian Federation and (f) Slovakia.

Mr. David Hunt: A delegation from the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic visited Wales in 1990. Although my Department has not taken any special initiatives, I am aware that considerable efforts have been made by others, including the Welsh Development Agency, in assisting economic development and training in some of the former eastern bloc countries.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the attendance record of the board members of the Cardiff Bay Development Corporation for each of the past two years at all full board meetings.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is shown in the table.

[2] Per cent. covers tables 1 to 4.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has made for the auditing of the accounts of the Cardiff Bay Development Corporation; what reserve powers the National Audit Office has, for involvement in the auditing process of the corporation's accounts; what proposals he has to change the arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have nothing to add to the letter that I wrote to the hon. Gentleman on 28 September.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has made or proposes to make for public consultation on the Wallace Evans and Partners study of the potential of de-watering wells for the combating of waterlogging of land areas within the protected property line published by the Cardiff Bay Development Corporation in connection with the proposed Cardiff bay barrage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: As I indicated to the hon. Gentleman on 24 June at col. 217, I have sought the views of Mr. Roy Stoner, Cardiff Bay Development Corporation, Cardiff city council and the National Rivers Authority on the results of the report. Copies were also sent for information to petitioners against the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill and other bodies with a known interest.

Special Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children in special schools were without a statement of needs in (a) January 1986 and (b) January 1991, in each county in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information relating to January 1986 is not available. Data for the next available year and 1991 are shown in the table:

	Non-statemented pupils
	1987	[1]1991
Clwyd	0	49
Gwent	16	0
Gwynedd	0	2
Mid Glamorgan	1	1
Powys	0	8

[1] From 1989 onwards, information on statemented pupils in special schools was collected at September.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on his policies for children in special schools;

(2) if he will make a statement on the working of the Education Act 1981 concerning children in special schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Our policy for children in special schools, as with other children, is to provide them with the opportunities to make the most of their potential. The Government have undertaken a fundamental review of the relevant provisions of the Education Act 1981 and we are bringing forward proposals to improve the current assessment and statementing process, to give parents the right to express a preference for their child's school and to provide a new appeal system. The details are in the consultation document "Special Education Needs—Access to the System" which was published on 15 July and a copy of which is in the Library of the House. These proposals will benefit not only children in special schools but all children with special educational needs.

Minerals

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning his approach to the review of the provisions of the Town and Country Planning (Minerals) Act 1981: Old Mineral Permissions.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The responses to the consultation paper issued in March on old mining permissions are under consideration. Further consultation is likely before any detailed proposals are implemented.

Speed Traps

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what contracts he has awarded to BEAMAX for the installation and maintenance of radar camera and security systems speed traps on the M4, Severn bridge and trunk roads; when they were awarded; by what process of competitive tender; and for how long.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department has not awarded any contracts to BEAMAX.

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many milk producers in Wales currently deal with the Milk Marketing Board.

Mr. David Hunt: The figure is 5,289 as at August 1992.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the National Farmers Union and the Farmers Union of Wales in Wales concerning the future of the Milk Marketing Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I am in regular contact with the National Farmers Union and the Farmers Union of Wales and both unions have responded to the consultation document on the future of the England and Wales Milk Marketing Board. These responses will be considered along with others I have received.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers of patients waiting for in-patient treatment on 31 March for each individual health authority (a) in total and (b) by main speciality for periods (i) under 12 months, (ii) 12 to 24 months and (iii) over 24 months.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information on waiting lists in Wales as at 31 March 1992 was published in "Welsh Hospital Waiting List Bulletin: 1992 No. 2" on 23 September and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

The percentage of in-patients waiting over 12 months are shown in tables 1.1-1.10 and those waiting over 24 months are shown in table 2.1.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers of patients waiting for out-patient treatment on 31 March for each individual health authority (a) in total and (b) by main speciality for periods (i) under 12 months, (ii) 12 to 24 months and (iii) over 24 months.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information on waiting lists in Wales as at 31 March 1992 was published in "Welsh Hospital Waiting List Bulletin: 1992 No. 2" on 23 September and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Information is available only on the percentage of out-patients waiting over three months and is shown in tables 1.1-1.10.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the male and female populations aged 16 years and over are economically active in (a) Blaenau Gwent and (b) Wales.

Mr David Hunt: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) have to date published only a selection of 1991 census results in the county monitor series (CEN 91 CM). The Wales percentages given in the following table are provisional as they are derived directly from the rounded statistics in those monitors. National level results will be published in November 1992.

Percentage of Working Age Group Economically Active, 1991

	Males (16-64 Years) per cent.	Females (15-59 Years) per cent.
a. Blaenau Gwent	77·1	58·1
b. Wales	81·2	62·5

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest male unemployment figure in (a) the Shotton travel-to-work area, (b) the Alyn and Deeside constituency and (c) the county of Clwyd.

Mr. David Hunt: The September 1992 male unemployment claimant figures are 5,965, 2,345 and 12,345 for the Shotton, Flint and Rhyl travel-to-work area, Alyn and Deeside constituency and county of Clwyd respectively.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the number of people in Wales (a) who have two jobs and (b) who are counted more than once in the employment figures.

Mr. David Hunt: Estimates derived from the Labour Force Survey of 3,000 households in Wales in spring 1992 suggest that 4·3 per cent. of employees had second jobs. Such estimates are subject to sampling variability.

The exact number of people who are counted more than once in compiling the official estimates of employees in employment is not known. These latter estimates are based on figures collected from employers who do not generally know if an employee is filling the post as an additional job.

Welsh World Trade Centre

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to occupy space in the Welsh world trade centre in 1993.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has no current plans to take office space at the Welsh world trade centre. We will consider taking space at any relevant exhibitions which are held there.

Farming Enterprises

Mr. Morgan To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the NFU Wales and the Farmers Union of Wales regarding the viability of Welsh farming enterprises in Wales following the collapse of the auctioneers and mart-owners King Thomas Lloyd-Jones.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received a number of letters on this matter but have had no formal consultations on this issue with the farming unions.

Water Pollution

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a progress report on the identification, monitoring and classification of private water supplies in Wales for nitrate.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local authorities are responsible for private water supplies in their areas. Paragraphs 7·7 and 7·8 of Welsh Office circular 68/91 (copies of which are in the Library of the House) specify the timescale for providing me with reports. The information the hon. Gentleman is seeking will not be available centrally until after June 1993.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the surveys that are being carried out to identify the vulnerability of aquifers in Wales;

(2) if he will publish a list of contaminated land sites in Wales which threaten groundwater quality.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The National Rivers Authority is currently producing a series of groundwater vulnerability maps, which will be based on geological and soil characteristics. These will enhance the NRA's ability to assess the risks from a number of factors, including those arising from contaminated land. In addition the authority routinely monitors groundwater, principally that used for potable supplies.

Surveys of potentially contaminated land have been undertaken on behalf of the Welsh Office and the Welsh Development Agency, the most recent of these in 1987-88. A copy of this survey is available in the Library of the House.

Investment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of his current and forthcoming overseas visit or visits to attract inward investment to Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have recently returned from an inward investment mission to the United States, Korea, Japan and Hong Kong. I have not yet arranged further visits.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of public investment in Clwyd since 1980; and if he will list the main headings of such investment.

Mr. David Hunt: County estimates of gross domestic fixed capital formation by function of government have, so far, only been prepared for 1987 and 1988. These estimates were published in the Regional Accounts article of the November 1990 issue of Economic Trends (No. 445). The publication of figures for 1989 and 1990 is scheduled for the December 1992 issue.

Dentists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of dentists now leaving dentistry in Wales and in the United Kingdom for practices abroad.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of dentists in the national health service in Wales who are not accepting new patients.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally. General dental practitioners are independent contractors who are free to decide which patients to accept or reject.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dentists are awaiting determination of or have declared bankruptcy in Wales in each of the last three years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave him on 2 June 1992 at cols. 433-35.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he proposes to improve working conditions of dentists in the national health service in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The working conditions of general dental practitioners at their practice premises are their own responsibility, subject to health and safety regulations. In broader terms, the Government have initiated a fundamental review of the dental remuneration system. This review is being undertaken by Sir Kenneth Bloomfield who is to report by the end of the year.

Employment Initiatives

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new financial initiatives he intends to introduce to attract new jobs to Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Regional selective assistance continues to prove an effective instrument and remains the cornerstone of our efforts which have already succeeded in securing considerable inward investment and helped many Welsh businesses to expand. Initiatives such as the financial services initiative and IT Wales are kept under review to ensure that they achieve the maximum effect in their target sectors.

Textiles

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made by his Department to date on the promotion of Welsh textiles within other EC member states.

Mr. David Hunt: There are no specific programmes to promote Welsh textiles in other EC member states. However, as part of its garment initiative the WDA is active in helping to develop the Welsh clothing industry.

Anaesthetists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by regional health authority the current establishment requirement for anaesthetists; and how many are in post.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No establishment requirement figure is set by the Department. The Royal College of Anaesthetists issues guidance to individual hospital units on the numbers and experience of anaesthetists required to satisfy the range of services provided.

Bids for new posts are received by the Department and advice is sought from the Welsh Medical and Dental Manpower Committee.

Provisional figures as at 30 September 1991, the latest figures which are available, show that there were 146 consultant anaesthetists in post in Wales (including locums) with a whole-time equivalent of 131·0.

Brick Making

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit the Butterley brick works, Lane End, Buckley.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans to visit Butterley Brick's operation at Buckley at the present time.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in each county in Wales are employed in brick making.

Mr. David Hunt: Brickmaking is not separately identified in employment estimates. In September 1989 there were 800 people employed in Wales in the manufacture of all structural clay products. Figures at a county level may not be published because to do so would breach the guidelines for protecting confidential data relating to a small number of businesses.

Car Leasing Schemes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what meetings he has had with the chairmen of the non-departmental public bodies in Wales to examine the costs of their executive car leasing schemes.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total annual cost of executive car leasing schemes for (a) chairmen and vice chairmen, (b) senior executives and (c) middle management executives of each of the non-departmental public bodies in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not held centrally. However, my Department has recently reminded NDPBs of the criteria which they must follow to ensure the cost-effectiveness of any car leasing arrangements.

South Glamorgan Family Health Services Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the terms and conditions and length of working week for Mrs. Janet Sainsbury as chair of the South Glamorgan family health services authority; what other candidates were considered for the post; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The chairman of South Glamorgan family health services authority receives £11,720 for a time commitment of not less than 2½ days per week. A wide range of candidates was considered but their names are confidential.

Local Government

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the structures working group of the Welsh county and district councils and his own officials regarding the most effective future patterns of local government in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government, of which I am chairman, has received and discussed reports from the structures group and its sub-groups on this matter. I am now giving further consideration to the issues raised.

Road Relief Schemes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the completion date of the Brynglas tunnels, Malpas road relief schemes.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The current contract completion date is July 1994.

Quarrying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state his Department's policy towards the creation of coastal super-quarries.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The potential for coastal super-quarries will be taken into account in the current review of mineral planning guidance note 6 on the provision for aggregates in England and Wales. Individual applications will of course be considered on their merits, having full regard to all environmental considerations.

Long-term Illness

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of Welsh households in 1991 included someone with a long-term limiting illness.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: These figures are not available centrally. However, the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) have published a selection of 1991 Census results in the county monitor series (CEN 91 CM). A provisional figure for Wales as a whole can be derived from these rounded county statistics; it is that respondents in 32 per cent. of households adjudged that there were one or more persons in the household with a long-term limiting illness or disability. This included persons whose long term illness or disability was due to old age. National level results are expected to be released by OPCS in November 1992.

Wales Promotional World Tour

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the costs to (a) his direct departmental budget, (b) the Welsh Development Agency, (c) the Wales Tourist Board and (d) other public bodies of the current Wales promotional world tour; if he will specify how many persons from each body are attending each leg of the tour; if he will publish a list of (a) business meetings, (b) cultural events, (c) exhibitions and (d) social events being undertaken by each group on each leg of the tour; what special literature has been printed for the tour and what arrangements have been made for shipping it; if he will place a copy in the Library of the prior cost-benefit analysis of the resourcing and purposes of the exercise; if he will institute an evaluation of the exercise after its completion and place a copy in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have just returned from an inward investment mission to North America, Korea, Japan and Hong Kong leading a team of up to four officials from the Welsh Office. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman with the costs when I have full details, but I expect them to be in the region of £75,000.

The Welsh Development Agency was represented by three people in the United States, two in Korea, three in Japan and two in Hong Kong. Several of the WDA representatives are based overseas and would have been overseas anyway irrespective of the mission itself.

The Wales Tourist Board was not involved in the mission and no other public bodies were involved.

For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it would not be appropriate to list each engagement, but in the 12 days I undertook 56 official engagements, 32 of which were directly business-related and four were cultural. The remainder consisted of engagements such as ministerial meetings, seminars and media interviews.

No special literature was prepared for the mission. All such missions are carefully planned to ensure good value for money, and locations and engagements are chosen in order to maximise the potential benefits to Wales. Full results will take time to become apparent, but I am confident that the mission will help significantly to maintain Wales's excellent inward investment record.

River Loughor

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will serve a notice on the Welsh region of the National Rivers Authority requiring the stretch of the River Loughor which is categorised as level 3 of the national water classification scheme to meet a system of statutory water quality objectives.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The National Rivers Authority (NRA) recently published its recommendations for a scheme of water quality classification for setting statutory water quality objectives. The authority's recommendations are currently being considered by the Government and we expect to be consulting widely in due course about our own proposals for implementing the scheme with the aim of starting to introduce statutory water quality objectives gradually from 1993.

In the meantime the NRA is determined to prevent any deterioration in the quality of the River Loughor and to achieve improvements, where possible, consistent with the existing non-statutory river quality objectives.

Flood Defences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce new protective measures to avoid inundation by tidal waters of the Peterstone/St Brides and Crindau areas of Newport, Gwent.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The National Rivers Authority, relevant local authorities and Caldicot and Wentlooge Drainage Board have powers to undertake sea defence works to protect from inundation by tidal waters the Peterstone/St. Brides and Crindau areas of Newport, Gwent. The Department is prepared to grant aid eligible schemes for the improvement of defence in these areas.

Business Projects in Africa

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the work undertaken by his Department in developing Welsh business projects in Africa; and if he will list the projects concerned.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Office does not promote individual overseas business projects. The Department's overseas trade services branch does, however, provide a range of advisory and information services, as well as practical help to Welsh companies who intend to export their goods and services overseas including the continent of Africa.

Air Routes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the new air routes that have been established linking Cardiff-Wales airport with other European destinations during 1991 and to date in 1992; and what progress has been made by his Department in the development of further new air routes linking Wales with mainland Europe.

Sir Wyn Roberts: New European air routes established out of Cardiff-Wales airport during 1991 and to date in 1992 are as follows:

1991—Scheduled
Belfast City
Brussels
Dublin
Düsseldorf (subsequently cancelled)
Guernsey
Isle of Man
Jersey
Paris

1992—Scheduled
Aberdeen

1992—Chartered
Turkey
Channel Islands
Lyon
Series of European city day trips (Berlin, Vienna, Rome).

The development of further air routes is primarily for the commercial judgment of the airlines and the airport management. However, I understand that new scheduled services to Düsseldorf and Stuttgart may be introduced by the spring of next year.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the departments spending projects that will not be executed or completed because of alterations in the public spending per head formula relating expenditure per head in Wales preferentially to that in England.

Mr. David Hunt: When decisions about future levels of public expenditure have been made, they will be announced in the autumn statement in the normal way.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what have been the outturn sums paid to community health councils in each of the past 10 years and the amount planned for the next financial year; and if he will publish a table showing the sums indexed with the 1981-82 expenditure expressed as 100.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested on outturn expenditure over the past 10 years is given in the table. It should be noted that this relates to accrued expenditure not simply to cash payments. Planned cash provision in 1992-93 amounts to £1 million; but it is not possible, at this stage of the financial year, to make reliable forecasts of outturn expenditure in either accruals or cash terms. Provision for 1993-94 has not yet been determined.

Community Health Councils: Expenditure

Financial Year	Outturn Expenditure[1]	Index[1] (1981-82 = 100)
1981-82	391,973	100·00
1982-83	446,085	106·24
1983-84	459,334	104·55
1984-85	494,656	107·22

Faraday Centres

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the Faraday centres established to date in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: At present there are no Faraday centres in the United Kingdom. The Government are currently considering proposals for such centres and is seeking views from industry.

Crown Buildings, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for occupation of the space in the Crown Buildings, Cathays Park, vacated by NCM of Amsterdam.

Mr. David Hunt: During the two years before NCM Credit Insurance Ltd is due to vacate the Crown Building at Cathays Park, my Department will be considering future use in consultation with the Department of Environment (Property Holdings) which is ultimately responsible for re-letting the space.

Orthoptic Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on orthoptic services in (a) the Clwyd health authority and (b) Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The management and provision of Orthoptic services in Wales is the responsibility of the district health authorities who assess local need and seek to make appropriate provision.

Homelessness

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of homeless people in (a) Clwyd, (b) Alyn and Deeside district council area and (c) Wrexham Maelor borough council area.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The numbers of persons in households accepted as homeless during the quarter ending 30 June 1992 under part III of the Housing Act 1985 is given as follows:

	Number of persons
Clwyd	602
Alyn and Deeside	160
Wrexham Maelor	250

Hospital Catering

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he had from the Gardner Merchant subsidiary of Forte plc prior to his awarding the South Glamorgan health authority catering contract at three hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is a matter for South Glamorgan health authority to award the contract but departmental guidance indicates that unless there are compelling reasons otherwise, the contract should be awarded to the lowest tenderer. In this case, the Department has indicated that the lowest tender should be accepted. Gardner Merchant sought clarification of tender procedures and how long it would take to resolve the matter. There was no discussion between the Department and Gardner Merchant on the details of its tender.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Chairman of the Development Board for Rural Wales concerning the recovery of sums spent without authority on the board's executive car leasing scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: None. However, my Department has written to the chief executive of the developmental board requesting that he consider the recovery of any excess costs incurred as a result of the unauthorised payments.

Correspondence

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to reply to the letters to him dated 11 and 13 August from the hon. Member for Cardiff, West regarding the Welsh Development Agency's employment of unlicensed model agency, SHAPES.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State replied in my absence on 27 August.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the monthly totals and average percentage of the unemployment figures for (a) Wales and (b) the areas covered by the valleys initiative for each year from 1987.

Mr. David Hunt: The unemployment data requested for Wales are available from the NOMIS database, which can be accessed on-line by House of Commons Library staff. Unemployment figures for the Valleys area are given in the table:

Disabled Facilities Grants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will allocate disabled facilities grants expenditure by local authorities, under the heading of supplementary credit approvals.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I shall be taking decisions on the 1993-94 allocations for housing capital provision in due course.

Abandoned Mines

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision he will be making for public inspection of the duplicates of the British Coal abandoned mine records in Wales at his office; what charge will be made for consulting and copying thereof; what account he has taken of the present British Coal charges for the same service; what consultations he has had with the local planning authorities and construction industry professional groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Extensive consultations took place with interested parties prior to the publication of Command Paper 2034. The duplicate copy of the catalogue of plans is available for public inspection in the land use records office of my Department in Cardiff. There is no charge for this service.

Caldicot Levels

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress achieved in the survey of alternative feeding grounds for wading birds on the Caldicot levels, being undertaken for the Cardiff Bay development corporation; and what provisions he has made of compulsory purchase powers for land assembly.

Mr. David Hunt: The current feasibility study into alternative mitigation measures for birds is in line with the advice of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and the Countryside Council for Wales. The study is examining the creation of a variety of wetland habitats. The consultants carrying out the study have made an interim presentation and will be making their final report later this year. Cardiff Bay Development Corporation commissioned the study jointly with the Land Authority for Wales. I have made no special provisions for compulsory purchase powers, though the land authority has such powers itself.

Usk Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the Government policy on the Usk barrage proposal.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: When the River Usk Barrage Bill was given a Second Reading in another place on 13 July the Government indicated that they had no objection in principle to the powers being sought by Newport borough council. The borough council has now withdrawn the Private Bill and has indicated that it will consider seeking the necessary authority for the construction of the barrage through the order-making provisions of the Transport and Works Act 1992. In view of my possible involvement in the consideration of the Usk barrage proposal under these provisions it would not be appropriate for me to comment.

Severn Bridge Tolls

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to introduce amendments to the Severn Bridges Act 1992 in order to reduce the levels of tolls.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government have no plans to reduce the level of tolls at the Severn bridge from the amounts already provided for under the Severn Bridges Act 1992.

Carers in Wales

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of carers in Wales are currently over the age of 65 years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is no centrally held information on the ages of carers in Wales. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys carried out a study in 1985 and published results for Great Britain[1] which showed that 19 per cent. of male carers and 17 per cent of female carers were aged 65 or over.

[1] Informal Carers: a study carried out on behalf of the Department of Health and Social Security as part of the 1985 General Household Survey.

Means-tested Education Benefits

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children in Wales qualified for free school meals, uniform or clothing grants and other means-tested educational benefits in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and if he will also provide these figures as a percentage of the total school roll.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of pupils who qualified for free school meals in 1990-91 and 1991-92 is as follows:

	1990-91	1991-92
Number of Pupils	75,753	87,913
Expressed as the percentage of total on roll	16·1	18·5

Information on uniform or clothing grants and other means-tested educational benefits is not held centrally.

Higher Education Academic Staff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to set up a pay review body for Welsh higher education academic staff.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Raw Milk

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the new arrangements for the sale of raw milk off farms in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The labelling and testing requirements introduced in 1990 for the sale of raw milk appear to be working well. Interested parties have been consulted on the Milk Marketing Board's proposals for the future of milk marketing. I am considering the responses.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he intends regularly to publish a list of schools considering grant-maintained status.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No.

Roads

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning his policy on strategic roads in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend's policy on roads is set out in "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s", the 1992 Supplement and in the Welsh Office Department Report (Cm. 1916).

Wages

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the (a) male and (b) female Welsh work force receive wages below the national average.

Mr. David Hunt: In April 1992, the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time employees in Great Britain was £304·60.

Information from the April 1992 new earnings survey shows that the proportion of full-time male employees in Wales (on adult rates whose pay was unaffected by absence) earning less than £300 per week was 59·3 per cent. (GB 51·3 per cent.).

The proportion of full-time female employees in Wales earning under £300 per week was 80·9 per cent. (GB 75·9 per cent.).

In interpreting the figures for Wales, it should be borne in mind that because of the shape of the earnings distribution, the percentage of the work force receiving less than national average earnings is more than 50 per cent. even for Great Britain as a whole.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many employees in Blaenau Gwent (a) are paid less than £3·40 per hour, (b) have weekly or hourly earnings falling below 68 per cent. of adult mean earnings and (c) have weekly earnings which do not exceed the lower earnings limit for national insurance liability.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not available below county level.

Industrial and Economic Development

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take measures to maintain industrial and economic development in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today published my consultation paper on the Welsh Economic Council, which I am placing in the Vote Office and the Library of the House. I have also arranged to send a copy to every Member representing Welsh constituencies.

DEFENCE

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's contribution to the Government's deregulation initiative will be provided from within existing resources.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ask the working group on safety of United Kingdom nuclear weapons to review immediately the procedures for dealing with accidents involving nuclear weapons.

Mr. Aitken: In their report of the 13 July, the working group noted that there are well-developed procedures for dealing with accidents involving nuclear weapons. We regularly practise these arrangments which are overseen by the nuclear weapons safety committee, my Department's permanently constituted senior source of independent advice on nuclear weapon safety.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to cease production of plutonium and highly enriched uranium in the United Kingdom, as part of Her Majesty's Government's efforts to halt nuclear weapon proliferation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 16 July, Official Report, column 932-33.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he is yet in a position to publish his Department's scientists' review of nuclear weapon safety, with particular reference to accidents involving nuclear weapons road convoys; and if he will make a statement;

(2) further to his answer on 12 June, Official Report, column 317, if he is yet in a position to publish his Department's scientists' review into the safety of nuclear warheads in the wake of the Drell report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 13 July at column 521, in which publication of the working group's report was announced.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current estimate of the date of decision on the formal tenders for contractorisation of the Atomic Weapons Establishment pursuant to the passage of the Atomic Weapons Establishment Act 1991 and his letter of 4 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West.

Mr. Aitken: We expect to announce the successful tenderer in early 1993.

RAF Stations

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many of the RAF personnel transferred from RAF Brawdy to RAF Valley will be accommodated in MOD property;

(2) how many of the RAF personnel that will be transferred from RAF Brawdy to RAF Chivenor will be accommodated in MOD property.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All those transferring to both stations will eventually be accommodated in MOD property.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many RAF personnel are planned to be transferred from RAF Brawdy to (a) RAF Chivenor, (b) RAF Valley and (c) elsewhere;

(2) how many RAF personnel have been transferred from RAF Brawdy to (a) RAF Chivenor, (b) RAF Valley and (c) elsewhere following the ending of tactical weapons training at RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Twenty seven RAF personnel from Brawdy out of an eventual total of 41 have already transferred to RAF Chivenor and 30 out of an eventual total of 44 have been transferred to RAF Valley; 161 service men have been posted elsewhere out of an eventual total of 394.

RAF Stations

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many MOD properties in the vicinity of RAF Valley have been sold in the last (a) 10 years, (b) five years and (c) three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Sixty-seven have been sold in the past 10 years—two in 1983, five in 1991 and 60 in 1992.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many MOD properties in the vicinity of RAF Chivenor have been sold in the last (a) 10 years, (b) five years and (c) three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his best estimate of increased accommodation costs to his Department as a result of the transfer of former RAF Brawdy personnel to (a) RAF Chivenor and (b) RAF Valley.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The estimated cost in excess rent allowance thus far is £5,500 at RAF Chivenor and £1,500 at RAF Valley.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many of the RAF personnel already transferred from RAF Brawdy to RAF Valley have been accommodated in MOD property;

(2) how many of the RAF personnel already transferred from RAF Brawdy to RAF Chivenor have been accommodated in MOD property.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Of those personnel already transferred from RAF Brawdy, 11 have been accommodated in MOD property at RAF Chivenor and 23 at RAF Valley.

Corporal Mark Travis

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for St. Helens, North, sent to him on 18 June concerning the imprisonment of RAF Corporal Mark Travis.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence wrote to the hon. Member on 28 July.

Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the future military requirement for the Queen Elizabeth military hospital;

(2) if he will have discussions with the South East Thames health authority about the future availability of the Queen Elizabeth military hospital.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The future requirement for all service hospitals in the United Kingdom, including the Queen Elizabeth military hospital, is still under review. There have, however, been exploratory talks with the South East Thames regional health authority.

Cambodia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) armed service and (b) civilian observers from his Department are currently with the United Nations transitionary authority in Cambodia: what are their rank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 121 UK military personnel in the United Nations transitionary authority in Cambodia (UNTAC). The full breakdown by service and rank is as follows:

	no.
Royal Navy:
Lieutenant Commander	1
Lieutenant	6
Warrant Officer	1
Chief Petty Officer	17
Petty Officer	20
Leading Hand	6
Royal Marines:
Captain	5
Colour Sergeant	1
Sergeant	14
Army:
Lieutenant Colonel	8
Major	15
Captain	11
Staff Sergeant	2
Sergeant	2
Corporal	7

	no.
Royal Air Force:
Wing Commander	1
Squadron Leader	1
Flight Lieutenant	3

No civilians from my Department are serving with UNTAC in Cambodia at present.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is yet in a position to measure the noise levels generated by the F-15E aircraft at low level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A trial to measure the noise generated by the F-15E aircraft at low level took place in September and the information obtained is being analysed.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by date for the last 12 months the number of complaints of alleged illegal low flying by army helicopters which have been received at Royal Air Force Pitreavie; what were the comparable total figures for (a) 12 months, (b) 24 months, (c) 36 months and (d) 48 months ago; how many complaints have subsequently been substantiated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Only one complaint has been received by RAF Pitreavie about low flying by an Army helicopter in the past four years.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) by date and (b) by location the number of complaints of alleged illegal low flying by Army helicopters that have been received in the eastern district in the last 12 months; what were the comparable total figures for (i) 12 months, (ii) 24 months, (iii) 36 months and (iv) 48 months ago; how many complaints have subsequently been substantiated; and if he will indicate the helicopter squadrons concerned and the types of helicopter involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not held in the form requested.

Air Crash, North Sea

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the result of the air accident report into the Royal Air Force Buccaneer which crashed into the North sea on 9 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The RAF board of inquiry into this incident is not yet complete. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will forward a copy of the military aircraft accident summary to the hon. Member as soon as this is available.

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the result of the air accident report on the two Tornado F3 jets from Royal Air Force Leeming which were involved in a mid-air incident over Alnwick, Northumberland on 16 July; what was the nature of the sorties being carried out; at what height were the aircraft flying at the time of the incident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The RAF board of inquiry into this incident, which took place some 10 nautical miles west of Alnwick, is not yet complete. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member in due course with a summary of its findings. The aircraft were practising interceptions at some 2,000 feet above ground level when the incident occurred.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the results of the Civil Aviation Authority investigation into the near air-miss over Lincolnshire on 19 August, involving Royal Air Force Tornado aircraft and a civilian light aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This incident is under investigation by the joint airmiss section of the National Air Traffic Services and will then be considered by the joint airmiss working group. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will forward the hon. Member a copy of the group's findings as soon as these are available.

"Riders"

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is yet in a position to give the costs and formal charges that are being raised by his Department for the use of the Household Cavalry giving assistance to Anglia TV during that company's production of "Riders"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A sum of £210.61 has been recovered in payment for 10 one-hour long riding lessons given to members of the cast.

Bomb Incident, Golspie

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 July, Official Report, column 184, in respect of a practice bomb being dropped on 4 June by a United States Air Force jet on to a site of special scientific interest at Golspie, if he will send a copy of the report that his Department received from the United States Air Force to the hon. Member for Don Valley; and if he will now give full details of the amount that has been agreed in way of compensation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member regarding the United States air force report. My Department has agreed to pay some £1,000 to Sutherland Estates for time and costs incurred as a result of this incident.

US Air Bases

Mr. Redmond: To asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of (a) Royal Air Force Bentwaters and (b) Royal Air Force Woodbridge, after the US Air Force leaves these bases in 1993.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for the future use of the Bentwaters air base after the American departure in 1993.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It was announced locally on 21 August that the RAF had no future use for the twin US bases of RAF Bentwaters/Woodbridge. Alternative defence uses are currently being examined. Should none be identified the bases will be declared surplus and disposed of following consultation with local authorities and other interested parties.

Catterick Army Base

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the result of the short notice visit carried out by Russian military inspectors at the Catterick army base on 22 July under the CFE arms control treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The inspection at Catterick was carried out satisfactorily. The Russian inspection team were content with the conduct and outcome of the inspection.

Munitions Dumping

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with environmental, fishing and maritime representative organisations regarding the proposed dumping of redundant munitions off Porcupine bank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. Ministry of Defence sea dumping activities are consistent with international agreements and are carried out in a strictly controlled manner to ensure that they do not cause damage to the marine environment, or interfere with fishing or other legitimate uses of the sea. MOD will terminate all sea dumping of redundant munitions by 1 January 1993 in line with international agreements.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the final date for submission of tenders for the contractorisation of the Atomic Weapons Establishment pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West, dated 4 June.

Mr. Aitken: The final date for submission of tenders for full contractor operation of the Atomic Weapons Establishment was 1 September 1992.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evaluation he has made of the prospects for the continued use of the Nevada test site by the United Kingdom for its nuclear testing programme, following the vote in the United States Senate to restrict the use of the test site and to halt all nuclear tests by September 1996.

Mr. Aitken: The hon. Member will know that the United States Congress has now enacted legislation imposing a moratorium on nuclear testing until July 1993, with a final end to testing in 1996. The legislation provides for continued use of the Nevada test site by the United Kingdom up to that date. The position after 1996 will depend upon whether any other country tests after that date.

Electro-magnetic Pulse Phenomena

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what study he has made of the potential advantage or threat from the development of weapons utilising electro-magnetic pulse phenomena.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has been aware for many years of the effects of electro-magnetic pulse (EMP) and has conducted and sponsored research into this phenomenon. The MOD has no operational requirement at present for a weapon specifically designed to create EMP effects.

Military Personnel Overseas

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British military personnel are stationed in the United States of America; how many are located in Washington DC; and what is the estimated cost to public funds.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 1 October 1992 there were 403 British military personnel based in the USA at an estimated cost of some £25 million in 1992-93; 154 are located in and around the Washington DC metropolitan area and of these 54 are directly attached to the British embassy.

Army Personnel Centre

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is considering York currently as a potential location for some or all of the staff of the proposed integrated Army personnel centre; and when he intends to make a decision about which location or locations will be used for this centre.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: York is one of a number of sites under consideration. The report examining the case for establishing an Army personnel centre is due in November, and I hope to be able to take a decision, subject to consultation with the trade unions, as soon as possible thereafter.

United Nations

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries where troops from member countries of the European Community are stationed under the mandate of the United Nations, stating which those countries are and the size and nature of the commitment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table. EC military contributions cover a wide variety of tasks including the provision of infantry, monitors and observers, and logistics, medical and communications units. The provision of more detailed information on individual contingents would involve disproportionate cost and effort.

Research Establishments

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the full texts of announcements or statements made by the Ministry of Defence since 16 July in relation to the defence research establishments.

Mr. Aitken: I have asked the chief executive of the Defence Research Agency to place copies of all of his agency's press releases since 16 July in the Library of the House.

Antares

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Admiral in Chief Fleet has yet completed consideration of what further disciplinary action is necessary following the sinking of the Antares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The commander in chief has completed his consideration of whether further disciplinary action is appropriate and in the light of this and legal advice has concluded that there are no grounds for disciplinary action against any other members of the crew of HMS Trenchant.

Kuwaiti Tank Contract

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the decision by the Kuwaiti Government to award their tank contract to a US supplier; and what estimate he has made of the consequences to Vickers.

Mr. Aitken: My department has not received any official notification of a decision by the Government of Kuwait to buy M1A2 in preference to Challenger 2.

Bosnia

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current deployment of the forces assigned for convoy support in Bosnia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The principal elements comprising the United Kingdom's contribution to UNPROFOR II, shortly to deploy to Bosnia, are 1st Battalion Cheshire Regiment, 2nd Battalion Royal Irish Regiment, 9th/12th Royal Lancers and 35 Engineer Regiment who are all based in Germany. The rest, the support element, are drawn from forces based in Germany and the United Kingdom.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current position regarding the involvement of the Governments of (a) Germany, (b) Italy and (c) Spain in the European fighter aircraft project; what further discussions he plans with the Defence Ministers of each of the three Governments; and when he expects to be able to report the full position to the House.

Mr. Aitken: All four partners are continuing to participate in the development phase of EFA which is proceeding according to the previously agreed programme except that, as agreed by the four Governments on 4 August, no new contracts are being let while studies into ways of reducing the cost of the programme are in progress. Germany has indicated that it does not intend to join the production phase of the project as presently proposed but it was not the intention in any case to take decisions on production until mid-1993 at the earliest.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State plans to meet his German, Italian and Spanish colleagues in December to discuss the results of the studies commissioned on 4 August. My right hon. and learned Friend will report to the House when there are any significant developments.

Procurement

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report all statements made by the Ministry of Defence on defence procurement matters since 16 July.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has issued three press releases on defence procurement matters since 16 July:

a. 21 July, on greater competition in defence procurement;

b. 29 July, on the seeking of tenders for a new Ocean Survey vessel;

c. 2 August, on a £300 million contract award to British Aerospace for Harrier training aircraft.

I will place copies of these in the Library of the House.

Trident

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to complete his consideration of the arrangements for refitting and servicing Trident submarines; if he will make the outcome public through an oral statement in the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Consideration of the options for the future arrangements for refitting Trident submarines is continuing. I hope that we shall be in a position to announce proposals before the end of the year. The House will be kept informed.

North Channel Incident

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the incident in the north channel involving the USS Sturgeon and the FV Lupina; what action is being taken in relation to this incident; and if he will make a statement

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The submarine USS Sturgeon snagged the nets of the FV Lupina at approximately 10.00 pm on 16 September while operating submerged in the Clyde submarine exercise areas. The submarine surfaced and contacted the fishing vessel to ensure that the boat and her crew were safe. There were no injuries and the fishing vessel was able to proceed under its own power. The submarine's presence had been notified under the SUBFACTS arrangements and the crew of the US submarine were briefed on the operating procedures to be observed when in the proximity of fishing vessels. The incident is currently being investigated by the US authorities. When their report has been completed, we will consider whether any changes to procedures, beyond those already discussed with the fishing industry in the fishing industry safety group, are warranted.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the result of his consideration of the search and rescue services in Scotland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I hope to make an announcement about the future provision of military search and rescue around the UK very shortly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Burt: The Department's deregulation activities are co-ordinated by a departmental deregulation unit which is staffed by a senior executive officer, with management and clerical support. In addition, other parts of the Department assess, as necessary, the impact on business of policy and procedures for which they are responsible and the potential for deregulation. Separate figures on the cost of this activity are not available.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment he has made of the number of staff required to deal with the present level of claims for disability living allowance; and how many are actually in post;

(2) how many staff have been transferred from the invalid care allowance unit to the disability living allowance unit to assist in dealing with claims since January 1991; and if he will list the dates of transfer and the number transferred on each of those dates;

(3) whether staff transferred from the invalid care allowance unit to the disability living allowance unit to assist in dealing with claims will return to their previous post once the backlog has been reduced.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He wrote to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people in the Warwickshire, North constituency submitted claims for disability living allowance more than three months ago whose claims are still outstanding;

(2) how many claims for disability living allowance from people living in north Warwickshire are still outstanding; and what is the anticipated average length of time before they will be determined.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for (a) the care component, (b) the mobility component and (c) both components of disability living allowance have been received in each month to date; how many were decided in each month; and how many remained outstanding at the end of each month.

Mr. Scott: The information for (a) and (b) is not available in the form requested.

	DLA claims received	DLA claims decided[1]	DLA claims outstanding
February	72,000	2,000	71,000

August	41,000	71,000	185,000
September	44,000	78,000	148,000

Notes:

[1] Claims decided = awards plus refusals; does not include cases withdrawn, defective or otherwise disposed of. Includes new and top up claims. Rounded to nearest thousand.

All figures are provisional and may be subject to amendment.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list, in monthly order, the number of claimants still awaiting for their claims to be actioned by his Department's disability living allowance unit in Blackpool; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list by month for the last 12 months the number of claims that have been actioned by his Department's disability living allowance unit in Blackpool; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list for the last 12 months the average time taken by his Department's disability living allowance unit in Blackpool to complete a claim; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He wrote to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of claims for disability living allowance were cleared in 30 days in each month to date at each disability benefit centre; and what was the success rate for claims at each centre.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He wrote to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to allow people of all ages to apply for disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to amend the age conditions for claiming disability living allowance.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the decisions on claims for each component of disability living allowance in each month to date were favourable; how many awards were made at each rate and, for those which were unfavourable, what were the reasons for refusal.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

New claims—number of awards made

February	March	April	May	June	July	August	September
1,100	7,700	8,800	11,000	15,400	26,200	25,900	30,100

Reasons for refusal[1]	86 per cent on disability grounds. 13·5 per cent on age grounds. 0·5 per cent on other grounds.

Rate of awards (February—September)
Higher rate care	3,800
Middle rate care	13,000
Lower rate care	34,100
Higher rate mobility	5,300
Lower rate mobility	42,200

Notes:

[1] Percentage of those cases where a reason for refusal was recorded.

All figures have been rounded to nearest hundred. Figures should be treated as provisional and may be subject to amendment.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, by parliamentary constituency, the number of applications for disability living allowance so far approved under the new regulations and the number of applications still outstanding; and if he will indicate the average length of time between application and approval.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the meeting of the chief executive of the Benefits Agency about his meeting in September with representatives of disability organisations to discuss their complaints about the administration of the disability living allowance; when he now expects the agency's backlog of work on the processing of claims to be cleared.

Mr. Scott: We do not receive formal reports of the meetings attended by Mr Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He wrote to the hon. Member about this and the administration of disability living allowance. Copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what study he has made of complaints to the Benefits Agency about delays in processing claims for the disability living allowance; how many of such complaints he and the agency received in each whole month since claims for the allowance were invited; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He wrote to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information office.

Attendance and Mobility Allowance

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for attendance or mobility allowance under review or subject to appeal have been waiting for up to 18 months to be determined.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Road Accident Compensation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what efforts are being undertaken by his Department to ensure improved compensation settlements and speedy decisions on benefit entitlement for victims of road accidents.

Miss Widdecombe: Decisions on benefit entitlement are made as quickly as possible. The Benefits Agency customer charter defines the standards of service and the clearance times which its customers can expect. The agency is continually looking for ways to improve its service.

The Department cannot intervene in settlement negotiations between the accident victim and the compensator.

Social Fund

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the total numbers of maternity payments made from the social fund in Wales in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and what was the total value of the payments made in each year.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He wrote to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Lone Parents

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much in total has been deducted from social security benefits paid to lone parents as a direct result of the new regulations on maintenance payments.

Mr. Burt: The new child support scheme and its associated regulations do not come into force until 5 April 1993.

Lone Parents

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make it his policy to strengthen regulations to prevent harassment of lone parents by social security officials to name and pursue absent parents for maintenance payments;

(2) if he will make it his policy to replace the current benefits penalty on lone mothers refusing to co-operate with the Child Support Agency in detecting fathers with a small disregard in income support.

Mr. Burt: There is currently no requirement for a mother to name the father of her child when claiming benefits, though more than three-quarters of never-married mothers do so voluntarily. I have recently reinforced guidelines to social security offices to ensure best possible practice in relation to sensitive inquiries. From April 1993, when the Child Support Agency becomes operational, there will be a legal requirement for parents getting prescribed benefits to co-operate in obtaining maintenance for their children, unless compliance would risk causing harm or undue distress to the parent with care or to any child living with her.

A disregard of maintenance, in income support, would not be helpful for the majority of lone parents, who want to work now or in the near future.

We have no plans to change our policy on these matters.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to restore the real value of one-parent benefit to its 1990 level.

Mr. Burt: No. All lone parents gained at least £2 a week (extra) from last year's increase in child benefit, and from April this year we increased both child benefit and one parent benefit in line with prices.

Child Benefit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to restore the value of child benefit to its 1985 level.

Mr. Burt: No, although child benefit will of course remain the cornerstone of our policies for family support and will continue to be paid to all families in respect of all children.

Benefit Offices, Manchester

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list which of his Department's benefit offices in Greater Manchester have underspent their budgets so far this year for (a) emergency payments and (b) emergency loans; and which have overspent;

(2) which benefit offices in Greater Manchester consider that being forced out of the family home by domestic violence is sufficiently high a priority to warrant the payment of a grant to provide furniture to establish a new home; and which have set criteria which restrict any help in such circumstances to a loan.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He wrote to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Income Support

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of people over the age of 60 years in Wales who are currently in receipt of income support.

Mr. Burt: The number of claimants and their partners over age 60 receiving income support in Wales is 98,000.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many young people between the ages of 18 years and 24 years and living away from home are currently in receipt of the full over 25 years rate of income support.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 2 June at col. 483.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many, and what percentage, of working claimants have had their income support withdrawn as a consequence of the introduction of the 16-hour rule in (a) Ebbw Vale benefit office, (b) Abertillery benefit office, (c) Wales and (d) England.

Mr. Burt: No one who was working, or whose partner was working, between 16 and 24 hours a week and receiving income support at the point of change has had that benefit withdrawn as a consequence of the change in the hours threshold in income support and family credit, unless he has claimed family credit and receives more than he did from income support.

Vaccine Damage

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce proposals to amend the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979 to allow discretion in awarding payments outside the established time limits to those who were not aware of the provisions of the Act.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so. The time limits in the scheme are already generous. Claims can be made within the six years following vaccination or, in the case of a child vaccinated before the age of two, the six years following the second birthday. To extend the time limits for claiming would increase the problems of obtaining medical and other relevant evidence, making it more difficult to confirm entitlement.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research on invalidity benefit is being carried out by or for his Department; and when it is due for completion.

Mr. Scott: The Department has commissioned a programme of research about the growth in the numbers of people receiving invalidity benefit. The programme consists of a number of related studies: a small scale preliminary study of invalidity benefit recipients and GPs; large scale surveys of current recipients and new claimants; a comparative study of the growth of incapacity benefit caseloads in the UK and other countries; and an in-depth study of the GP's role in relation to the benefit. Field work for some of these studies was completed earlier in the year; other elements are expected to be completed in the course of 1993.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in the constituency of Caernarfon qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He wrote to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in Birmingham, Northfield qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the Social Fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He wrote to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many householders in the Birmingham, Yardley constituency qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He wrote to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Benefits, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each of the benefits for which his Department is responsible in the Doncaster area during the current 12 months, the percentage of claimants who were successful in their claim; and if he will give comparative figures for (a) 24 months, (b) 36 months and (c) 48 months ago.

Mr. Burt: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He wrote to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library.

Disability Payments

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to grant payments of severe disability income support premiums regardless of whether the claimant is living alone.

Mr. Burt: No. The disability or higher pensioner premiums are included in the calculation of income support, housing benefit or community charge benefit for disabled people, whether or not they live alone. The severe disability premium is, and always has been, intended to give additional help to those severely disabled people who, because they live independently and do not have a carer receiving invalid care allowance, are most likely to need to rely on bought-in care. We have no plans to change this policy.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost for 1992-93 of (a) disability living allowance and (b) disability working allowance, respectively.

Mr. Scott: The estimated costs were published in the 1992 departmental report. These figures will be revised in due course to reflect actual experience of the new benefits.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for (a) disability working allowance and (b) disability living allowance received from claimants in Wales are still awaiting a decision; what is the average delay in processing such claims; and what are the comparable figures for England and Scotland.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability working allowance and disability living allowance are a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He wrote to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for (a) disability working allowance and (b) disability living allowance have been received from residents in Blaenau Gwent; if he will publish a breakdown of how many of these claims have resulted in an award, been unsuccessful or are still awaiting a decision; and how many awards are actually in payment.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in (a) Blaenau Gwent and (b) Wales have received payments from the disabled living fund.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. However, on 6 October the independent living fund had 97 clients in Gwent and 877 in Wales as a whole.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the decisions on claims for disability working allowance, in each month to date, were favourable; and for those which were unfavourable, what were the reasons for refusal.

Mr. Scott: The information requested on decisions for each month is as follows:

	March	April	May	June	July	August	September
Awards made	162	314	317	295	296	284	446
Claims disallowed	3,046	3,534	2,349	2,402	2,545	1,675	1,300

The information requested about reasons for refusal is extracted from an analysis of weekly data and converted to monthly periods:

	March	April	May	June	July	August	September
Not in remunerative work	1,669	2,253	1,339	1,362	1,728	984	684
Income exceeds DWA level	118	314	268	274	379	245	253
No qualifying benefit	578	1,289	548	453	632	395	393
Other reasons	287	189	75	69	82	51	60

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for disability working allowance have been received in each month to date; how many were decided in each month; how many remained outstanding at the end of each month; and what were the comparable numbers expected before the benefit commenced.

Mr. Scott: The information requested for each month is as follows:

	March	April	May	June	July	August	September
Claims received	4,153	4,124	2,570	2,700	2,344	2, 081	2,085
Claims decided	3,208	3,848	2,666	2,697	2,841	1,959	1,746
Claims outstanding	870	1,011	834	743	678	693	758

The claims outstanding at the end of each month are awaiting the outcome of further enquiries about the claim; there have been no delays in dealing with claims.

Information was not available before the benefit commenced to make a reliable estimate of the number of claims which might be expected.

Pensions

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to consult further on the equalisation of the state pension age for men and women; and if he will indicate the expected timetable for progress.

Miss Widdecombe: We have been meeting the representatives of various interested organisations and while doing so have continued to receive representations which arrived after the consultation period finished on June 30. After considering the views expressed, we will announce our proposals in due course.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will introduce proposals to amend the Social Security Act 1975 relating specifically to the Persons Abroad Regulations SI 1975/563 so that those of ethnic minority backgrounds who leave Britain to live abroad permanently have their pensions index-linked;

(2) if he will make a statement concerning the countries excluded from index-linked pension increases to individuals.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to amend the regulations in the way suggested. Annual pension increases are payable to British pensioners living in 32 countries outside Great Britain. We have no plans to extend payment of such increases to pensioners living elsewhere.

Severe Hardship Payments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many severe hardship payments were awarded to young people (a) living at home with their parents and (b) living away from home, in each year since 1988-89.

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the table. Details of housing status were first collected from December 1990.

Child Support

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if guidelines will be given to social security officers to ensure that exemptions from naming fathers under the Child Support Act 1991 are granted with consistency.

Mr. Burt: Guidance and training will be given.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the staffing levels in his Department's offices in (a) Mid-Derbyshire and (b) South Derbyshire in 1990-91 and 1991-92 and what they will be in 1992-93, broken down by benefit type and by grade of staff.

Mr. Burt: The resourcing of offices are matters for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency and Ms. Ros Heppelwhite, the chief executive of the child support unit. I have asked Mr. Michael Bichard to reply.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the level of the Christmas bonus would have been in 1992 if it had been increased annually at (a) the rate of increase in prices and (b) the rate of increase in earnings.

Miss Widdecombe: The Christmas bonus, which is paid regardless of need and which no Government have increased, would now be worth £62·30 had it been increased annually since 1972 in line with prices; £87·90 had it been increased annually in line with average earnings.

Fraud

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were successfully prosecuted for social security fraud in the London borough of Camden between January and December 1991.

Miss Widdecombe: The investigation of social security benefit fraud is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He wrote to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what definitions he intends to use and what guidelines he intends to produce to enable his Department's staff to distinguish between a scrounger and a genuine social security claimant.

Mr. Burt: Parliament has laid down the conditions of entitlement to benefit. Decisions on entitlement to benefit are taken by independent adjudication officers. It is for the chief adjudication officer, rather than the Secretary of State, to advise how they should interpret the legislation.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the totals of money recovered as a result of social security fraud investigations in the past 10 years; and what sums were recovered in each of the past 10 years expressed as a percentage of the numbers of staff employed to detect fraud.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not held. However, the Benefits Agency fraud investigations in 1991-92 employed 2,853 staff at a cost of £62·7 million and detected fraud to the estimated value of £416 million.

Child Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, whether he will publish tables similar to those in his answer of 11 May, Official Report, columns 43-44, showing the combined value of child benefit and child dependency increases, including figures for April 1992 and showing equivalent values at April 1992 instead of 1991 prices.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the tables.

Benefits

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to substitute selectivity for the principle of universality as the basis for payment of any social security benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: None.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Ecu Loan

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the ecu worth in sterling at the time that the 10 billion ecu loan was negotiated.

Mr. Nelson: The revolving credit facility agreed on 4 September was for the equivalent of ecu 5 billion. At the date of the agreement the closing ecu: sterling market rate was 1·3919 to the pound.

Currency Reserves

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of the currency reserves on (a) 14 September and (b) 18 September.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of currency reserves on (a) 14 September and (b) 16 September.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was in the foreign reserves on 14, 15, 16 and 17 September.

Mr. Nelson: The level of the United Kingdom's foreign exchange reserves at the end of each month are published on the second working day of the next month. The level at the end of September was published on Friday 2 October. There are no plans to publish these figures more frequently.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who audits the use of foreign exchange reserves; and when they will report on the use of the funds during the period 14 to 16 September.

Mr. Nelson: Transactions affecting the United Kingdom foreign exchange reserves are made through the exchange equalisation account. The EEA is audited by the National Audit Office. The account is not published but is certified each year by the Comptroller and Auditor General, when the accounts of the Consolidated Fund and the National Loan Fund are published.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the gain/loss from the reserves for each month from April and the total up to and including 16 September.

Mr. Nelson: The overall change in the level of the United Kingdom foreign exchange reserves at the end of each month between April and September 1992 is given in the table:

April	+748
May	+29
June	−104
July	+50
August	−1,300
September	−1,773

There are no plans to publish these figures more frequently.

Foreign Exchange Markets

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now make it his practice to answer questions on the extent to which it has intervened in the foreign exchange markets in support of its exchange rate objectives.

Mr. Nelson: No.

Sterling

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment the Treasury has made as to the causes of the recent pressure on sterling and the degree to which it reflected (a) speculation and (b) underlying economic factors.

Mr. Nelson: The main underlying cause of tensions in the ERM has been the persistence of high interest rates in Germany, imposed to counter the inflationary effects of reunification, combined with the lowest interest rates in 30 years in the USA. Speculation, in the lead-up to the French referendum, caused these tensions to come to a head on 16 September.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now accept the recommendations of Session 1988-89 from the third report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on international monetary co-ordination (HC 384) about making public the amount of the intervention, gains and losses to the United Kingdom Exchequer of measures to support the pound sterling.

Mr. Nelson: No.

ECOFIN

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was discussed at the last meeting of ECOFIN; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The Economic and Finance Council met twice in formal session during the Recess. The meeting on 27 July was reported to the House by means of a report deposited in the Library. The Council also met on 28 September in Brussels with the Chancellor presiding. I represented the United Kingdom. Members of the Council also met informally in Bath on 4 to 6 September.

On 28 September, the Council discussed the future financing of the Community. A majority of member states made clear that they continued to believe that the Commission's proposals were excessive and the Council was close to a consensus on the need to make cuts in the Commission's proposals for internal spending and for administration. But wide divergences of opinion remain on major items such as agriculture, cohesion, the structure of own resources, and thus the overall level of spending. There was also some discussion of the Commission's report on the United Kingdom abatement. I made clear that we would not accept any adverse change to the abatement.

The Council agreed to establish a working group of officials with the aim of enhancing the fight against fraud against the Community budget and to report back to ECOFIN in November. The Council also set a work programme for officials to examine the proposed carbon/energy tax and to report back to ECOFIN in December.

A balance of payments loan to Bulgaria was also discussed but without agreement.

The Council also discussed recent monetary events in preparation for the Special European Council.

Currency

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what matters relating to currency he discussed at the meeting he attended in Brussels on 12 and 13 September.

Mr. Nelson: The Chancellor did not attend any meetings in Brussels on 12 and 13 September.

Privatisation

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money was spent on advertising of privatisation sales for each sale since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows the cost to the Government of advertising in each privatisation by flotation or secondary share sale since BT. Information on the advertising costs of earlier sales is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount of debt written off in each privatisation and sale of Government assets since 1979 for each company privatised.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the Chancellor of the Exchequer's answer of 3 March, Official Report, col. 124.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current number of shareholdings in each of the companies privatised since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows the number of shareholdings in each of the companies privatised since 1979. Where Her Majesty's Government retained a shareholding on privatisation, together with the size and date of any subsequent share disposals, this has also been shown.

[2] HM Government obtained a majority holding in 1914 but this never reached 100 per cent. The 1977 sale is shown as the first disposal of recent times.

[3] Where the largest register of shareholdings was not immediately following privatisation (this usually followed a secondary offer).

[4] These proportions do not sum to 51 per cent because of rights issues.

[5] Subsidiary of BL plc.

[6] The offer allowed for holdings by individuals in any or all of the companies in the offer and therefore holders may appear on more than one register.

[7] Shareholders may appear on the register of more than one company.

[8] The offer required pulic applicants to apply for shares in both companies and the figure shown is that of allocations in the offer.

[9] The offer required non-customer public applicants to apply for shares in both companies and the figure shown is that of allocations in the offer.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a breakdown of administrative costs set out in a similar manner to that in his answer to the hon. Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) of 5 March, Official Report, column 244, for the share offers relating to (a) British Gas, (b) the electricity generating companies, (c) the electricity distribution companies, (d) the two Scottish electricity companies and (e) the water companies.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to page 18 of the report by the National Audit Office on the sale of British Gas (House of Commons paper 22 published June 1987) and to the replies given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy on 31 January 1992 at column 723; by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland on 31 January 1992 at column 722; and by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 3 April at column 570-71.

European Central Bank

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures will be required to ensure uniformity of European central bank notes under article 16 of the protocol to the Maastricht treaty on European central banks.

Mr. Nelson: There is no requirement under article 16 for uniformity of bank notes, whether issued by the European central bank or other banks within the Community. Article 16 requires the ECB to respect as far as possible existing practices regarding the issue and design of bank notes.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rules and practices the Government propose to change in the field of statistical collection pursuant to article 5 of the protocol to the Maastricht treaty relating to European central banks; and what will be the role of the European central bank.

Mr. Nelson: No proposals have yet been made to ministers on the statistical requirements relating to the role of the European central bank. The role of the ECB in this area would be as set out in Article 5 of the protocol to the treaty on the statute of the European system of central banks and the European central bank.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans the Government have to make the Bank of England independent under article 7 of the protocol to the Maastricht treaty relating to European central banks.

Mr. Nelson: The Government have no plans at present to make the Bank of England independent under article 7 of the protocol to the Maastricht treaty setting out the statute for the European central banks. According to the protocol to the Maastricht treaty on certain provisions relating to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, article 7 would only apply to the United Kingdom if, at some future date, the United Kingdom were to notify the Council of Ministers that it wished to move to stage 3 of the European economic and monetary union.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Dorrell: The Chancellor's departments have a number of staff dedicated to looking at the potential for deregulation throughout the economy. These total 11 at an annual salary cost of about £340,000. In addition, other staff also spend some of their time working on deregulation issues as part of their duties. It is therefore not possible to quantify exactly the total effort devoted to this subject.

Developing Countries (Debt Relief)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what additional foreign exchange savings would accrue to developing countries if the Trinidad terms originally proposed by the Prime Minister had been accepted by the Paris club compared to the terms currently in use;

(2) what foreign exchange savings have been achieved by developing countries whose debt has been processed by the Paris club under the Trinidad terms.

Mr. Nelson: The debt reduction provided under Trinidad terms is assessed in present value terms and this cannot be reliably translated into estimates of foreign exchange earnings. Trinidad terms are designed to deliver up to 50 per cent. reduction in the present value of debts consolidated under the agreements. It is not possible to anticipate the outcome of consideration of reduction of the whole stock of debt, which creditors are committed to undertake provided that certain conditions are met.

The debt relief agreed to by creditors at the Paris Club is informed by and related to an independent estimate of the future foreign exchange financing needs of individual debtors.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, for each country benefiting from debt relief under the Trinidad terms, (a) how the debt to be dealt with is calculated, (b) the percentage of total external debt of each country that this constitutes and (c) the level of relief and rescheduling that has been given.

Mr. Nelson: The details of individual debtors' positions are confidential to the country concerned. Debts eligible for Trinidad terms debt reduction are medium and long term bilateral official debt which are contracted before a specified cut-off date and which have not previously been subject to a concessional debt restructuring agreement at the Paris Club. The amount of relief provided is dependent upon the distribution of debt between individual creditors and the method of debt relief chosen by each creditor.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many developing countries have benefited from the Trinidad debt relief terms; which countries are due to be dealt with by the Paris Club; and when such action will be taken.

Mr. Nelson: Eight countries have so far benefited from Trinidad terms debt reduction at the Paris Club. The future programme of the Paris Club is driven by requests from the debtor countries.

Developmental Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has yet issued guidance to Departments about the general responsibilities of the boards of new developmental public bodies, pursuant to the note to the Public Accounts Committee [PAC 69] dated 28 February; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Dorrell: Some guidance on the responsibilities of boards of non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) is already contained in the recently revised NDPB Guide for Departments. A copy has been placed in the Library. As noted in the Treasury minute, on the 11th report of the Public Accounts Committee, which is being laid before Parliament today, it is proposed to provide additional guidance shortly. The Treasury is currently consulting departments on content and coverage.

Canary Wharf

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Treasury, Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise jobs he proposes to move to Canary Wharf.

Mr. Dorrell: Customs and Excise plans to relocate the 130 staff in its Stratford excise and VAT office to Docklands, but not necessarily Canary Wharf, in August 1993.

London Transport

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the net effect on the public sector borrowing requirement of £100 million extra funding of capital investment by London Transport, including tax receipts, national insurance payments, and reductions in social security payments; and if he will estimate any crowding out.

Mr. Portillo: It is not possible to provide reliable estimates of the net effects.

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will specify which categories of public servants and service men with preserved pension rights have the right to transfer to personal pension plans and indicate from which earliest date of leaving public service employment that entitlement stands.

Mr. Nelson: All former public servants and members of the armed forces whose last day of pensionable service was on or after 1 January 1986 may transfer their preserved public service pension rights to an appropriate personal pension plan.

Those in post on or after 6 April 1988 who choose to opt out of their occupational pension scheme without leaving public service employment or the armed forces may transfer their preserved rights in respect of service from 6 April 1988 to an appropriate personal pension plan. If they subsequently leave the public service or the armed forces, they may transfer the value of any benefits remaining in their occupational scheme to an appropriate personal pension plan.

These arrangements are fully in accordance with the Social Security Acts 1985 and 1986.

Civil Servants

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table giving the number of officials in the top four grades of the civil service in the Department of Trade and Industry, the Ministry of Defence, the Treasury, the Foreign Office, Inland Revenue, the Home Office and the Departments of the Environment, Employment, Transport, Health, Social Security and Education, and the number and percentage in each case from Oxbridge colleges and the number of women and of disabled people in each case.

Mr. Lamont: The table gives the total number of staff and the number of women in grades 1-4 in the selected Departments. Complete information relating to colleges attended and the number of disabled people in these grades is not held centrally.

Grades 1-4 staff in post at 1 April 1992, by selected department

	Total	Women
Department of Trade and Industry	62	6
Ministry of Defence	103	3
HM Treasury	39	2
Foreign and Commonwealth Office	143	6
Inland Revenue	65	—
Home Office	42	9
Department of the Environment	77	8
Department of Employment	24	2
Department of Transport	42	—

	Total	Women
Department of Health	66	18
Department of Social Security	31	6
Department of Education and Science	31	3

Ministry Objectives

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether each division and branch in the Treasury is given individual specific annual objectives along the lines of those specified in the MINIM system in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Nelson: Although the Treasury has no equivalent to MAFF's MINIM system, the Treasury's internal annual resource allocation system requires each group and division to set objectives for their future work programmes. These objectives are drawn up within the framework of the roles and strategic objectives for the department as a whole and which are published on pages 14 to 21 of the 1992 Departmental Report for the Chancellor's Departments—CM 1918.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how statistics relating to the consumer price index of the member states of the European Community are to be adjusted so as to take into account differences in national definitions under the protocol of the convergence criteria referred to in article 109j of the treaty establishing the European Community.

Mr. Nelson: The European Community Statistical Office (Eurostat) is planning to set up a working party of representatives of member states statistical offices to consider the technical issues involved in producing harmonised consumer price indices.

Tilbury/Gravesend Ferry

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will, in accordance with section 1(4) of the Crown Estate Act 1961, use his good offices to determine the dispute about the ancient rights of ferry between Tilbury and Gravesend, between the Crown Estate Commissioners and Whitehorse Ferries Ltd.; and if he will direct the restoration and continuation of the service until such times as the dispute has been resolved.

Mr. Lamont: The service was restored by Whitehorse Ferries Ltd. within a few days and I understand that the Crown Estate Commissioners and Whitehorse Ferries Ltd. reached agreement on the ferry franchise in early August.

Crown Estate Commissioners

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Crown Estate Commissioners are subject to value added tax in respect of all revenues they accrue and transactions they enter into from leases, licences and rents relating to property they control and manage in respect of the Crown estate.

Mr. Lamont: The Crown Estate Commissioners are registered for value added tax for their business activities. They account for VAT according to the normal rules, which would include transactions involving land and property.

VAT

181. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it remains Government policy to retain permanently the ability to apply a zero rate of VAT to books, newspapers and periodicals.

Sir John Cope: Yes. The Government remain committed to the permanent retention of the right to maintain all existing zero rates.

Third-world Debt

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total tax relief for banks against written-off third-world debt in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Provisions for doubtful sovereign debt by banks operating in the United Kingdom are estimated to have reduced corporation tax receipts in the last five years by the following amounts:

	£ million
1987-88	240
1988-89	550
1989-90	360
1990-91	720
1991-92 (provisional)	180

I regret that further information is not available centrally.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total level of bad debt to the private sector in the third world; and what are the comparative figures for the past five years.

Mr. Nelson: Information requested is not readily available and could only be provided at a disproportionate cost. Information on provisions made by British banks for their exposure to problem country debtors is contained in the Bank of England's annual Banking Act report, copies of which are available in the Library.

National and Provincial Building Society

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the claim by the National and Provincial building society for the repayment of £29 million allegedly overpaid as tax on savings in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: A number of representatives have been received. The issues were fully considered during the Finance Bill debates.

Interest Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how many points United Kingdom interest rates have been reduced (a) since leaving the ERM and (b) between joining the ERM and August 1992.

Mr. Nelson: Between joining the ERM and August 1992, United Kingdom bank base rates were reduced by 5 points, from 15 to 10 per cent. They have since been reduced to 9 per cent.

National Lottery

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to close down the premium bond draw on the introduction of the national lottery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Nelson: I have no such plans.

Voluntary Organisations (Taxation)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to offer parity for voluntary organisations with local government in taxation matters.

Mr. Nelson: No. I see no reason why voluntary organisations should be treated as if they were local authorities.

Non-departmental Bodies

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent consideration has been given by Her Majesty's Treasury to the need to draw to the attention of non-departmental bodies the rules governing payment for untaken leave and the obtaining of the prior approval of the Treasury Solicitor before the making of agreements with employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Portillo: Establishment officers of non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) were reminded of the need to ensure observance of the general principles of sound management and the provisions relating to payment for untaken leave in a letter circulated by the Treasury on 5 October.

NDPBs, as employers in their own right, seek legal advice whenever necessary. It would not be appropriate to require NDPBs to obtain legal advice specifically from the Treasury Solicitor but it would be open to the sponsor department, if a matter were raised with it, to consult its own lawyers or the Treasury Solicitor.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the ending of the Barnett formula relating to public expenditure per head in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland to that in England and the United Kingdom average.

Mr. Portillo: No decisions have yet been taken about future levels of public expenditure. When they are, they will be announced in the autumn statement in the normal way.

Foreign Exchange Markets

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his practice to answer questions on the level of Government intervention in the foreign exchange markets in support of exchange rate objectives.

Mr. Nelson: I have no plans to change the long-standing practice of successive Governments not to provide details of intervention operations.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it remains his policy to tax invalidity benefit.

Mr. Dorrell: It remains the Government's intention to bring invalidity benefit into taxation at a suitable opportunity.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the proposed date for the start of the final stage of economic and monetary union agreed to in the Maastricht treaty; and what stage the United Kingdom has reached.

Mr. Nelson: The starting date for the third stage of economic and monetary union will be set in accordance with the provisions of article 109j of the treaty on European union. Along with all other member states, the United Kingdom is presently participating in the first stage which began on 1 July 1990.

First-time Home Buyers

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to develop a scheme to stimulate the housing market by increasing mortgage interest tax relief and reducing stamp duty for first-time buyers only; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The Government have received a number of such suggestions in recent weeks, all of which are considered carefully.

Council Tax

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the form of competitive tender arrangements for the supply of estate agency services for the valuation and banding exercise for the introduction of the council tax in Wales; and if he will give the cost of the exercise, broken down by payments to each firm of estate agents or chartered surveyors employed and in which local authority area they were employed.

Mr. Nelson: The competitive tendering arrangements for the award of contracts to private sector firms for the valuation banding of domestic properties for the council tax in Wales were undertaken by the Valuation Office Agency.

The exercise was based on the established public sector procurement process of press advertising, pre-qualification and sealed bid tendering. The process throughout was the subject of consultation with the main valuers' professional institutions.

The pre-qualification stage involved an operational assessment by the agency of firms who registered an interest in assisting with the valuation banding, and an assessment of financial viability by independent consultants. Those firms successful at this stage were invited to tender.

The evaluation of bids and the authorisation of the award of contracts to successful firms was undertaken by a tender evaluation board. The board comprised representatives from the agency, the Welsh Office and the professional institutions.

The total cost of the contracts awarded to private sector firms, which were completed earlier this year, amounted to £1,406,142. It is not possible to disclose the payments to each contractor, on the grounds of commercial confidence.

The district council areas in Wales where contracts were awarded, and the contractors employed in these areas is shown in the table.

Average Family Income

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the relative position of Wales on the table of average family incomes compared with other standard regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: Estimates of gross normal weekly household income for Wales and the standard regions of the United Kingdom are shown in the table. The estimates are based on two years results from the 1989 and 1990 family expenditure surveys.

Average gross normal weekly household income[1] 1989 and 1990

Region	£/week
North	265·62
Yorks and Humberside	263·53
North East	289·75
East Midlands	311·67
West Midlands	295·87
East Anglia	325·08
Greater London	402·22
South East except Greater London	391·51
South West	317·36
Wales	263·09
Scotland	227·48
Northern Ireland	232·69
All United Kingdom	319·36

[1] Gross normal weekly household income is the total of wages and salaries, self-employment, income, investment, pensions and other sources for all household members. It also includes an imputed income component for owner occupiers and those who occupy their dwelling rent-free.

Child Benefit

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate has been made of the revenue which would be obtained by taxing child benefit.

Mr. Dorrell: The estimated direct revenue yield in 1992-93 from making child benefit liable to tax would be about £600 million. This assumes that child benefit received by married couples would be taxed as the mother's income.

Currency Changes

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give figures for the percentage change in the retail prices index and the percentage change in the level of sterling compared with (a) the deutschmark and (b) the US dollar for each calendar year since 1979.

Mr. Nelson: Recent annual figures for retail prices and exchange rates can be found in the Economic Trends published by the Central Statistical Office, and figures for earlier years are published in corresponding tables in Economic Trends annual supplement.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff his Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and what were the staffing levels and personnel costs in 1970.

Mr. Nelson [pursuant to his answer, 14 July 1992, c. 527]: The answer unfortunately used incorrect figures for average staff in post for 1991-92. The correct figure is 2,928 and not 3,192 as stated.

SCOTLAND

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, for each region, the water supply zones where the water authorities have assessed that there is a risk of United Kingdom standards for lead in water not always being met stating for each the expected date for compliance; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The public water supply zones in Scotland where mainland authorities have reported that, after the end of 1991, there was a risk of the United Kingdom standard for lead not always being met and where, consequently, further action was required by the regulations, are listed in the table. The expected date for compliance is also stated where this has been agreed.

In almost half of the 77 zones listed, remedial action has either been taken, or is planned to be taken before the end of this year.

Following earlier improvements by water authorities, statutory random sampling last year indicated that, compared with 1990, samples failing the lead standard dropped from more than 4 per cent. to under 2 per cent. However, compliance with the standard cannot be guaranteed until lead pipes and fittings, mainly within consumers own properties, are removed.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate, for each region, what investment is needed at 1992 prices to meet the requirement to end dumping of sewage sludge at sea after 1998; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Only Strathclyde and Lothian regional councils are affected by the ending of sewage sludge dumping at sea. Councils are presently completing reviews of their sludge disposal strategies. At current prices, possible investments associated with the cessation of dumping are estimated by the regional councils at £70 million for Strathclyde and £21 million for Lothian.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of food poisoning have been notified in each year since 1979; and if will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The numbers of cases of food poisoning notified in Scotland since 1979 are as follows:

Year	Notifications
1979	2,657
1980	2,299
1981	2,920
1982	2,880

TRANSPORT

Rail Services

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail about rail services to and from Darwen, Lancashire.

Mr. Freeman: None. The level of service on the line is a matter for British Rail and the Greater Manchester passenger executive.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the reduction in Sunday rail services to and from Darwen, Lancashire, Following publication of the citizen's charter.

Mr. Freeman: One. The level of service on this line is a matter for British Rail and the Greater Manchester passenger transport executive.

Coal

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the number of million tonne miles of coal carried by railways and coastal and inland shipping in or around the United Kingdom in 1990 and 1991, and his estimate of the amount likely to be carried thereafter, following implementation of the current plans for reduced use of coal.

Mr. Freeman: Statistics of coal and coke movements in 1990 and 1991 are given in table 1·9 of Transport Statistics Great Britain 1992, which was published in September. The figures for rail and water, including coastal and inland waterway movements, are as follows:

Billion tonne-kilometres

	1990	1991
Rail	5·0	[1]5·0
Water	1·4	[2]1·7

[1] 1991-92 financial year

[2] provisional

It is for British Rail Trainload Freight and the shipping industry to make their own estimates of the amount of coal and coke they expect to carry.

Car Safety

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action is currently undertaken by his Department to encourage car manufacturers to take into account the safety of pedestrians, cyclists and motorcyclists when designing their cars.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The United Kingdom is at the forefront of moves within Europe to make the fronts of cars less harmful to pedestrians, cyclists and motorcyclists in the event of a collision and is currently co-operating in the drafting of an EC directive. The Government welcome the fact that manufacturers are already incorporating in their cars some of the measures which are proposed in the directive and hope that they will be able to move further in this direction.

Traffic Accidents

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of children under school-leaving age were involved in road traffic accidents in the United Kingdom in 1991; and what information he has on the equivalent figures for each European Community and European Free Trade Association country.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There were 46,126 reported road casualties aged under 16 years in the United Kingdom during 1991, which represents a rate of 0·40 per 100 population. Comparable data for other EC and EFTA countries are not available. Instead, the table shows road fatalities aged under 15 in those countries and the corresponding fatality rates per million population in that age group.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of children under school-leaving age were injured in road traffic accidents in each United Kingdom region in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The table shows the number of reported road accident casualties aged under 16 in each United Kingdom region in 1991, and the corresponding casualty rates per 100 population in that age group as follows:

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a figure showing the average cost to the Exchequer of each road traffic accident, including a figure for the average cost of medical care.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The total costs of road accidents are updated each year and published in the Department of Transport publication, "Highways Economic Note No 1" and in "Road Accidents Great Britain":

Direct costs to the Exchequer include medical costs, social security payments, police costs and lost revenue from taxation due to loss of earnings. The table shows average total cost, average cost to the Exchequer excluding lost taxation revenue for which no estimate is available, and also medical costs.

Ports

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he will be taking in the remainder of 1992 to promote investment into British ports within the wider investment infrastructure of the Community, to place British ports in a position level to that of ports in other Community countries.

Mr. Norris: This Government's policies have led to a vigorous flow of private sector investment into United Kingdom ports. We welcome the initiative by the European Commission to set up a member states' group on ports and trans-European networks, to identify opportunities for expanding the role of ports and shipping services in freight transport within the Community. We also welcome the statement, in the working documents circulated to the first meeting on 1 October, stressing the need to maintain the principle of free and fair competition between ports.

Car Advertisements

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what efforts are being undertaken by his Department to discourage car manufacturers from referring to the aquisition of speed as a central feature of their advertising campaigns.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Advertising Standards Authority and the Independent Television Commission have responsibility for setting standards for acceptable advertisements. These standards prohibit any advertisement which places undue emphasis on speed or encourages unlawful or unsafe driving practices. The Advertising Standards Authority issued further advice to advertising practitioners, following discussions in 1990. This advice has resulted in a significant reduction in the number of advertisements found to be in breach of the standards. At a further meeting last July, the authority agreed to maintain its close monitoring of the use of speed in car advertising.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Norris: It is not possible to place a financial figure on the Department's involvement with deregulation. The Department is continually seeking opportunities for deregulation in transport and a high proportion of its current policies are directed at this aim. In addition, whenever new legislation or regulation is being considered by the Department, the Department examines closely the cost impact of such measures, especially on business.

Regional Airlines

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to paragraph 13.53 of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report MMC2, BAA plc, published in 1991; if he will make it his policy that interests of United Kingdom regional airlines could be safeguarded under section 41 of the Airports Act 1986; what plans he has to act to protect the interests of such airlines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend has noted the view the MMC expressed on the structure of charges at BAA plc's London airports.

The Government look for healthy competition in the aviation market and seek to protect the interests of both consumers and operators against anti-competitive practices. Section 41 of the Airports Act 1986 gives the Civil Aviation Authority the power to impose conditions on an airport operator to remedy specific conduct which unreasonably discriminates against any class of airport user or unfairly exploits that operator's bargaining position.

Road Works

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what estimates he has made of the potential benefits to road users of the use of trenchless technology;

(2) what research he has funded into the cost benefit of trenchless technology.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In 1989 the Department commissioned the transport research laboratory to assess the use of trenchless construction methods in road works in a three-year project, at a cost of £90,000. The project is intended to provide details of the potential savings to road users as a result of more widespread use of trenchless methods, and to provide information about what, if any, additional direct costs would be incurred by using trenchless methods. An interim report was produced in July 1991, and a final report, covering evaluation of methods, economics and potential for application, is due in the spring of 1993.

Associated with this project is another one, begun in May 1992, which is being carried out by the Construction Industry Research and Information Association under the title "RP 456: Planning and Investigation for the Use of Trenchless and Minimum Excavation Technology in the Installation, Replacement and Renovation of Underground Services". The report on this project is expected in 1993.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if it is his policy to encourage highway authorities and undertakers to take account of delays to road users when planning road works.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes. The relevant provisions of the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 will come into force on 1 January 1993. They will require street authorities, normally the local highway authorities, to co-ordinate undertakers' street works and works for their own road purposes, and will impose a duty on undertakers to co-operate with the street authority and other undertakers, one of the aims being to minimise inconvenience to users of the street. We shall shortly be publishing a code of practice giving practical guidance on the carrying out of these duties.

I expect these provisions to prove effective in reducing delays associated with undertakers' and highway authorities' works in the road. I shall be monitoring the situation closely.

The Act provides an additional reserve power to make regulations imposing charges for occupation of the highway where undertakers' works are unreasonably prolonged. We shall not hesitate to implement this provision if we need to do so.

High Winds

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the information available to him on the incidence and effect of high winds on the Dartford/Thurrock bridge.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Since the Queen Elizabeth II bridge came into use in October 1991, it has only once been closed because of high winds. Speed restrictions and lane closures due to high winds have been imposed for a total of some 71 hours.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fishing vessels are registered in the United Kingdom but beneficially owned in each other EC member state.

Mr. Norris: There are now some 57 Spanish, 21 Dutch and two Danish fishing vessels registered in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) to what degree a fishing vessel is required to show a genuine economic link with the United Kingdom to qualify for registrations and licensing with United Kingdom authorities;

(2) what information he has on the names of fishing vessels registered in the United Kingdom and beneficially owned in other EC member states of the owners of these boats and the United Kingdom link which allows them to be British registered.

Mr. Norris: Any vessel fishing for profit is required to give certain details including details of ownership and management and the name of vessel before it can be registered in the United Kingdom.

In line with the requirements of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 we continue to require that any fishing vessel on the United Kingdom register must be managed and the operations directed and controlled from within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the claim for compensation by fishing vessels from his Department for the period deregistered will be based on the net earnings of the British companies which owned the vessels concerned prior to 31 March 1989.

Mr. Norris: The applicants seek damages under three heads; expenses, losses consequent on the sale of vessels and losses consequent on the need to provide bonds, fines and legal expenses. The Government do not, however, accept that they are under any liability to pay compensation.

Railway Tracks

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss British Rail's plans to sell redundant and little-used railway track.

Mr. Freeman: The Secretary of State and I meet the chairman of British Rail regularly to discuss various matters. The board's objectives require it to divest itself of all underused or surplus land and property as rapidly as possible, at a proper commercial price.

The procedure currently followed by BR for the disposal of disused trackbed is as follows:

- (i) Discussions with the various BR businesses to establish that the land is no longer required for operational purposes and that no future operational use has been identified by them. The land is then handed over to the British Rail Property Board (BRPB) for disposal.
- (ii) Notification by BRPB to local authorities that it intends to sell the land so that they can approach the board with their requirement to purchase at the earliest possible date.
- (iii) If there is no approach from the local authority, BRPB notifies statutory undertakers, MOD, British Coal and the Department to see if there are any objections to the sale.
- (iv) If there are no objections, BRPB proceeds with the sale.

Motorway Accidents

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the number of accidents which have occurred on motorways as a result of vehicles hitting tyre debris or swerving to avoid such debris.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information requested is not available. However of the 6,287 motorway injury accidents in Great Britain in 1991, 209 involved vehicles hitting an object on the carriageway that was not a vehicle load, a previous accident or an animal. This accounts for 3 per cent. of all motorway injury accidents.

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his Answer of 12 June, Official Report, column 298, when the hon. Member can expect to receive the report of the CAA/Ministry of Defence investigation into the air near-miss that occurred on 1 July over Currock hill gliding site.

Mr. Norris: I am advised by the Civil Aviation Authority that this incident, involving a Cadedonian Airways triStar and a glider, over Currock hill gliding site on 31 May 1992, has been examined by the independent joint airmiss working group. The findings of the group will be available in the spring of next year. It will feature in the Civil Aviation Authority's regular publication "UK Airmisses Involving Commercial Air Transport". Arrangements have been made for the hon. Member to receive a copy when it is available.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 7 July, Official Report, column 109, when the hon. Member can expect to receive the report from the joint CAA/Ministry of Defence investigation into the air near-misses that occurred on (a) 26 June over south Wales and (b) 25 June, 15 miles north of Grimsby.

Mr. Norris: The air miss report filed with the Civil Aviation Authority in respect of the incidents involving respectively:

1. An Air UK Fokker 27 and a Royal Air Force Tornado, north of Grimsby on 25 June 1992; and
2. A United Airlines boeing 767 and a Venezuelan-registered Falcon 50 south west of Ebbw Vale on 26 June 1992; have been examined by the independent joint air miss working group. The group's assessment of each incident will be published along with others by the Civil Aviation Authority in the spring of 1993 and I have made arrangments for the hon. Member to receive a copy of this document when it is available.

Passenger Ferries

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with his counterpart in the Irish Republic concerning the vetting of sewerage system safety in design and operation on Welsh-Irish passenger ferry services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: My officials have been in regular contact with the Irish Department of the Marine, and the Polish authorities, since the tragic accident on the Celtic Pride on 12 August. My surveyors agreed with the operators and the Irish administration a programme for the implementation of modifications to the sewerage system, to provide a permanent solution to the venting problems which caused the accident. Following completion of these modifications, and subsequent tests on the ship in an operational condition, the ship has now been allowed to continue operations. However, monitoring of the situation on board the ship continues on a regular basis.

My Department, and the Irish administration, have circulated an urgent notice to all ferry companies operating from United Kingdom and Irish ports, about the checks to be made on sewerage systems. The Irish administration is currently conducting an inquiry into the tragedy, and will provide my Department with full details of its findings and any recommendations.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last visited Oxleas wood; when he last had communication with the European Commission regarding the east London river crossing; and if he will make a statement

Mr. Norris: I visited Oxleas wood in May. The United Kingdom sent its response to the European Commission's article 169 letter in December 1991. The Commission announced on 31 July that it will be proceeding to reasoned opinion on the alleged non-compliance with the EC Directive on Environmental Assessment. No further communication has been received.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the original estimate of the cost of construction of the east London river crossing; what is his current estimate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The original estimated cost of the east London river crossing, as set out in the White Paper "Policy for Roads: England 1980" Cmnd. 7908, was £90 million, for construction works only, at 1978 prices.

Following detailed development of the scheme, including substantial changes discussed at the two public inquiries, the current estimated cost including land is about £300 million at 1989 prices.

Air Routes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what concessions his Department made to allow an American airline to have a direct air route between Glasgow and Washington; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Under the Bermuda 2 air services agreement, the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom each have the right to designate an airline or airlines to operate services on routes between Glasgow and a number of United States gateway cities, including Washington. These rights were negotiated as part of the original agreement in 1977.

London Transport

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to alter the capital programmes of London Transport.

Mr. Norris: London Transport's external financing requirement for the three years ahead is reviewed annually. I cannot anticipate the Chancellor's autumn statement announcement on the financial provision for the years 1993-94 to 1995-96.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what capital spending has been authorised for London Transport on (a) bus replacement and (b) the underground railways in each of the last five years; and what sums have been published for the next two years.

Mr. Norris: The appointment of capital spending between bus purchase, the undergound railways and other types of investment is a matter for London Transport not the Government. The table which gives the information on spending for the past five years is as follows:

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Bus purchase	3·1	8·5	15·3	15·7	23·8
London Underground Limited (inc new lines)	213	215	302	458	368

Disaggregated figures for the next two years are not available, but the total London Transport investment implied by the 1991 settlement was £1,519 million in 1993-94 and £1,370 million in 1994-95.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what investment plans he approved in 1991 for London Transport.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend does not approve LT investment plans. However, the levels of capital investment implied by the 1991 autumn statement for LT, including new lines, for the next three years are:

Year	£ million cash
1992-93	1,197
1993-94	1,519
1994-95	1,370

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the change in unit costs for bus travel in London over the past 10 years.

Mr. Norris: The following figures show local bus operating costs in London over the past 10 years. They comprise services operated under contract to London Transport, and all operations by London Buses Limited, other than commercial services by London Coaches Limited. They exclude depreciation and renewals, and are rounded to the nearest five pence.

Year	Cost per bus kilometre (£) 1990-91 prices
1980	2·15
1981	2·15
1982	2·20
1983	2·20
1984-85	2·20
1985-86	2·05
1986-87	1·90
1987-88	1·80
1988-89	1·80
1989-90	1·70
1990-91	1·65

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the extension and the returns on bus priority and selective vehicle identification schemes for buses in London.

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport issued advice on bus priority measures last December, and a number of schemes are now being prepared by the London boroughs in conjunction with London Transport. The Government have allocated £1 million for these schemes in the current year.

A selective bus identification trial scheme in the south-east London—north-east Kent area is producing substantial benefits to buses and their passengers. London Buses is now fitting its buses with the equipment necessary to extend the benefits to other parts of outer London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the economic effects on the efficiency of London Transport's capital programmes of short-term changes in authorised spending.

Mr. Norris: Careful cash control and management of the large stock of projects which LT has in various stages of development enables LT to adjust its capital investment programme from time to time in the light of available resources, as any other business may have to do.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the changes in bus miles and in bus passenger numbers for London Transport bus services compared with out-of-London services.

Mr. Norris: For the past five years, the information requested is as follows:

Bus miles (millions)

	London	Outside London
1986-87	173	1,169
1987-88	171	1,283
1988-89	177	1,306
1989-90	181	1,337
1990-91	189	1,330

Passenger journeys (millions)

	London	Outside London
1986-87	1,164	4,179
1987-88	1,240	4,081
1988-89	1,240	4,001
1989-90	1,207	3,881
1990-91	1,197	3,654

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the average age of London Transport's buses in each of the last five years.

Mr. Norris: The average age of London Buses Ltd.'s fleet is heavily influenced by the presence of around 650 routemaster vehicles whose average age in 1991 was 27 years. I understand from it that the information is as follows:

Year	Average age (years)
1988	9·5
1989	9·9
1991	10·3

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his responsibilities, objectives and targets for public transport in London.

Mr. Norris: The Secretary of State's objectives, targets and responsibilities are set out in the Departmental Report "The Government's Expenditure Plans for Transport 1992-93 to 1994-95". A copy of the report has been placed in the House Library.

Since that report was published, there have been two major developments. First, new quality of service objectives for London Transport bus and underground services were announced. I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 2 June, Vol 208, col. 524-26 and on 29 June, Vol 210, col. 388-90.

Secondly, following publication of the white Paper, Cmd. 2012, "New Opportunities for the Railways", a consultation document—"The Franchising of Passenger Rail Services"—was published on 12 October. A copy has been placed in the House Library. This gives further information on how the franchising system will work and seeks views from prospective franchisees. This is in pursuit of the Government's overall objective for British Rail to extend the involvement of the private sector in the operation of the railways, ensure continuity of services, assure safety, and provide value for money.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in which years since 1972 the capital spending by London Transport has maintained asset standards.

Mr. Norris: Information in the form requested is not held by the Government or by LT.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list link London Transport's (a) higher priority projects and (b) lower priority projects included in his consideration of capital spending plans.

Mr. Norris: No. It is for LT and its subsidiaries, not the Government, to decide what priority is given to specific investment projects.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what sum of money is neded to prevent an increase in the average age of London Transport's buses.

Mr. Norris: It is not possible to give a precise figure. London Buses Ltd's bus replacement programme is not driven by the aim of maintaining a particular average age of the fleet.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which conclusions and options of the central London rail study have been accepted by him and by London Transport.

Mr. Norris: The central London rail study recommended a major upgrading programme to make the best use of existing infrastructure and proposed two options for new lines. Since then investment in existing infrastructure has been raised to record levels, a Bill has been deposited in Parliament for Crossrail and the route of the Chelsea-Hackney line has been safeguarded.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the import share in London Transport's capital spending.

Mr. Norris: No such calculation is made or could meaningfully be made. It is for London Transport to place orders where best value for money can be obtained.

Canary Wharf

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the numbers who will live within 40 minutes travel time of Canary Wharf if the Jubilee line extension is (a) built or (b) not built.

Mr. Norris: This information is not available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Department of Transport

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people have held the position of (a) Secretary of State for Transport, (b) Minister for Public Transport, (c) Permanent Secretary and (d) Deputy Secretary for Public Transport since January 1989.

Mr. Norris: Four people have held the position of Secretary of State for Transport since January 1989. Two people have held the position of Minister of State for Public Transport since January 1989. Two people have held the position of permanent secretary and three people have held the position of deputy secretary for public transport since January 1989.

Bus Deregulation

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider modern stored value and integrated ticketing before deregulation of buses in London.

Mr. Norris: I understand that London Transport is currently undertaking a trial of stored value ticketing on bus route 212 in north London. London Underground is also developing a stored value ticketing system and London Transport intends that both systems should be compatible. On British Rail services, stored value ticketing is not so appropriate because of the cost and safety implications of providing ticket gates at all stations.

Capital Spending

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates or research his Department has published on the economic and financial effects of sudden changes in capital spending.

Mr. MacGregor: None.

London Underground

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what sustained level of investment in London's underground was endorsed or recommended in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report.

Mr. Norris: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission report of 5 June 1991 into London Underground Limited, LUL, did not endorse or recommend any specific level of investment in London Underground.

Transpennine Roads

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he proposes to take regarding transpennine road links following publication of the recent study undertaken on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are a number of schemes in the national roads programme to improve transpennine road links. These include widening M62 between junctions 18 and 24; provision of a new M1/M62 link; improvements to A628/A616 from M67 to Stocksbridge and improvements to A66.

I will be better placed to make a statement regarding transpennine roads strategy once the public consultation period has finished on 5 March and all responses have been considered. At this stage the Government are not committed to any of the strategies in the consultants' report.

A140

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fatalities have occurred on the A140 between Norwich and the A45 in the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Forty-nine. The figures for the years 1982 to 1992, to 30 September, are as follows:

Year	Number of fatalities
1982	3
1983	6
1984	7
1985	1
1986	2
1987	3
1988	3
1989	12
1990	3
1991	5
1992	4

These figures relate to the road between its junctions with the Norwich outer ring road and the A45.

Bus Stops (Information Systems)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated financial return and the estimated value to passengers and potential passengers of real time information systems at bus stops.

Mr. Norris: London Transport plans to start trials of Countdown in November. The purpose of those trials is to establish the cost, benefits and practicability of real time passenger information systems.

Victoria Line

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has has made of the economic value of the Victoria line.

Mr. Norris: None. The practice of carrying out backchecks on investments for which Government approval has been given is a relatively new one, and this has not been done in the case of the Victoria line.

Transport Security Annual Report

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish the 1991-92 annual report of the director and co-ordinator of transport security.

Mr. MacGregor: Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House.

Red Star

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of the British Railways Board parcels service, Red Star.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received representations from the British Railways Board seeking approval to the early trade sale of Red Star, and on 7 October I announced my agreement to that proposal. The detailed sale arrangements will be drawn up by the board, subject to Government scrutiny in the usual way. I welcome the board's commitment to Red Star privatisation. An early sale is the best way to revitalise the business and return it to profitability.

Passenger Railway Services

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he plans to consult potential franchisees on his proposals for franchising passenger railway services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I published a consultation document on 12 October with the aim of seeking the views of potential franchisees on the areas, geographically and in terms of specific activities, which may be of interest, and on the ways in which the franchising of passenger services might best be carried out. This should ensure that we implement franchising in the most market oriented way, so maximising competition and ensuring value for money. I have placed copies of this document in the Library.

DVOIT

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the future of the DVOIT executive agency.

Mr. MacGregor: Following a review of its activities, DVOIT will be the first next steps agency to be privatised. Under the citizens charter we are committed to improving service to the public. This means introducing the market to many areas of government. Privatisation brings choice and efficiency, and I am confident that the privatisation of DVOIT will lead to continuing improvements in value for money in the IT services provided for my Department.

A1 Red Route

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he has taken on the Transport Research Laboratory technical paper TD/TP/173/92 about the patronage of businesses on the A1 red route.

Mr. Norris: I have noted with interest that the shopping activity section of the technical paper reproduces the findings published in the autumn monitoring report on the red route pilot scheme. Those findings support the view that trading activity depends more on the type of business being conducted and the economic climate than on red route measures.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish his Department's estimates of the change in patronage of businesses along the A1 red route between its opening and the latest available date.

Mr. Norris: All monitoring reports including surveys of shopping activity at sites along the pilot red route have been published and copied to the hon. Member.

East Suffolk Railway Line

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the expressions of interest he has received from potential operators wishing to franchise the East Suffolk railway line.

Mr. Freeman: Before the issue of the consultation document on 12 October we had received expressions of interest about running franchised passenger railway services from around 50 companies. I am sure that the consultation document will engender further interest. At this early stage, it is for the companies themselves to indicate publicly whether they are interested in particular services.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will visit and travel upon the east Suffolk railway line to study the possibilities for its future development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I would be delighted to travel on the east Suffolk line when I am next visiting my hon. Friend's constituency.

Rail Accident, Walton-on-the-Naze

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the report of the inspector of railways on the accident at Walton-on-the-Naze in August 1987 will be published; when the inspector's inquiries were completed; when the report was completed; what are the reasons for the delay in publishing the report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Although the inspector's inquiries were completed in 1988 it has not yet been possible to publish a report due to continuing pressure of work. His principal findings were published in the Official Report on 21 October 1991, col. 466, and he discussed them with British Rail shortly after the completion of his inquiries. BR have taken remedial action to prevent any recurrence.

I have asked the Health and Safety Commission to ensure publication of more detailed recommendations and conclusions by 31 December 1992.

Transport, London

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his latest estimates for the respective construction and running costs and the contribution to London's economy and to London's transport system of (a) Crossrail, (b) the Hackney to Chelsea underground line and (c) the Hackney, Chelsea and East Putney underground line.

Mr. Norris: The latest estimates for the construction and operating costs of Crossrail, at 1990 prices, but reassessed in 1991, are £1,704 million for construction and £14·5 million per annum for operating costs. The latest estimates for the construction and operating costs of the Chelsea-Hackney line, at 1990 prices, are £1,776 million for construction and £31 million per annum for operating costs. The latest estimates for the net present value —NPV—of the costs and benefits of the two schemes, made in October 1990 for the Chelsea-Hackney line ahd in 1991 for Crossrail are reproduced in the table as follows:

Capital cost	(1,354)	(1,3[illegible]0)
Operating cost	(95)	(204)
Extra revenue to LUL/NSE	321	358
Funding gap	(1,128)	(1,146)
Passenger benefits	1,170	1,182
Road user benefit	393	395

Net benefit	435	431
Benefit:cost ratio	1 . 30 : 1	1 . 29 : 1

There are currently no plans for a Hackney, Chelsea and East Putney underground line. London Underground Limited is, however, reviewing the costs and benefits of an alternative alignment of the Chelsea-Hackney line via Sands End and Wandsworth and expects to report on the outcome in 1993.

Cars

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of (a) Welsh and (b) English households in 1991 (i) had no car available to them and (ii) had two or more cars.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Information on car ownership is given in Transport Statistics Great Britain. Table 3.13(b) of the recently published 1992 edition showed that, in 1989, 30 per cent. of Welsh households had no car available to them and that 17 per cent. had two or more cars available to them. The equivalent figures for English households were 33 and 19 per cent. respectively.

Cyclists

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cyclists were (a) killed and (b) injured in each of the last five years; and how many in each category were cycling without lights during lighting up times.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Cycling casualties over the past five years are given in the table as follows:

Pedal cycle casualties: by severity of casualty
Great Britain 1987-91

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Killed	280	227	294	256	242
Seriously injured	4,851	4,652	4,836	4,344	3,946
Slightly injured	21,063	20,970	23,383	21,822	20,615
All casualties	26,194	25,849	28,513	26,422	24,803

Cycle light use is unknown, but cycle casualties occurring during daylight and darkness are shown in the table as follows:

Pedal cycle casualties: by severity of casualty and time of day
Great Britain 1987-91

	1987		1988		1989		1990		1991
	Day	Dark	Day	Dark	Day	Dark	Day	Dark	Day	Dark
Killed	209	71	173	54	226	68	179	77	173	69

Vehicle Registration

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many inquiries have been made to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency by the police service to establish the name and address of the registered keeper of a motor vehicle leading to the detection of a hit-and-run driver.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The police normally obtain names and addresses of the present keepers of vehicles direct from the police national computer, PNC, which contains extracts from the central register maintained by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency. During the past 12 months the police made some 47,000 enquiries of the agency for details of previous keepers not available from the PNC but it is not known how many, if any, of these related to detection of hit-and-run drivers.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current estimate of the effect on the accuracy of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency's register of keepers of the failure to notify a change of ownership; and what research is ongoing to establish an improved method for the recording of ownership or keepership of vehicles.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is estimated that less than 3 per cent. of people acquiring vehicles fail to comply with the legal requirement to notify the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency. When offenders are caught using unlicensed vehicles the agency prosecutes both for the offence of failing to notify acquisition of the vehicle and for evading payment of vehicle excise duty. The police have been asked to consider prosecution in other circumstances. Improved methods of recording vehicle keepership are currently being looked at as part of a study into possible further uses of new technology in the vehicle registration and licensing system.

Cannon Street Railway Accident

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when copies of the report of the Health and Safety Commission on the Cannon street railway accident were (a) made available to the media, with or without an embargo, (b) published by HMSO, (c) placed in the Library and (d) made available in the Vote Office.

Mr. Freeman: The inspector's report was published by HMSO on 2 September. Unembargoed copies were made available to the media and placed in the House Library on the same day. There is no arrangement to place copies in the Vote Office.

Public Transport

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals Her Majesty's Government have for increasing access to public transport for women with young children.

Mr. Freeman: My Department has a long-standing commitment to improve access to public transport for people with mobility problems. This includes very large numbers of women with young children who are dependent on public transport, as well as elderly people and those with disabilities. We work closely with vehicle designers and manufacturers, public transport operators, local authorities and people with mobility problems as consumers, to promote and encourage greater recognition of their needs. One current example is the Department's support for a demonstration project of low-floor buses, which will provide easier access for all people with mobility problems and which will be of particular benefit to those travelling with prams and baby buggies.

Bus Services

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to improve bus services in England.

Mr. Freeman: Last December I announced a package of measures to help promote bus use, including financial support for bus priority measures.

European Airspace

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to avoid congestion in European airspace and to increase capacity.

Mr. Norris: The previous Secretary of State for Transport, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) chaired a meeting of Transport Ministers of the member states of the European civil aviation conference, ECAC, in London on 17 March. They reached agreement on a number of points, in particular to reaffirm the European en-route strategy, which was launched in 1990 to harmonise and integrate the operations of each country's individual air traffic control systems; to extend that strategy to include central and eastern European members of ECAC; to launch a new ECAC airports strategy to increase air traffic management capacity in the vicinity of airports; and to initiate work on investigations of new technologies and their impact on the later stages of the harmonisation and integration programme.

The United Kingdom continues to play a full part in the implementation of this work in co-operation with other bodies, including EUROCONTROL and the EC Commission. A further major European project is the creation by EUROCONTROL of a central flow management unit near Brussels. This will take on the functions of the national flow management units at London and four other European centres, and should bring major benefits to the management of traffic flows in Europe.

In the United Kingdom, the Civil Aviation Authority has embarked on its largest and most ambitious investment programme, totalling some £750 million, to provide the equipment, facilities and systems which will enable the increasing volume of air traffic to be handled. The two most significant projects are the new en-route centre, NERC, and the central control function, CCF. NERC, near Fareham, will provide a significant increase in airspace capacity in England and Wales. CCF is a radical change in the way in which airspace in London and south-east England is managed, and will also notably improve capacity. Additionally, recruitment of air traffic controllers by the CAA has increased from 67 in 1988-89 to a record level of 290 in 1991-92.

Jubilee Line Extension

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the estimated cost at 1992 or other prices of the proposed Jubilee line extension, together with the amount of that sum falling on public expenditure or contributed from other sources under specific conditions, either in respect of an approved scheme, or one approximating most closely to the requirements of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Norris: The current estimated cost of the Jubilee line extension in cash prices is £1,853 million, £1,415 million of this would fall on the public sector and £438 million on the private sector, based on the contributions originally promised. The particulars of those contributions are contained in the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 23 June, to which I refer the hon. Member.

Cargo Flights

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the implications of the El Al flight crash in Amsterdam for the disposition of cargo flights at United Kingdom airports; if he will give consideration to the safety aspects at United Kingdom airports where the flight paths are over densely populated areas; if he will consider recommending increased use of airports where the flightpaths are over sea and countryside, for cargo flights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport has taken advice from the CAA, including the National Air Traffic Services on this important matter.

Cargo flights by United Kingdom airlines are subject to the same airworthiness, maintenance and operational requirements as passenger flights, thus there is no reason to treat them differently from the point of view of the safety of third parties on the ground. Most of the major airports are near large centres of population and some of the flight paths unavoidably pass over built-up areas. The safety implications of the El Al accident for United Kingdom airports have been studied carefully by the National Air Traffic Services. It will maintain its policy of giving the pilot of an aircraft in distress whatever help he requests to effect a safe landing.

ENVIRONMENT

Homelessness

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households were accepted as homeless in each standard economic region, including Greater London, in each year since 1979 to the latest date available.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 17 June, Official Report, column 569.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider how best to help homeless persons who do not qualify for housing benefit because they are not in rented accommodation and cannot afford the deposit and advance rent to enable them to obtain rented accommodation; and if he will discuss with the Housing Corporation whether a starter loan or grant scheme could be devised under its auspices.

Mr. Baldry: Under the Government's rough sleepers initiative, my Department is funding the Notting Hill housing trust to operate a rent deposit fund. Our grant enables NHHT to provide homeless people with the deposits they need to gain access to accommodation in the private rented sector.

This is a 15-month pilot project which is due to finish at the end of June 1993. We will then evaluate the results.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless people were recorded in (a) 1990 and (b) 1979 by English local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: The available information represents the numbers of homeless households for whom local authorities in England accepted responsibility for securing permanent accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and the Housing Act 1985.

The information is as follows:

Year	Households accepted as homeless

A new reporting system was introduced for non-metropolitan districts from the fourth quarter 1980 and for the other authorities from the third quarter of 1982. Figures are therefore not strictly comparable over the whole period.

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department plans to distinguish between genuine pregnancies and pregnancies conceived purely for purposes of gaining access to priority housing waiting lists.

Mr. Baldry: The homelessness legislation, which can confer priority need for accommodation on pregnant women, makes no such distinction.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Redwood: All of my staff with responsibility for particular aspects of policy have the task of seeking opportunities for deregulation. It is not practicable to identify the separate financial and staff provision. I have asked them to identify licences for abolition, and develop less bureaucratic procedures for grants and regulatory action.

Recycled Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce a duty of care for recycled materials.

Mr. Maclean: The duty of care introduced on 1 April under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 covers all controlled waste, including material intended for recycling.

Housing Improvement Grants

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority area in England and Wales the number of mandatory housing improvement grants approved and granted in each year since 1987; and if he will indicate the percentage in respect of housing stock in the private sector.

Mr. Baldry: Two grant systems have been in operation during this period. The first, under the Housing Act 1985, ended in March 1990, although payments continue for grants approved before that date. The second, under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, largely came into force from July 1990 in England and Wales.

Under the earlier system, mandatory grants were given to meet the cost of improving homes by putting in missing standard amenities such as baths, hot and cold water supplies and inside WCs. Discretionary grants were made towards the costs of improving homes to a good standard or to provide additional housing through conversions. In effect all intermediate grants and some special and repair grants were mandatory.

The current system also involves different types of grant. The mandatory elements are renovation grant for repairs required to bring a property up to the fitness standard; disabled facilities grant for essential works to make a dwelling more suitable for occupation by a disabled person; and both the houses in multiple occupation (HMO) grant and the common parts grant where a statutory repairs notice has been served. Grants are otherwise discretionary. All renovation, common parts and HMO grants are payable solely to the private sector.

Tables have been deposited in the Library showing the numbers of mandatory grants paid under the old system from 1987 to 1989. They also show for intermediate grants only the amounts paid to the private sector; a similar breakdown is not available for special or repair grants.

Total payments of intermediate, special and repair grants in 1990 and 1991 are shown in table 4 of "Local Housing Statistics" issue No. 101, a copy of which is in the Library. Information about the mandatory component of special and repair grants is not available for this period nor can payments of intermediate grants to the private sector be separately identified.

There is no information available about grant approvals under the earlier system.

Mandatory grants paid under the new system are also shown in table 4 of "Local Housing Statistics". Local authority level information about grants approved and of payments of disabled facilities grant to the private sector are not published, and tables have been deposited in the Library showing the available information.

The answer covers English local authorities as the Department is responsible for housing policy only in England.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority area in England and Wales the number of mandatory housing improvement grants approved but not yet granted; and what the cost to each local authority of meeting those grants will be.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not collect this data directly. However information is collected on both approvals and grants paid under the improvement grant system established by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, and this question can be answered for some local authorities by comparing the cumulative totals of the grants they have approved with grants paid.

A table prepared on this basis, covering those authorities which have provided the Department with complete information about their grant approvals and payments for the whole period from the start of the scheme in July 1990 to end-June 1992, has been deposited in the Library. The table covers mandatory renovation, houses in multiple occupation, common parts and disabled facilities grants. It relates to English local authorities as the Department is responsible for housing policy only in England.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the need to review the standard spending assessment criteria for north-east Lancashire to reflect the demand for mandatory housing improvemment grants.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have had a number of representations from local authorities in the north-east Lancashire area concerning the resources available to meet demand for mandatory housing improvement grants. None of these, however, was specifically concerned with standard spending assessments.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority area in England and Wales the percentage of their annual expenditure relating to the payment of mandatory housing improvements grants for each year since 1987.

Mr. Baldry: I have arranged for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has given to local authorities in England and Wales about meeting the demand for mandatory housing improvement grants; and what information he has on the number of authorities that are reducing non-statutory provision of services in order to meet that demand.

Mr. Baldry: Advice was issued to all local housing authorities in England in the Department's Circular 12/90 about the funding arrangements for house renovation grants and the flexibility these provide to help authorities to meet the demand for mandatory grants. It is for authorities to decide the balance between their statutory and non-statutory expenditure within the total resources available to them. Information on this is not systematically collected by the Department. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is responsible for giving advice to local authorities in Wales.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority area in England and Wales the number of mandatory housing improvement grant applications awaiting approval.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not available in the Department.

City Challenge Bids

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish (a) the criteria used to decide which of the city challenge bids were to be supported and which rejected and (b) the technical assessments made on each of the city challenge bids.

Mr. Robin Squire: The second round of city challenge, for which bids were required by 22 April, was open to all 57 urban priority areas. Fifty-four bids were received and each was assessed against the aims and criteria set out in the "City Challenge Bidding Guidance 1993-94", which was published in February 1992. A copy of the guidance is in the Library of the House. The assessment process included consideration of the written bids and analysis of projected outputs involving all the relevant Government Departments, regional presentations to officials and meetings with Ministers.

Hedgerows

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the best estimates of the amount of loss of hedgerows in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and what proportion of the total amount of hedgerow the same represent.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not available in this form. The survey carried out by the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology as part of my Department's countryside survey 1990 contains the most up to date figures. These indicate that between 1984 and 1990 there was a net loss of some 121,000 km—around 76,000 miles—of hedgerows in Great Britain, making up 22 per cent. of the total hedgerow stock. This includes losses due to poor management as well as deliberate removal. There are no figures currently available for Northern Ireland.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration the EC Environment Council has given to the proposal drafted by the European Commission concerning the effect of the Swedish Government's proposed ban on the use of products containing CFCs and HCFCs on Sweden's plans to join the European Community.

Mr. Maclean: None.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent meeting of the Paris convention on marine pollution; and if he will arrange for the United Kingdom papers presented to the meeting to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Maclean: The Commission established by the Convention for the Prevention of Marine Pollution from Land-Based Sources (the Paris Convention) held its annual meeting at official level in Paris on 15, 16 and 19 September, and its annual joint meeting with the Commission established by the Convention for the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping from Ships and Aircraft (the Oslo Convention) on 17 to 19 September. The progress of work by the Paris Commission was reviewed and the final texts of a number of decisions and recommendations were established. I am placing in the Library of the House copies of the papers submitted by the United Kingdom to those meetings.

A joint meeting of the Oslo and Paris commissions at ministerial level was also held in Paris on 21 and 22 September. I represented the United Kingdom. At this meeting we agreed a new Convention for the Protection of the Marine Environment of the North east Atlantic. I welcome the co-operation and commitment of all the constracting parties which have allowed us to achieve an agreement which establishes an effective framework for future protection of the marine environment from all kinds of pollution. We also adopted a declaration setting out the aims we shall all pursue under the convention and an action plan for protecting our seas into the next century.

In addition we adopted the decisions and recommendations whose texts had been prepared by the official meetings the previous week. The United Kingdom did not present any papers to this meeting.

Tameside Unitary Development Plan

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to set up a public inquiry into the Tameside unitary development plan.

Mr. Baldry: Tameside metropolitan borough council will, in due course, put their unitary development plan on deposit and invite formal representations. If objections are made at this time the council will arrange an inquiry and the Secretary of State will be asked to appoint an inspector.

Opencast Mining (Asthma)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider the report by J M F Temple and A M Sykes on asthma and opencast mining in the British Medical Journal of 15 August 1992 before completing his review of MPG3.

Mr. Baldry: My Department will take into account all representations received that are material to revising the guidelines.

Household Statistics

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of English households in 1991 (a) lacked or shared a bath or shower, (b) had no inside wc, (c) had no central heating or (d) lived in a density of more than one per room.

Mr. Baldry: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) has to date published only a selection of 1991 census results in the county monitor series (CEN 91 CM).

The England percentages given are provisional as they are derived directly from the rounded statistics in those monitors. National level results will be released by OPCS in November 1992 and more detailed results in county reports later this year and in 1993.

	Household percent
a) + b) lacking/sharing a bath/shower and/or an inside wc	1·7
c) lacking central heating	18·5
d) living in a density of more than one per room	2·1

European Inspectors

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made with the concept of an inspectorate of European inspectors.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom put a proposal for such an inspectorate to the Environment Council last December. It has attracted support from several quarters including a number of member states. The European Commission is considering whether to make a formal proposal; we shall continue to encourage them to do so.

Waste Water Directive

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the definition of sensitive waters to be applied in compliance with the European Community municipal waste water directive.

Mr. Maclean: A consultation paper on the criteria for identifying sensitive areas and less sensitive areas under the Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive (UWWTD) and polluted waters under the Nitrates Directive was issued in March this year. We plan to publish the decisions made following consideration of responses in the autumn as part of a second consultation paper. This second paper will make proposals on the basis for identifying sensitive areas (UWWTD) and designating vulnerable zones (Nitrates Directive).

Coastal Superquarries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy towards the creation of coastal superquarries.

Mr. Baldry: My Department considers that coastal superquarries may be able to make a useful contribution to future aggregate requirements in England. Their potential will be taken into account in the current review of "Mineral Planning Guidance Note 6" on the provision for aggregates in England and Wales. Individual applications will of course be considered on their own merits, having full regard to all the environmental implications.

THORP Plant (Discharges)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish, and in what form, the decisions or authorisation of discharges from the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield, including any authorisation for Krypton 85; when such decisions will be made public; and whether he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Maclean: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will shortly issue draft authorisations relating to the BNFL site at Sellafield, including the thermal oxide reprocessing plant (THORP) and Krypton 85 emissions, providing in accordance with normal practice the opportunity for local authorities, public bodies and members of the public to comment. Full consideration will be given to views that are expressed.

I will arrange for copies of the draft authorisations, when issued, to be placed in the Library.

Orimulsion

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to set efficiency standards of between 95 and 100 per cent. efficiency for all electrostatic precipitators which will be operated by the power generators in conjunction with the burning of orimulsion; and if he will ensure that no power station can commence with the burning of orimulsion until such efficiency standards are fully met.

Mr. Maclean: The burning of orimulsion or other fuels at a power station requires an authorisation from HMIP. They set conditions and standards consistent with the use of the best available techniques not entailing excessive cost to prevent or minimise pollution. These normally include limits on the concentration of particulate matter released, as this provides effective protection of the local environment and is easily checked. Efficiency standards for arrestment equipment may also be included, particularly if the process generates a significant amount of particulate matter.

I therefore do not propose to set efficiency standards for electrostatic precipitators. No power station will be authorised unless the enforcing authority considers that it will be able to comply with the conditions which would be included in the authorisation.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made by his Department on the levels of vanadium and nickel to be released into the atmosphere from the proposed burning of orimulsion at the Pembroke power station.

Mr. Maclean: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) is currently considering the application from National Power to burn orimulsion at Pembroke power station. HMIP has a duty to consider fully all available facts in coming to a decision on the determination of an application. In determining the application, an assessment of harm, and the question of limits and consents for releases, including vanadium and nickel, to all media are all being studied by HMIP, as are the techniques and cost implications for means of prevention.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to announce its decision on the National Power application to burn orimulsion at Padiham power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: HMIP has agreed to a request from National Power for an extension of the determination period so that they may present further information to assist its application. In agreeing to this extension, HMIP has indicated to National Power that on the information presented so far it does not believe that the burning of orimulsion at Padiham power station would be justified without further measures to protect the environment.

Toxic Waste Incinerator, Howdon

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be in a position to announce his decision on the application to build a toxic waste incinerator at Howdon.

Mr. Maclean: The decision will be announced shortly.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions his Department has had with its French and German counterparts concerning (a) the import of Australian origin PCB toxic waste into the European Community in August and (b) the transfrontier trade in hazardous waste between member states of the European Community.

Mr. Maclean: The transfrontier movement of hazardous wastes, including movements within the Community, is being discussed during the negotiations on the draft EC Waste Shipments Regulation. There have been no discussions with our Community partners about Australian PCB wastes.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the date of publication of his Department's guidance to the regulatory authorities on the nature of the completion certificate that will be issued to the owner of landfill sites.

Mr. Maclean: The Department has not yet published this guidance. We shall shortly be issuing a draft of advice on the subject of how surrender of licences should be judged, and we will be inviting comments on that draft.

Oxleas Wood

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last visited Oxleas wood, south-east London; when he last had communication with the European Commission regarding the east London river crossing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: English Nature, my right hon. Friend's advisor on matters relating to sites of special scientific interest, has visited Oxleas wood on several occasions, most recently on 16 July 1992.

There have been a number of exchanges between the Government and the Commission on the East London river crossing in connection with the application of the EIA directive, 85/337 EEC. In July 1992 the Commission announced its decision to issue a reasoned opinion under article 169 of the treaty of Rome. This has not yet been received.

Drinking Water Inspectorate

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to enhance the independence of the drinking water inspectorate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend on 15 July 1992 to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones), Official Report, column 858.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses in the network installer area including the Birmingham, Northfield constituency have been improved under the home energy efficiency scheme since its inception in 1991.

Mr. Maclean: Within the network installer area which contains the hon. Member's constituency, 1,740 homes have benefited from HEES grant since 1 January 1991.

Business Rates

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications have been made for relief of hardship under section 49 of the Local Government and Finance Act 1988 from small businesses for each year since the introduction of the uniform business rate.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on the number of applications for relief which have been received by local authorities is not available. In 1990-91, 13 authorities granted hardship relief totalling £23,582. Of the 346 authorities which have so far submitted returns for 1991-92, 47 have granted relief totalling £166,501.

Housing Corporation

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy not to cut the Housing Corporation's £2 billion projected approved development programme.

Mr. Baldry: The Government's public expenditure plans will be announced by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his autumn statement.

Special Housing

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the level of development of special housing units for the elderly and disabled from 1980 to 1992.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates of starts and completions of specialised housing units for the elderly and disabled in England are shown in the publication "Housing and Construction Statistics".

Figures for 1980 to 1990 are in table 6.7 of "Housing and Construction Statistics, Great Britain—1980-1990" and figures for 1991 and the first six months of 1992 are in table 1.5 of "Housing and Construction Statistics, Great Britain June Quarter 1992"—issue 50.

Copies of all these publications are in the Library.

Housing Associations

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how rents are set by housing associations in relation to average income, by region.

Mr. Baldry: For tenants of registered housing associations whose tenancies commenced after 15 January 1989, rents are set by individual housing associations in accordance with their overall rent policy. In setting rents for property provided with the help of public subsidy, associations must have regard to the tenants' guarantee, issued by the Housing Corporation, which requires them to set rents within the reach of those on low incomes, whether or not they are in receipt of housing benefit.

For tenants of registered housing associations whose tenancy began before 15 January 1989 rents are set by the rent officer under the Rent Act 1977. He or she will take into account the age, character, locality and state of repair of dwelling whilst disregarding any shortage of similar accommodation in the area. Rent officers must disregard the personal circumstances—including incomes—of an individual.

Peat Bogs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to save peat bogs from destruction and to treat the threat as a national heritage crisis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government fully recognise the need for conserving peat bogs which are of nature conservation importance and are actively taking steps to resolve conflicts between peat extraction and nature conservation. As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary announced on 7 July 1992 in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) Official Report column 158, my Department has set up a working group to advise on peat extraction and related matters. We have also commissioned research to prepare guidance on the rehabilitation of peatlands affected by peat extraction and, supported a number of initiatives to safeguard key bogs in England and Wales from further peat extraction.

Council Tax

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had about council tax reductions for blind people; what replies he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has received three letters about council tax reductions for blind people. One of these was from the right hon. Gentleman. A copy of my right hon. Friend's reply of 2 October is being sent to all local authorities. I will also arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

RECHAR

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the status of Nottinghamshire bids for RECHAR moneys from the EC currently blocked by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Department is not blocking bids for RECHAR moneys in Nottinghamshire. The East

Midlands RECHAR programme committee has recently approved 16 projects which will attract grant worth approximately £2 million.

Groundwater Levels

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what consultations he has had with the National Rivers Authority, the local authority associations and the water companies concerning statutory responsibility for monitoring and regulating rising and falling levels of groundwater underneath urban areas of England and Wales;

(2) what representations he has had concerning responsibility for monitoring and regulating changes in groundwater level.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has regular contact with the National Rivers Authority (NRA) which, under the Water Resources Act 1991, has responsibilities for the general management of water resources in England and Wales. It monitors the quality and levels of groundwater, and regulates abstraction through licences. We receive representations about groundwater matters from time to time.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken by his Department in support of European Community policy on groundwater protection with particular regard to (a) education and training schemes and (b) improvement in public awareness.

Mr. Maclean: Following the EC ministerial declaration on groundwater in the Hague last year, continued work in England and Wales is being undertaken by the National Rivers Authority. The NRA published a consultation paper in November 1991 setting out proposals for the protection of groundwater, which has increased public awareness of groundwater.

Second London Forum

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received since his announcement of 14 July of the establishment of a second London forum; by what means he expects the knowledge and opinion of London borough councils, all London statutory bodies and agencies, and London civic and amenity organisations will be represented on his proposed body; and if he will reconsider its proposed title.

Sir George Young: We have received a number of representations about our proposals for the London Forum. They include some from civic and amenity societies about the proposed name, and we have undertaken to consider this issue further. The forum will need to establish close working links with other organisations in London in the private, public and voluntary sectors, and we have proposed a formal consultative group to facilitate this process.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the present position of the application by UK Nirex Ltd. to seek permission to (a) sink bore holes and (b) construct an underground rock research laboratory, in connection with plans to assess the suitability of the area adjoining Sellafield for a radioactive waste repository.

Mr. Maclean: Following UK Nirex's appeal against the Lake District Special Planning Board's refusal to allow its application for planning permission to drill boreholes 8 and 9 in the national park, and Cumbria county council's refusal of planning permission to drill borehole 11 outside the national park, a public inquiry is due to start on 24 November. I understand that the Lake District Special Planning Board has also refused permission to drill borehole 9A in the national park and that Cumbria county council has not yet reached a decision on Nirex's application to drill borehole 13. No application to construct an underground rock research laboratory has been made by Nirex.

Environment Know-How Fund

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list and give full details of projects agreed under the environment know-how fund announced in June 1991.

Mr. Maclean: The environmental know-how fund, which is a dedicated section of the know-how fund for central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, is going well. Some £315,000 has now been spent or committed to over 25 projects, with a further £700,000 or so in the pipeline. Other western Governments are using the know-how fund as a model for their own.

A list of the activities approved since April 1992 under the environmental know-how fund is currently being compiled and I will write to the hon. Member.

Ozone-destroying Chemicals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new measures he intends to introduce to reduce the use of ozone-destroying chemicals.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom, together with the EC, will be pressing for the phase out dates in the Montreal protocol for the production and consumption of ozone-depleting substances to be brought forward to 1 January 1996 at the latest. We will also be pressing for strict controls on HCFCs to be included in the revised protocol and for methyl bromide to be made a controlled substance. The United Kingdom is also seeking agreement, within the EC, to new phase out schedules for ozone depleting chemicals, which will be included in a revised EC regulation.

Nottingham City Council

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much capital receipts from council house sales and so on are currently held and unable to be spent by Nottingham city council due to current restrictions; and what were the figures for each of the years since the restrictions were introduced.

Mr. Robin Squire: Separate figures for set aside capital receipts are not held centrally. Such receipts are included within an authority's provision for credit liabilities. That provision is available for repaying debt and meeting payments under credit arrangements. The provision for credit liabilities, and the outstanding debt, reported by Nottingham city council were as follows:

	Provision for Credit Liabilities (£ million)	Outstanding Debt (£ million)
1 April 1990	41	[1]—
1 April 1991	52	355
1 April 1992	61	356

[1] Not available.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will lift restrictions on Nottingham city council to allow it to spend the capital receipts which it currently holds.

Mr. Robin Squire: Local authorities may currently spend 25 per cent. of their capital receipts from the sale of council houses and 50 per cent. of most other receipts. The balance may be used to meet credit liabilities. If authorities were allowed to spend a larger proportion of their receipts, the total of spending by the public sector and the public sector borrowing requirement would be increased. We therefore have no plans to change these arrangements.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the second report from the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment; and if he will make a statement on progress made to date in implementing the actions Her Majesty's Government agreed to undertake arising from recommendations made in the first Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment report.

Mr. Eggar: The Government received the second report of the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment (ACBE) in July and published it together with the Government's response on 22 September. A separate report on progress in implementing the recommendations of ACBE's first report was published the same day. I am sending the hon. Member a copy of both publications, which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Environmental Schemes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the proportion of awards to applications made by industries, respectively, to the (a) environmental management options scheme, (b) environmental technology innovations scheme and (c) Euroenviron scheme, as managed by his Department; and if he will indicate for each scheme the average lead time, respectively, between application and award or notification of rejection.

Mr. Eggar: The Department's three environmental technology support schemes all entail a two stage application process. The figures given below therefore indicate the proportion of applications rejected at each stage. The average lead times quoted include the time taken to find project partners and the time taken by applicants to submit Stage 2 applications and provide information needed to enable the appraisal to take place, as well as the time taken to undertake technical and financial appraisals by DTI and the scheme consultants. The environmental technology innovation scheme (ETIS) is jointly administered by DTI and DoE and figures for applications referred to DoE are also included. The information requested is as follows:

Departmental Environmental Management Options Scheme (Demos)

Applications approved

Proportion of stage 1 applications invited to stage 2:	36 per cent.
Of these, proportion as yet received by DTI:	30 per cent.
Stage 2 applications approved:	19 per cent.

Average lead times

Stage 1 application to final approval:	11 months
Rejected at stage 1:	9 weeks
Rejected at stage 2:	7 months

Environmental Technology Innovation Scheme (ETIS)

DTI

Applications approved

Proportion of Stage 1 applications invited to Stage 2:	19 per cent.
Of these, proportion as yet received by DTI:	35 per cent.
Stage 2 applications approved:	38 per cent.

Average lead times

Stage 1 application to final approval:	10 months
Rejected at stage 1:	7 weeks
Rejected at stage 2:	5 months

DoE

Applications approved

Proportion of stage 1 applications invited to stage 2:	16 per cent.
Of these, proportion as yet received by DoE:	20 per cent.
Proportion of stage 2 applications approved:	86 per cent.

Average lead times

Stage 1 application to final approval:	10 months
Rejected at stage 2:	None

Note: At stage 1, a joint decision is taken as to which Department will deal with the application. Broadly speaking, DoE deal with applications which are standards related and DTI with the rest.

Euroenviron

Applications approved

Proportion of stage 1 applications invited to stage 2:	100 per cent.
Of these, proportion as yet received by DTI:	17 per cent.
Proportion of stage 2 applications approved:	75 per cent.

Note: There are a number of applications in the pipeline which may yet proceed to stage 2.

Average lead times

From stage 1 to final approval:	9 months
Rejected at stage 1:	None rejected
Rejected at stage 2:	None

Note: If applicants invited to stage 2 do not proceed any further with their application after 12 months, they are notified that no further action will be taken until such time as they decide to resurrect their project proposal.

Cleaner Technology Database

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for establishing a clearing house database of information on cleaner technology.

Mr. Eggar: My Department intends to support the establishment of a centre to provide information and advice on cleaner technology. A feasibility study carried out this year showed a demand for it and work is currently in hand to determine the services to be offered and the mechanisms of operation.

Industrial Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many copies of his new departmental publication "Cutting your Losses" on industrial waste minimisation have been printed; to whom they have been distributed or made available; and at what total cost to date.

Mr. Eggar: A total of 30,000 copies of "Cutting Your Losses 2" have been printed.

They have been distributed or made available to a wide range of companies and organisations across the United Kingdom. These include targeted companies in the waste producing and waste management industries and in potentially highly polluting sectors of industry, trade associations and chambers of commerce, local authorities and waste disposal authorities, national business organisations, environmental voluntary organisations, technological institutions and research establishments, DTI regional offices, DoE and other Government Departments. In addition many companies and individuals requesting the booklet have received copies on an ad hoc basis.

The total cost to date of producing and distributing the publication is £87,887.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what commitments were made by the United Kingdom to provide financial and technical aid to the nuclear industries of eastern European countries during the meeting of OECD member states in Brussels held in mid-September.

Mr. Eggar: The meeting of the G24 nuclear safety working group on 14 and 15 September was held to develop further the arrangements for the coordination of nuclear safety assistance to the countries of eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union and not for the purpose of making additional commitments of assistance. The United Kingdom will be playing an important part in the provision of such assistance both bilaterally and through the European Community's PHARE and TACIS programmes.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many reportable incidents at the B205 reprocessing plant at Sellafield have been brought to the attention of his Department and predecessor departments with responsibility for British Nuclear Fuels, since the system of reporting radiological incidents was established.

Mr. Eggar: The arrangements for reporting nuclear incidents at civil nuclear installations to my Department and its precursor were most recently revised in 1987. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to a question from the then Member for Sherwood, Mr. Stewart, Official Report, 30 April 1987, c. 203-4.

Since April 1987 there have been four "formally reportable" incidents involving Building B205. These occurred in 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1992. Details have been contained in weekly site newsletters which have been made available to the Library of the House.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what communications his Department has received in regard to the environmental safety issues posed by the movement of plutonium since 10 August.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has received a number of such communications. The carriage of plutonium is only allowed subject to compliance with stringent international standards. Appropriate measures are taken to ensure the security of these movements.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Responsibility for identifying and exploiting the potential for deregulation is shared by Ministers and by all those advising Ministers on the formulation, implementation and enforcement of regulations. DTI has a departmental deregulation unit which is responsible to me for promoting progress within DTI under the Government's deregulation initiative. For the current financial year, the unit's running costs are approximately £100,000. The central deregulation unit is also located in my Department. It is responsible for driving forward the Deregulation Initiative across the whole of Whitehall generally by assisting all departmental deregulation units. The aim of the deregulation initiative is to reduce significantly administrative and regulatory burdens on business. The initiative has three main objectives: better existing regulation, by cutting unnecessary burdens on business and reducing compliance and enforcement costs; effective new regulation, by ensuring that potential costs and the views of business are accounted for in framing and implementing new regulation; and greater official awareness of the views and needs of business.

Secondments

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the number of civil servants seconded from his Department to the private sector in each year since 11 June 1987 and the number of those from the private sector seconded to his Department in each year since 1987.

Mr. Eggar: The number of DTI staff on secondment to the private sector in each year since 11 June 1987 and the number of those from the private sector on secondment to DTI over the same period were as follows:

1987	35	26
1988	37	28
1989	44	49
1990	44	70

Privatisation

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list in respect of each privatisation since 1979 within his Department and the Department of Energy (a) the loss or profit of each company in the five years prior to privatisation and (b) the grants and loans made to the companies over the same period.

Mr. Eggar: The information cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost. Such information as is readily available on the finances of privatised bodies when they were in the public sector can be found in the following published sources:

For the years up to and including 1989: Parts 2 of the annual volume "The Government's Expenditure Plans".

For 1990 and 1991: the annual Statistical Supplement to the Autumn Statement.

These were published by HMSO in the Command series and are available in the House of Commons Library.

Car Industry Exhibition

Mr. Mills: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the car and car component industry to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall during the week starting 7 December.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes, I look forward to opening the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall on 7 December 1992 in celebration of their 90th anniversary.

Mersey Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has received concerning the use of the non-fossil fuel levy and the Mersey barrage project and funding proposals for it;

(2) if he will make a statement on the funding of the Mersey barrage project; what representations he has received concerning funding instruments for the project; what proposals he has for a government contribution towards the cost of final design studios; and what consultations he has had with the private sector shareholders in the Mersey Barrage Company, shipping navigation and nature conservation interests concerning outstanding objections.

Mr. Eggar: Results of the work undertaken to date on the Mersey barrage, indicate that the construction of a tidal energy barrage across the river Mersey could generate electricity at 8·2 p/kWh (8 per cent. discount rate, 1991 prices). It now seems very unlikely that these costs could be substantially reduced by further work.

The financing plan developed by the Mersey Barrage Company (MBC) is detailed in its phase III report. This envisages a 25-year contract with a purchase price of 6·75p/kWh as part of the a future round under the non-fossil fuel obligation. The plan assumes that the equivalent of 2p/kWh of this, to be discounted at zero per cent. in real terms, would be paid as advance payments during construction. This advance payment equates to a £700 million contribution towards the barrage's estimated construction costs of around £1 billion. The remaining 4·75p/kWh would be paid over the first 25 years of the barrage's operation.

My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I met representatives of the MBC, including shareholders, to discuss possible ways forward for further studies into the proposed Mersey barrage, last July. We discussed suggestions by the MBC for a fourth stage of studies. It is estimated that these would cost £12 million, and would take the barrage up to the stage of requiring parliamentary approval for construction, subject to the availability of an appropriate funding mechanism.

As well as electricity generation, a Mersey barrage has a number of non energy costs and benefits, such as improved leisure facilities and an effect on local wildlife and shipping, that need to be considered. The most recent studies of the barrage were aimed at reducing the uncertainty associated with these issues, and I was aware of the findings of the work. In coming to a decision on further funding for the barrage there was a need to weigh the cost to the electricity consumer of financing the barrage, with consideration of the other costs and benefits of the barrage. On balance my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I told the MBC that we could not justify the expenditure of public money for the studies they suggested.

We await the final report of the most recent studies into the proposed barrage, and will, of course, consider any further proposals from the MBC.

European Energy Chapter

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date the basic protocol of the European energy chapter was signed on behalf of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The basic agreement of the European energy chapter is currently under negotiation.

Companies House

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the terms of reference, method of appointment and cost of the consultancy study into the future operation and role of Companies house.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Terms of reference for the consultancy study on the future operation and role of Companies house were contained in a Department of Trade and Industry press notice issued on 14 October. Consultants for this work were engaged using the Department's normal competitive tendering procedures, under which consultancy costs remain commercially confidential.

Research and Technology

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much funding is currently allocated by his Department towards long-term research programmes for research and technology organisations; and if he will list the research and technology organisations currently given funding for such research.

Mr. Leigh: The funding currently committed for research programmes at research and technology organisations is £29 million during the current year and the following two years. The organisations currently receiving support for their research programmes are shown on the attached list.

Research and Technology Organisations currently receiving DTI funding:

AMTRI: Advanced Manufacturing Technology Research Institute
BHRA: British Hydromechanics Research Association
BCRA: British Ceramic Research Association
BCIRA: British Cast Iron Research Association
BGIRA: British Glass Industry Research Association
BLC: British Leather Confederation
BMT: British Maritime Technology
BTTG: British Textile Technology Group
BNF Metals Technology Centre
CATRA: Cutlery & Allied Trades Association
Contract Flooring Association
ERA Technology Ltd.
FCRA: Fabric Care Research Association
Fulmer Materials Technology
FIRA: Furniture Industry Research Association
MIRA: The Motor Industry Research Association
NCC: National Computing Centre
PERA: Production Engineering Research Association
PIRA: Paper, Printing & Packaging Research Association
PRA: The Paint Research Association
Rapra Technology Ltd.
Ricardo Consulting Engineers Ltd.
SATRA Footwear Technology Centre
SCRATA: Steel Castings Research & Trade Association
SIRA Ltd.
SRAMA: Spring Research & Manufacturers Association
TWI: The Welding Institute
TRADA: Timber Research and Development Association

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to establish an Industrial Research and Technology Council.

Mr. Leigh: No plans exist to establish such a council.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will make it his policy to require Faraday centres to operate as a network, to include other research and technology organisations and to provide a full service of assistance with innovation;

(2) what steps are being undertaken by his Department to enhance the status, role and capability of intermediate organisations engaged in technology development and transfer.

Mr. Leigh: My Department is currently consulting widely on the needs of industry which could be met by intermediate organisations and on what improvements, if any, are necessary to enhance their present capabilities. The Faraday proposals, presented to Government by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales's working group on innovation, and their possible networking are being considered as part of this process.

A pilot programme has already been initiated to test the feasibility of enhancing the training and technology transfer role of five intermediate organisations via the training of postgraduate students. I refer the right hon. Gentleman to my Department's press release of 4 June 1992 (P/92/346).

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the work that his information unit has commissioned for Segal Quince Wickstead on the difficulties technologists have in convincing providers of finance of the merits of their case; and what action he is taking to encourage the development within banks of the expertise needed to recognise the soundness of technological proposals.

Mr. Leigh: Following discussions about support for innovative firms between the then Secretary of State and the clearing banks, the DTI innovation unit commissioned, in April 1992, a market assessment study of smaller firms' needs for better information about lending. The consultants, Segal Quince Wickstead, reported in August 1992 that whilst there is already a considerable amount of helpful information and advice already available in the market, little is directed towards the specific requirements of technology-based firms.

The Segal Quince Wickstead report has been circulated to about 30 key providers of capital and advice to small firms for their comments which are presently being received. When these have been analysed, my Department will discuss the conclusions with a consortium of banks and venture capital sources to determine what further action might be taken, hopefully on a joint basis.

My Department's innovation unit, in common with other parts of the Department such as small firms division and the regional offices, maintains a constant dialogue with providers of capital for small firms. The Department has supplied speakers for training courses organised internally by banks for their own staff and also to a wide range of other seminars and events concerned with improving understanding of this important topic.

Innovation and Manufacturing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what efforts are being undertaken by his Department to strengthen the ties between innovation and manufacturing in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh: DTI continues to encourage innovation in manufacturing industry through regional and development grant schemes, technology transfer and best practice awareness programmes and through the work of its innovation unit. The unit works closely with industry to educate the financial and business community about the importance nationally of innovation. The president's recent reorganisation of the Department has created sectoral divisions which, through an active dialogue with companies, will be better placed to champion the needs of industry throughout Government. This joint approach with industry is geared to improve United Kingdom firms' competitiveness, both nationally and internationally.

Civil Research and Development

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures are currently undertaken to encourage increased expenditure by United Kingdom companies on civil research and development.

Mr. Leigh: The Government seek to encourage companies to invest more in research and development by creating the right economic climate, for example, by reducing the tax burden on business. The main rate of corporation tax, at 33 per cent. is now the lowest in any G7 or EC country. In addition, the Government provide some £300 million per annum to United Kingdom companies through a variety of schemes designed to stimulate additional expenditure on research and development. The Government also seek to educate the financial community about the importance of research and development through, for example, the work of the DTI's innovation unit.

Airports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the cross-subsidies that Stansted airport receives from Heathrow and Gatwick airports and the effect on other regional airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to refer this question to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. Under the Airports Act 1986 the economic regulation of airports is a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority. The authority has discretionary powers to prevent subsidies which might harm other airports.

Postal Services

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade over what parts of the United Kingdom and over approximately what proportion of the area of the United Kingdom the delivery of letters and parcels is still combined at the point of final delivery.

Mr. Leigh: The information is not readily available to answer the hon. Member's question precisely. In major conurbations most, if not all, deliveries are exclusively letter or parcel. Parcel Force currently chooses to contract out parcel delivery to Royal Mail where this makes economic sense. The combined service mainly occurs in predominantly rural areas of the United Kingdom and, despite covering fairly large areas of the country, only relates to a very low population density.

Assisted Area Status

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning assisted area status for the boroughs of Rossendale and Blackburn.

Mr. Sainsbury: My noble Friend Baroness Denton met a deputation of Members of Parliament and local government officials on 5 October. Written representations which include Rossendale and/or Blackburn have been received from the following organisations:

Lancashire county council;
Blackburn borough council;
Hyndburn and Rossendale borough councils (for Accrington and Rossendale travel-to-work area);
Rossendale borough council;
A consortium of East Lancashire boroughs (Blackburn, Burnley, Pendle, Hyndburn, Ribble Valley, and Rossendale).

In addition, numerous letters of support from local businesses were included with the submissions from Blackburn, Hyndburn and Rossendale.

Footwear

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he has now received from the European Commission an analysis of the economic case for the proposal to impose quantitative restrictions on imports of Chinese footwear;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the European Commission's proposal to impose quantitative restrictions on imports of Chinese footwear; and what has been the balance of those representations between support for and opposition to the proposal.

Mr. Needham: I have received many representations about the Commission's proposal divided broadly between footwear manufacturers who, with the exception of the largest United Kingdom producer, supported it and consumer, retail and importing interests who opposed it. I have recently written to all hon. Members who have expressed an interest in the matter to explain why, in the light of these representations and of the Commission's further economic analysis presented in late July, the Government have decided to oppose the proposal. A copy of my letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

Cloth Imports

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning the import of cloth treated with pentachlorophenol into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: We have received a number of letters calling for a ban on imports of pentachlorophenol-treated cloth and for a relaxation of effluent emission standards. We do not regard an import ban as practicable or consistent with the polluter-pays principle. Effluent emission standards are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Trade Statistics

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of the United Kingdom's trade in each of the past five years was in (1) US dollars, (2) sterling, (3) ECUs, (4) French francs, (5) German marks, (6) Danish kroner, (7) Irish punts, (8) Italian lire, (9) Greek drachmas, (10) Dutch guilders, (11) Spanish pesetas, (12) Belgian francs and (13) Portuguese escudos.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available. For purposes of official statistics all United Kingdom trade is valued in sterling.

Wind Power

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's assessment of the proportion of United Kingdom energy requirements that could be supplied by wind power; and what action is being taken by the Government to make maximum use of this energy source.

Mr. Eggar: The Government is encouraging the exploitation of the potential for wind energy in the United Kingdom consistent with economic and environmental constraints, through measures including a comprehensive programme of research, development and demonstration and the orders under the non-fossil fuel obligation. The contribution from wind power is subject to many uncertainties including future fuel prices. My Department has estimated it could be equivalent to up to 10 per cent. of current electricity consumption by 2025.

TRANSPORT

Motorways (Toilets)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new initiatives he intends to introduce to increase the number of toilets on motorways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We announced on 6 August a substantial deregulation in the provision of motorway service areas—MSAs. This followed on from the commitment we gave in the citizens charter for more MSAs more quickly. In future MSAs may be more frequent—every 15 miles instead of around 30 miles; and the private sector, not the Department of Transport, will take the initiative in finding and acquiring sites and obtaining planning permission for the development of MSAs. We believe that the surest solution is to free the market to provide.

British Rail Provincial Business

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the publication of British Rail's final response to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the provincial business sector.

Mr. Freeman: I have placed a copy of British Rail's response in the Library of the House. BR accepted all 41 recommendations that were addressed to it. Many have already been fully implemented, and BR has set out the action that it is taking, or intends to take, to implement the remainder. One recommendation, concerning the role of local authorities in supporting rail services, and the scope for creation of new passenger transport authorities, is a matter for the Government. Under the Government's proposals for the privatisation of British Rail, passenger transport authorities will continue their responsibilities for local services in their areas, and other local authorities will continue to have powers to contribute to enhanced rail services.

Our White Paper on the privatisation of BR sets out in detail our proposals for the future structure and financing of rail services; these proposals will lead to a fundamental reform of the railway, under which the private sector will progressively take over the operation of passenger services. We believe that the involvement of the private sector will bring a greater focus on the passenger and, therefore, lead to a more attractive and efficient network of passenger services. It would not be sensible to contemplate major changes in the role of local authorities until experience has been gained of the operation of the new franchising regime.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends publishing the paper on upgrading the railway network to continental freight loading gauge, referred to in the Government's response to the Transport Select Committee's report on preparations for the opening of the channel tunnel, second report, Session 1991-92.

Mr. Freeman: A paper setting out the practical and other problems associated with upgrading to a large continental loading gauge was published yesterday. I have placed copies in the Library of the House.

Ports

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are being taken within Government to consider issues relating to health and safety and training within British ports following the winding-up of the British Ports Federation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Steps are being taken within the industry to enable the health and safety and training activities currently being undertaken by the British Ports Federation to continue after the winding up of the federation later this year. These are currently still under discussion, but it is hoped that a positive outcome can be announced shortly.

Traffic Accidents

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many children (a) under the age of five years and (b) between the age of five years and 16 years were involved in road traffic accidents within each United Kingdom region in each year since 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The table shows the number of reported road accident casualties aged under 16 by age group in each United Kingdom region in each year from 1985 to 1991.

Child[1] casualties—by region and age group: United Kingdom 1985-1991

Region	Year	0-4	5-15	Total
England
North	1985	413	2,295	2,708
	1986	447	2,208	2,655
	1987	437	2,090	2,527

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the result of his Department's research into the incidence and causes of tyre failures among heavy goods vehicles on motorways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A survey of tyre tread debris left by 157 tyres on the M4 motorway was carried out between June and October 1991. The debris consisted of 72—46 per cent.—new—first used—tyres and 84—54 per cent. retreads. Only one piece of debris was of unknown type.

Tyre failure by heavy goods vehicles on motorways is almost invariably the result of tyres overheating. This can be a consequence of overloading, under-inflation—or both —running under-inflated following a penetration or running for long periods at higher speeds than those for which the tyres were designed at their maximum load.

I have arranged for a copy of the Transport Research Laboratory's working paper—Ref.: WP/VS/222—to be placed in the Library.

Transport Infrastructure

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he estimates the value of regeneration benefits of transport infrastructure improvements.

Mr. MacGregor: Regeneration benefits, unlike the other benefits of a transport scheme, are predominantly benefits to the locality often achieved at the cost of less activity elsewhere. They are, therefore, counted "below the line" in a scheme appraisal, not as part of the gains to the national economy. This is standard Government practice in the appraisal of industrial and regional assistance.

Attempts at valuation generally focus on forecast increases in the value of commercial and industrial land in the immediate area. In any valuation, care must be taken to avoid double counting of benefits included in the transport appraisal and to allow for the fact that some activity may well be diverted from elsewhere in the local area.

Public Transport

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research is currently undertaken or sponsored by his Department into improved transport for women and children.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department has a long-standing programme of research into the transport needs of people with mobility problems, including women, children, elderly people and those with disabilities.

Current projects include work on the design and operation of fully accessible low floor buses, the development of design standards for bus and coach stations—jointly funded with the passenger transport executives—and the use of unstaffed railway stations by people with mobility problems—jointly funded with British Rail. My Department is also conducting research into the incidence of assaults on bus passengers.

Schemes (EC Funding)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of transport schemes which have attracted EC funding since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: These schemes include projects by the Department of Transport, nationalised industries, local authorities and the private sector, and details could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Cycling

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will carry out a study of the Dutch Government's bicycles first master plan and publish an assessment of what lessons apply to strategic transport planning in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have seen the Dutch bicycle master plan, which forms part of a range of traffic and transport policies.

The bicycle master plan contains a considerable number of proposals aimed at increasing cycle usage. These are not all new. Indeed, some reflect current United Kingdom policy and practice, such as measures to increase safety, and to improve the range and quality of facilities for cyclists.

I have no plans to publish an assessment of the bicycle master plan, but its contents will clearly influence our ideas on how cycling should develop in the United Kingdom.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list details of all his Department's expenditure in 1992-93 designed to improve safety for cyclists.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Although no separate figures are available, much of my Department's expenditure on road safety will improve safety for cyclists, for example that on publicity aimed at preventing drinking and driving, and on new technology to help catch and prosecute bad drivers. Every trunk road bypass that the Department funds and every local road bypass that they support through transport supplementary grant improves road safety for all vulnerable road users, including cyclists.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instigate a public information campaign on the dangers of and penalties for riding a bicycle across a pedestrian crossing and through red traffic lights.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The Highway Code includes good advice for cyclists on road behaviour and the need to obey the law. This advice will be expanded in the revised edition of the code and I shall draw particular attention to this when it is published early next year.

Street Works

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to require highway authorities to inform residents or traders of impending street works.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The flow of information will be improved by the relevant provisions of the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, which will come into force on 1 January 1993. They will require street authorities—normally the local highway authorities—to co-ordinate undertakers' street works and works for their own road purposes, and will impose a duty of co-operation on the undertakers. We shall shortly be publishing a code of practice giving practical guidance on the carrying out of these duties. The code will draw the attention of the promoting undertaker of works to the importance of giving advance information and warning to affected frontagers not only about disruption to their services but if their access is to be affected for any length of time.

A12

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what figures on volume and weight of traffic using the A12 at Wrentham he is using since the 1984 figures; how the figures have changed up to August 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Current traffic information is compiled from roadside interviews, traffic counts and journey time surveys carried out in October 1990. A permanent automatic count of traffic is also taken on the A12 south of Wrentham.

Traffic figures available in 1984 on the A12 south of Wrentham were in excess of 6,000 vehicles per day. A comparable figure for August 1992 is in excess of 10,000 vehicles per day. These are the highest daily flows of the year. The present A12 is capable of carrying these levels of traffic.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the likely time scale for a public consultation exercise on the proposed bypass of Wrentham on the A12.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The present programmed date for public consultation about the options for improving the A12 from south of Wrentham to Kessingland, including a bypass of Wrentham, is early next year.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Associations

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what actions Her Majesty's Government have taken to reduce the incidence of housing associations leaving homes unjustifiably empty for long periods.

Mr. Baldry: There has been a steady decrease over the past five years in the incidence of empty property owned by housing associations. The supervision of the management of associations is the statutory responsibility of the Housing Corporation and I will ask the corporation to write to the hon. Member with further information.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals Her Majesty's Government have to ensure secure tenancies for all housing association tenants.

Mr. Baldry: The majority of the tenants of housing associations are secure tenants. For those taking up a tenancy since 1989, the status is normally that of assured tenants. These assured tenants of housing associations have rights conferred by statute and additional contractual rights by virtue of the Housing Corporation's "Tenants' Guarantee", which give them security of tenure broadly similar to that enjoyed by secure tenants. There are no plans to change this framework.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the ways in which tenants are represented on housing association boards of management.

Mr. Baldry: The supervision of the management of registered housing associations is the statutory responsibility of the Housing Corporation, which has an active strategy for increasing the participation of tenants in the management of their associations. I will ask the Housing Corporation to write to the hon. Member with further information.

NATIONAL FINANCE

House Purchase

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he proposes to take to assist borrowers with negative equity who wish to move house.

Mr. Nelson: The Government propose to remove two potential legal and tax obstacles to borrowers with negative equity who wish to move.

First, the Building Societies Commission, with the consent of the Treasury, is to raise the limit which building societies can lend unsecured from £10,000 to £25,000 per person. This will enable societies, in appropriate cases, to advance top-up necessary loans to borrowers with substantial negative equity. The necessary secondary legislation will be laid before the House at the earliest opportunity.

Secondly, changes are proposed to allow the security of one property to be exchanged for another against the original mortgage loan, without the loss of mortgage interest relief. The Inland Revenue hopes to give effect to the proposed changes within the next few weeks.

EC Budget Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of European Ministers at the Budget Council in July.

Sir John Cope: The Budget Council met in Brussels on 23 July. As President of the Budget Council I chaired the meeting, and the Economic Secretary represented the United Kingdom. The Council established a first reading draft budget for 1993 totalling 65·7 billion ecu—£51·7 billion—in commitment appropriations and 62·9 billion ecu—£49·5 billion—in payment appropriations. The latter represents 1·07 per cent. of Community GNP, compared with the own resources ceiling of 1·2 per cent.

The draft budget established by the Council constrained the increase in non-compulsory expenditure to 3·79 per cent. for commitments and to 7·2 per cent.—the "maximum rate"—for payments. This involved reductions of 3,570 million ecu—£2,811 million—in commitments and 3,383 million ecu—£2,664 million—in payments of the proposals put forward by the Commission in its preliminary draft budget. The provision for agriculture takes full account of CAP reform; and is 2·6 billion ecu —£2·05 billion—below the agriculture guideline. Financial provision was not made for the cohesion fund agreed at Maastricht, which the Lisbon European Council agreed should be set up early in 1993, pending a decision on the amount which is expected to be taken at the European Council in Edinburgh.

An explanatory memorandum on the Council's draft budget was submitted to the House on 9 October.

The summary table compares the outcome of the Budget Council to the proposals in the Commission's preliminary draft budget by reference to the main areas of spending:

[1] including letter of amendment No. 1 to the PDB [illegible]93.

[2] Throughout this reply the rate of £1 = 1·2700 ecu has been used for conversions relating to 1993 expenditure (the rate notified in the Official Journal as prevailing on the last working day of last month (30 September)). The rate of £1 = 1·396 ecu has been used for 1992 expenditure (the rate set for United Kingdom contributions from VAT and the Fourth Resource in 1992).

The Budget Council also adopted the supplementary and amending budget No. 3 for 1992. An explanatory memorandum was submitted to the House on 14 September. This supplementary budget gives budgetary effect to the decision to revise the financial perspective on which an explanatory memorandum was submitted on 9 July. It covers increased payment appropriations for the structural funds in the new German Länder and four programmes under the third research framework programme. The supplementary budget also makes provision to return to a member state a significant proportion of the expected surplus in the agriculture budget. In the proposed supplementary budget the agricultural budget is reduced by 2,875 million ecu—£2,059 million—with 2,175 million ecu—£1,558 million —of that money being returned to member states through a reduction in contributions; the remainder is utilised for other Community policies.

The European Parliament will consider the draft budget for 1993 at its plenary in late October—the 26th to 30th. The Parliament's amendments and modifications will be considered at the second Budget Council on 17 November. The European Parliament's second reading is set for mid-December.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which EC countries currently fulfil the requirements for convergence set out in the Maastricht treaty protocols; in what ways the others fail; and how far the United Kingdom is away from each of the criteria.

Mr. Nelson: Article 109j of the Maastricht treaty gives to the Council the responsibility for determining whether a member state has met the necessary conditions for the adoption of a single currency. The Council is required to make this judgment, taking into account reports from the Commission and the European Monetary Institute on the extent to which a member state complies with criteria concerning the rate of inflation; the Government's fiscal position; observance of the normal fluctuation margins within the ERM; and long-term interest rate levels. In addition, the reports must take account of the number of other factors, including the developments of the ecu, the integration of markets, balance of payments on current account, and the development of unit labour costs and other price indices.

The protocol on the convergence criteria, attached to the treaty, sets out figures for the convergence criteria regarding inflation and long-term interest rates. In addition, the protocol on the excessive deficit procedure, sets out reference values for fiscal criteria, which, if breached, would prompt a Commission report to the Council on the fiscal position of a member state—such a report being the basis on which the Council would judge whether an excessive deficit existed. The position of each member state, in respect of the figures and reference values set out in the protocols, is given in the table.

DEFENCE

Queen Victoria School

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Queen Victoria school will be established as an executive agency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Queen Victoria school began to operate as an executive agency with effect from 1 April 1992. The framework document has been printed and copies will be placed in the Library of both Houses. The targets which have been set for the school in its first year of operation as an agency are as follows:

Academic and Curriculum

1. Annually, to achieve:
   - (a) for S4 pupils, at least three standard grade passes at grade 1 to 3 for 90 per cent. of pupils; and
   - (b) at least five standard grade passes at grade 1 to 3 for 60 per cent. of pupils;
   - (c) for S5/6 pupils, at least three higher grade passes at grade A to C for 60 per cent. of pupils or Scottish Vocational Education Council (Scotvec) equivalent.

2. By 31 August 1992, to develop a "5 to 14 Development Programme" in line with the Scottish Office Education Department—SOED—recommendations including a system for parental response on quality and choice.

Pastoral

3. To respond to recommendations of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools on pastoral provision and organisation with six months of receipt of that report.

Extra Curricular Provision

4. To maintain and enrich at least 50 extra curricular activities, both physical and cultural, involving pupils aged 10 to 15 in at least three per week and those aged 16 to 18 in at least two.

Management

5. By March 1993, to assess and report on pay and grading structures in the school and associated allowances and rents.

6. To implement teacher appraisal and development procedures in line with SOED guidelines and timetable, including a pastoral element.

7. By April 1993, to develop management and financial information systems, including baseline pupil per capita costs, that satisfy all management and accounting requirements.

8. By April 1993, to identify areas for efficiency savings in order to:—
   - (a) reduce pupil per capita costs by 2 per cent. in financial year 1993-94 while at least maintaining present standards.
   - (b) set targets for future years.

9. By June 1993, to examine the feasibility of admitting girls and fee-paying pupils, and the extent of provision required for them.

10. By June 1993, to develop and implement a strategy for income generation using the school's facilities.

Statistical Services

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future management of statistical and related services within his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A review of Defence Statistics has been completed, and I am pleased to announce its establishment as a defence support agency from 1 July 1992, with the title the Defence Analytical Service Agency —DASA.

The DASA provides a variety of professional statistical and other analytical services which are essential to the conduct of the Ministry of Defence's business operations. As well as producing many of my Department's statistics, including those to Parliament, the Armed Forces Pay Review Body and the Top Salaries Review Body, it offers advice and assistance to a wide range of customers in my Department on areas such as manpower planning, financial management, logistic projects and personnel surveys.

The DASA is part of the Government statistical service. The chief executive is the head of profession for staff in the statistical grades in the Ministry of Defence, and chief statistical adviser to my Department. The first chief executive is Mr. Paul Altobell. The key targets that have been set for the agency in its first year of operation are as follows. I have arranged for copies of the framework document to be placed in the Library of both Houses.

Level and quality of service

1. About three-quarters of the agency's business is suitable by service level agreements—SLAs—with customers, which set out targets and standards for the level of service, timeliness and quality of work. For this part of the business key targets are:—

a. To introduce, in 1992-93, SLAs for 45 per cent. of this work and to increase this coverage to 75 per cent. and 100 per cent. in the following two years.

b. In 1992-93, to meet 95 per cent. of the targets set in the established SLAs.

2. For the remaining parts of the business—that for which SLAs are not appropriate—the key target is:—

To establish, by April 1993, project control mechanisms which will include objectives, programmes and targets.3. To extend to all branches of the agency by October 1992 the measurement of perceived customer satisfaction, through the use of customer assessment questionnaires, and to establish customer satisfaction targets for future years.

Efficiency and use of resources

4. To implement the PROSPECT reductions in manpower of 10 per cent. in 1992-93 and 10 per cent. in 1993-94 with minimum reduction in output.

5. To increase efficiency in the production of regular statistical reports by 5 per cent. in 1992-93 and a further 10 per cent. over the next two years.

Management systems

6. To develop by April 1993 a task costing system to measure the resources used to produce the various outputs of the agency.

7. To complete by April 1993 a feasibility study to determine the potential for market testing and to establish a timetable for future work.

Duke of York's Royal Military School

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Duke of York's royal military school will be established as an executive agency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Duke of York's royal military school began to operate as an executive agency with effect from 1 April 1992. The framework document has been printed and copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The targets which have been set for the school in its first year of operation are as follows:

Academic and Curriculum

1. (a) Annually, at 16 plus, to achieve at least six General Certificates of Secondary Education passes at grades A to C for 70 per cent. of pupils;

(b) Annually, at 18 plus, to achieve at least three A-level passes for 90 per cent. of pupils with 40 per cent. of all passes at grades A or B; for Business and Technology Education Council—BTEC—national diploma courses, 100 per cent. award rate.

2. By April 1993, to complete a curriculum review.

Pastoral

3. By September 1994, to define and introduce a set of common guidelines of boarding provisions, as recommended by Her Majesty's inspectors of schools.

4. To ensure continuing compliance with the provisions of the Children Act 1989, and to respond to the local authority social services department inspection within six months of receipt of that report.

Management and Development

5. By April 1993, to develop management and financial information systems, including baseline pupil per capita costs, that satisfy all management and accounting requirements;

6. By 1 April 1993, to achieve savings equivalent to 1·5 per cent. of the gross budgetary allocation and to establish future targets in specified areas of expenditure and revenue;

7. By September 1993, to complete policy reviews and implementation plans for co-education and other extensions to the pupil catchment area;

8. By April 1993, to review the school pay/grading structures for teaching and non-teaching staff, and to make proposals;

9. By April 1993, to produce an agreed teacher appraisal scheme for implementation in financial year 1993-94.

Isle of Rona

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current programme being carried out by his Department's establishment at the Isle of Rona, Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive of the Defence Research Agency to reply direct to the hon. Member.

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to the following question:

To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what is the current programme being carried out by his Department's establishment at the Isle of Rona, Scotland, and if he will make a statement.

The Defence Research Agency uses the facilities on Rona to measure the noise generated by ships and submarines as they move through the water. This is a continuous programme since vessels are measured as they are brought into service and checked periodically throughout their lives.

Research Establishments

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the establishment of each of the defence research establishments in 1990 and 1991; and what is the current establishment of each and that projected for 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

In his written reply on 19 October the Secretary of State for Defence informed you that I would be replying directly to the question:

> To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the establishment of each of the Defence Research Establishments in 1990 and 1991 and what is the current establishment of each and that projected for 1993 and 1994.

On 1 April 1990 the total number of staff employed in the four establishments which later formed the Defence Research Agency was 11,912. The Defence Research Agency was set up on 1 April 1991 and on that day its staff numbered 12,027.

Since 1 April 1991 a number of DRA staff have transferred to the new Test and Evaluation organisation and some of the MOD's Quality Assurance staff have joined the DRA. I also released a number of staff through a Voluntary Redundancy Scheme earlier this year. At present the DRA establishment is 11,267.

As you know I have recently announced a rationalisation strategy for the DRA which, if given Ministerial approval, could result in a further reduction in DRA staff numbers of some 2,000 by 1994-95.

Contracts

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the extent and nature of all contracts between the Ministry of Defence and SERCO.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has let some 183 contracts with SERCO since 1982 with a total value of more than £350 million. SERCO provides my Department with a wide range of technical services, including running communications facilities, technical training and the operation of the ballistic missile early warning system at Fylingdales.

Electro-magnetic Gun

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for of Defence what is the nature of the work being undertaken by the Ministry of Defence establishment at Dundrennan involving research into an electro-magnetic gun; for whom the work is being carried out; and under what contractual arrangements.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

In his written answer today the Minister of State for Defence Procurement said that I would be replying directly to the following question:

> To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the nature of the work being undertaken by the Ministry of Defence establishment at Dundrennan involving research into an electromagnetic gun; for whom the work is being carried out; and under what contractual arrangements.

The Defence Research Agency is in the process of establishing a research electromagnetic gun range at the MOD trials site at Kirkcudbright, Kirkcudbrightshire. This facility is being constructed as part of a research programme to assess the feasibility of using electromagnetic propulsion to enhance the armour penetrating performance of tank gunnery.

The research programme is being carried out for the Master General of the Ordnance to enable him to assess more precisely the potential military value of any future tank gunnery system based upon electromagnetic propulsion.

The installation work at Kirkcudbright which is jointly funded with the US Government is being carried out by Marconi Radar & Control Systems on a fixed priced contract. Work started in 1989 and is expected to be complete by mid 1993.

Military Exercises

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the nature, purpose, duration and extent of all military exercises undertaken in south-west Scotland during 1992 up to the current date; and what percentage this represents of all those carried out in the United Kingdom for the same period.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the meeting of the Defence Ministers of the nations collaborating in the European fighter aircraft programme on 4 August.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. and learned Friend met his Spanish, Italian and German counterparts in Madrid on 4 August. Studies were set in hand to consider ways of reducing costs in the EFA programme and to review the operational requirement in the light of the recent changes in the international security situation. Both studies are due to be completed by the end of October, and the Ministers plan to meet again in December to discuss the results.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the total cost to all four participating countries in pounds sterling of the development programe of the European fighter aircraft programme; how much of that figure has already been spent; and if he will give a breakdown by participating country.

Mr. Aitken: The total cost to the four partner nations of developing EFA is estimated at about £8·5 billion, of which the United Kingdom share is about £2·7 billion. Virtually all of this is now contractually committed. Bills paid to date by the United Kingdom amount to a little over £1 billion.

We do not maintain records of the progress of expenditure by our partners. Work was allocated at the start of development in the ratio: United Kingdom 33 per cent., Germany 33 per cent., Italy 21 per cent., Spain 13 per cent. Each nation meets the cost of common work performed by its industry and the whole cost of any national-specific requirements.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to meet his counterparts from Germany, Italy and Spain to discuss the future of the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: My right. hon. and learned Friend plans to meet his German, Italian and Spanish counterparts in December to discuss the results of the studies they commissioned on 4 August. It is possible that they may have some preliminary discussions when they meet on other bilateral or multilateral occasions.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the engineering facilities in the United Kingdom, giving the name of the company and the geographical location where over 50 people are working on the development of the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: The three main British companies involved in the development of EFA are British Aerospace—principally, the Warton facility—Rolls-Royce—Bristol—and GEC—principally, the Rochester, Edinburgh and Stanmore facilities. There are approaching 300 companies in the United Kingdom acting as sub-contractors or suppliers. It would not be possible without disproportionate cost to identify the facilities of those companies with over 50 people engaged on work connected with EFA.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British jobs are currently dependent on the European fighter aircraft development programme.

Mr. Aitken: Approximately 9,400 people in the United Kingdom are directly employed on work connected with the development of EFA. When EFA enters the production phase, we estimate that this number will rise to around 28,000.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Training Board

Mr. Conway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if authority for staff grading changes within the Agricultural Training Board has removed the need for his Department's approval.

Mr. Curry: When approving staff grading changes the chief executive of the Agricultural Training Board is required to abide by the normal rules on maintenance on national civil service grading standards and the need for economy. Where the creation of a new post is involved the procedures described in the reply given to my hon. Friend on 19 October, Official Report, column 95, also have to be followed.

EC Fisheries Council

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council held in Luxembourg on 19 October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I chaired this meeting of the Council. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland, represented the United Kingdom.

The Council agreed, subject to the opinion of the European Parliament, to a regulation revising the regime for the common organisation of the market in fishery products. A satisfactory balance was achieved between constraining Community expenditure on market suport and the need to protect fishermen from excessive price fluctuations.

The Council further agreed a regulation to prohibit EC vessels anywhere from undertaking fisheries involving encirclements with purse seine nets on marine mammals when aiming to catch tuna and other species of fish.

The Council also discussed the Commission's proposals for future multi-annual guidance programmes, agreeing the need to set realistic targets for the reduction in member states' fishing and to allow member states flexibility in how they achieve them.

The Council had its first discussion on the important draft regulations intended to replace the basic common fisheries policy regulation and control regulation. These regulations have been proposed by the Commission following Council discussion of the mid-term review of the CFP. The Council also agreed that a further proposal for a Community licensing system for waters in the North-West Atlantic Fisheries Convention Organisation area should be considered in taking account of discussion on the two major proposals.

The United Kingdom pressed for Community action on the rules for the minimum landings size for lobsters.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Overseas Representation

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries in which there is no British embassy or high commission.

Mr. Goodlad: There is no British embassy, high commission or other resident representation staffed from the United Kingdom in the following countries, although members of the diplomatic service are accredited to and visit the majority of them:

Afghanistan, Andorra, Armenia, Belarus, Benin, Bhutan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Georgia, Guinea Bissau, Haiti, Iraq, North Korea, Kyrgyzstan, Laos, Liberia, Lichtenstein, Maldives, Mali, Marshall Island, Mauritania, Micronesia, Moldova, Monaco, Nauru, Niger, Rwanda, St. Kitts and Nevis, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Somalia, Surinam, Tajikistan, Togo, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uzbekistan and Western Samoa.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take the necessary action to close the embassy in London of the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. There are good reasons for maintaining contact with the authorities in Belgrade.

Vietnamese Migrants

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Vietnamese migrants.

Mr. Goodlad: A further 118 Vietnamese illegal immigrants were repatriated from Hong Kong under the orderly repatriation programme on two flights, 60 on 4 August and 58 on 10 October. All had undergone the UN High Commissioner for Refugees approved screening and appeal procedures and found not to be refugees.

The UNHCR's voluntary repatriation programme is proving most successful. More than 28,000 have already been repatriated under this system from the region without a single substantiated report of persecution. We hope that all non-refugees now in Hong Kong will decide to follow them. The clearing of the Hong Kong camps will enable genuine refugees to be properly looked after and resettled as appropriate.

Deaths Abroad

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the criteria for refusing the burial or cremation of United Kingdom nationals whose bodies are returned following death abroad; and if he will give the number of such refusals in each year from 1986.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

Whether or not a body repatriated from abroad is accepted for burial or cremation is ultimately a matter for the burial or cremation authority, which will need to be satisfied that the prescribed documentation has been supplied. Such refusals do not have to be reported, so their numbers are unknown.

Spain

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are available to relatives of United Kingdom nationals who die in Spain to secure an examination by British doctors.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

In the case of United Kingdom nationals whose bodies are returned to this country following death in Spain, it is at the discretion of the relatives whether to arrange an examination by British doctors. When a body is repatriated to England and Wales, the coroner has a duty to investigate cases where the death was violent, unnatural, or sudden and unknown cause. To assist him in his inquiries the coroner has powers to arrange a post-mortem examination. These duties and powers do not apply in other parts of the United Kingdom.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Costs

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the estimated cost of crime to the community in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: There is no reliable annual assessment of the total cost of crime to England and Wales. Estimated expenditure in 1990-91 by criminal justice agencies in England and Wales including the police, the Forensic Science Service agency, the Crown prosecution service, criminal legal aid, the Crown court, magistrates' courts, and the prison and probation service was £7·5 billion.

Parents' Accountability

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on proposals to make parents more accountable for the behaviour of their children.

Mr. Jack: Powers for courts to involve parents when their children offend were strengthened by changes introduced by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 on 1 October. We shall monitor the new arrangements carefully.

Illegal Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which department of the Metropolitan police now undertakes the work done between 1974 and 1989 by the national illegal immigration intelligence unit of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There is no unit within the Metropolitan police which gathers information on illegal immigration. That function rests with the Home Office immigration department.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what number of asylum refusals (a) leave the United Kingdom voluntarily, (b) are deported and (c) remain.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Readily available information is given in the table. Fuller information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum claims have been rejected under paragraph 101 of the Immigration Rules each month since the introduction of that paragraph, expressed as a number of rejections and as a percentage of total claims received in that month.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A provision that an application for variation of leave may be refused on the ground of failure to provide within a reasonable period of time evidence to establish the claim under the Immigration Rules has been in force since 1 March 1980—currently paragraph 101 of HC 251. Figures for asylum applications refused under this provision were not separately identifiable prior to December 1991. Information from that date is given in the table.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many amendments were proposed to the 1991-92 Asylum Bill (a) by the Government and (b) by the Opposition; and what percentage was agreed to by the Committee.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Including new clauses, a total of 154 amendments to the Asylum Bill were tabled between its introduction and Third Reading. One hundred and fifteen were selected. Of these, six were Government amendments. No amendments were made during the Committee stage.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest monthly figure for the number of asylum applicants; and what was the comparable number for the same month in 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is given in the table.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Dublin convention will not come into force until it has been ratified by all EC member states.

Information on the total number of asylum applicants at ports removed on safe third country grounds in the period March to August 1992 is given in the table. The countries to which they were removed were other EC countries, Sweden, Austria, USA, Switzerland, Turkey, Guinea, Australia and Kenya. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide the latest statistics to update his answer to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 6 July, Official Report columns 41-42 on asylum application;

(2) if he will make a statement on the trends in grants of asylum, exceptional leave to remain and applications for asylum.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is given in the table.

Applications for asylum increased substantially between 1988 and 1991. The monthly rate halved in late 1991 following measures to deter multiple and other fraudulent applications. The number of applications increased somewhat in the third quarter of 1992.

The recent increase in the number of decisions mainly reflects additional staff resources in the asylum division.

[2] Figures include certain in-country applications made in illegal entrant cases.

[3] In country figures include a small number of applications recorded as having been made overseas and referred to the Home Office for a decision. These cases may be under recorded.

[4] For failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period.

[5] Figures are maxima which overstate because of earlier under recording of decisions. Figures are approximate and rounded to the nearest 10.

[6] In addition, certain applications by nationals of Afghanistan and Liberia to the British High Commissioners in New Delhi and Lagos, respectively, were processed locally.

[7] Figures rounded to the nearest 5. 1990 application figures and 1991 decision figures may understate because of delays in recording.

N/a—Not available.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how long the average asylum application takes to determine;

(2) what is the latest figure for the average length of time taken to determine applications for asylum (a) as a whole, (b) for new applicants and (c) for applicants from the existing backlog.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is of the estimated average length of time between the receipt of an asylum application and the decision, for cases which have been decided. For decisions in the period January to September 1992 as a whole, excluding those under paragraph 101 of the Immigration Rules for failure to provide evidence in support of the asylum claim, this average decision time was twenty and a half months. This figure reflects the recent increase in staffing which has enabled work to commence on the resolution of older and more complex cases.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the projected total number of asylum seekers expected for the whole of 1992 on the basis of current trends.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not possible to provide a precise forecast in view of the uncertainties involved. In the first six months of 1992, asylum applications totalled 9,600. In the period January to September as a whole, 16,200 applications have been received.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to secure the £33·55 million out of the £35 million ordered by the courts to be confiscated from those convicted of drug trafficking offences which has still not been paid.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Responsibility for the enforcement of confiscation orders made after convictions in the Crown court for drug trafficking offences rests with magistrates courts. I am pleased to say that it is now known that, of the £35 million ordered to be confiscated under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986—DTOA—up to May 1992, £15 million had either been realised or was subject to receivership. The realisation of confiscation orders is often necessarily a lengthy and complex process, involving for example the realisation of tangible property. Moreover, orders cannot be enforced when they are subject of appeal. We will shortly be bringing forward legislative proposals intended to improve the confiscation procedures of the DTOA, and additional guidance to the courts is also planned.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Royal Parks Constabulary

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will set out in tabular form the annual salary scales for the Royal Parks constabulary ranks of constable to chief officer with effect from 1 September; if he will show for each rank and scale point any other allowances payable; and what is the current actual establishment of the constabulary and its total annual cost.

Mr. Key [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The revised salary scales for members of the Royal Parks Constabulary, effective from 1 September 1992 are as follows. These rates are conditional upon the passing of the statutory instrument amending Home Office pay rates, to which RPC pay rates are related, being laid and approved.

Television Licence Fees

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will review his decision not to allow concessionary television licence fees in warden assisted homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: This is a matter for which the Department of National Heritage now has responsibility. We have no plans to review the regulations governing the concessionary licence scheme.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security who will be eligible for cold weather payments this winter; what weather conditions will trigger payment; what payment will be made; how payment will be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The principles of operation of the cold weather payments scheme remain unchanged from last year. The Cold Weather Payment (No. 2) Regulations, which come into force on 1 November, make minor improvements to the links between weather stations and local areas.

EDUCATION

Teacher Vacancies

12. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what figures he has for the overall vacancy rate for teachers in the two most recent available years.

Mr. Forth: Maintained schools in England had an unfilled vacancy rate of 1·5 per cent. in January 1991, and 0·5 per cent. in January 1992. Numbers of vacancies were 5,222 in 1991 and 1,898 in 1992, a reduction of 63 per cent.

Pre-school Education

13. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what measures he intends to introduce to assist local authorities to provide an adequate number of nursery places to meet the demands of all those parents who wish such a place for their children.

Mr. Forth: As I said in my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), earlier today, it is for local authorities to determine the scale and form of provision for the under-fives. But the House would wish to be reminded that 175,000 more under-fives attended maintained schools in England in 1991 than in 1979; and that 90 per cent. of three- and four-year-olds now enjoy education or group child care or both.

School Inspections

14. Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what progress he has to report regarding implementing the new arrangements for school inspection.

20. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what discussions he has had with parent organisations regarding progress in implementing the new arrangements for school inspection.

Mr. Patten: OFSTED—the Office for Standards in Education—opened on 1 September 1992. Her Majesty's chief inspector, Professor Stewart Sutherland, and his staff are now preparing for the first round of second school inspections to start in September 1993.

I shall soon be consulting with interested bodies, including organisations which represent parents, on a draft circular and regulations which will give effect to the four-year inspection cycle and secure wide distribution of inspection reports.

27. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the response to his Department's national advertising campaign to attract registered school inspectors.

Mr. Forth: As a result of the campaign some 41,000 people asked for the leaflet "Are you interested in becoming a school inspector?" and so far some 25,000 have gone on to request further information and application forms. I understand that OFSTED, the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in England, has received almost 5,000 applications from prospective registered inspectors and more than 6,000 from prospective inspection team members.

First Degree Awards

16. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total number of first degrees awarded in the latest year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure for 1980.

Mr. Forman: In 1990, 137,000 first degrees were awarded in universities, polytechnics and colleges in Great Britain, compared with 102,000 in 1980.

This 34 per cent. increase illustrates the rapid expansion of higher education over the last decade. It highlights the remarkable achievements of our higher education institutions and the success of this Government's education policies.

Parents Charter

17. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what additional information will be made available to parents from the autumn term this year as a result of the measures contained in the parents charter.

Mr. Forth: For the first time, comparative tables of public examination results will be published this November for each local education authority area. They will cover all maintained schools and those independent schools which are participating this year on a voluntary basis, alongside local and national average figures.

Grant-maintained Schools

18. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many Cheshire schools have applied for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: Five schools in Cheshire have applied for grant-maintained status to date. Of these, two have been approved, and one is under consideration.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many ballots were pending for grant-maintained status in September 1989; and how many ballots are currently pending.

Mr. Forth: On September 29 1989, there were 18 schools operating, nine approved but not yet operating, and 21 in the process of applying for GM status. Seven ballots were pending.

On October 19 1992, 278 GM schools were operational, 30 were approved or "minded to approve" but not yet operating and 179 were in the process of applying for GM status. Sixty-seven ballots were pending.

Teacher Redundancies

19. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the level of teacher redundancies which have taken effect since June and the number expected in December.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

School Funding, Essex and Kent

21. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will meet representatives of teachers from Essex and Kent in order to discuss the funding of their schools.

Mr. Forth: No. The funding of schools in particular areas is primarily a matter for the local education authority.

Local Education Authorities

22. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received regarding the future role of local education authorities.

Mr. Forth: Most of the 850 responses to the White Paper have commented in one way or another on the future role of local education authorities. We are considering those along with all other responses to the White Paper.

School Repairs

23. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the cost of school repairs.

Mr. Forth: We are allocating over £700 million to support capital spending on school buildings in 1992-93, up nearly 15 per cent. on last year. Provision to support the recurrent costs of school repairs is also available within total standard spending, which in 1992-93 totals £18·7 billion.

It is for local authorities and schools to decide what priority and what funds to allocate to school repairs from the resources available to them.

Grammar Schools

24. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many grammar schools there are in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: In September 1992 there were at least 110 grammar schools maintained by 24 of the 109 local education authorities in England, with a further 46 grammar schools in the grant-maintained sector.

Further Education Colleges

25. Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how the preparations for the transfer of further education colleges to the Further Education Funding Council are progressing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: Preparations are proceeding according to plan. In particular, further education corporations were established on 30 September for the purpose of conducting further education and sixth-form colleges from 1 April 1993 when they transfer out of local authority control to the new further education sector.

Student Incomes

26. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about student incomes.

Mr. Forman: I announced recently that a new survey of student income and expenditure will be conducted in the academic year 1992-93. This will enable the facts about student income to be established.

Class Sizes

28. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of primary school children are in classes of more than 30 children.

Mr. Forth: In January 1992 about 25 per cent. of pupils in maintained primary schools in England, were in classes of more than 30 pupils taught by one teacher.

Student Unions

29. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the future of student unions and the National Union of Students.

Mr. Forman: My right hon. Friend has said that the Government will bring forward proposals to establish the voluntary principle as the basis for student union membership. I shall be having further discussions with representatives of the educational institutions and other interested parties about how this will be achieved.

Science Teaching

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he is taking to promote the teaching of science in schools.

Mr. Forth: The introduction of the national curriculum for science means that, for the first time, all schools must offer a broad and balanced science curriculum for all pupils from age five to 16.

Adult Education

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what resources he estimates to be going into adult education in real and money terms (a) now and (b) five, 10 and 15 years ago; how many people were on adult education courses at the same periods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: The table shows recurrent expenditure on adult education centres by authorities in England up to 1990-91, the latest year for which information is available, together with numbers of enrolments at these centres. The figures include students below the age of 19.

Adult education centres

	1975-76	1980-81	1985-86	1990-91
Cash expenditure (£ million)	32	61	102	140[1]
Real terms expenditure (£ million at 1990-91 prices)	117	112	137	140[1]
Enrolments (000s)	1,847	1,543	1,418	1,352

[1] provisional figure.

Expenditure by local education authorities on adults in further education colleges is not separately identifiable and enrolment data for 1975-76 were not collected on a basis consistent with later data, but there has been a clear and very welcome increase during the last decade in total further education enrolments of people aged 19 and over, taking together adult centres and other colleges providing further education. Between 1980-81 and 1990-91 these enrolments increased by 27 per cent. overall. Outside adult centres, the increase was 62 per cent.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 20 October.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 20 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if it remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government to increase the United Kingdom overseas aid budget.

The Prime Minister: The outcome of this year's public expenditure survey will be announced, as is usual, during the autumn statement of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Turkey

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Prime Minister if he will press the Turkish Government to exert influence on the representatives of the Turkish community in northern Cyprus, to negotiate positively in the forthcoming round of talks to be held under the auspices of the United Nations, and not to obstruct the search for a just, viable and lasting solution to the Cyprus problem; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We share entirely the concern that all involved in the Cyprus problem should work for a fair settlement on the lines of the "set of ideas" published by the United Nations Secretary-General and endorsed in United Nations Security Council resolution 774.

European Parliament (Elections)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to harmonise the British electoral system for European parliamentary elections with those of the other EC member states; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We have no proposals at present to change the way in which members of the European Parliament are elected in Great Britain or in Northern Ireland. Any proposals which the European Parliament puts forward for a uniform electoral procedure will be considered on their merits.

European Community Legislation

Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister what changes he proposes to make to the process and time scale under which Commission proposals for legislation will be presented to the House consequent on the declaration on the role of national parliaments in the European union.

The Prime Minister: The Government will continue to ensure that legislative proposals by the Commission are deposited in the House as soon as possible, in accordance with the existing scrutiny procedures.

GATT

Sir David Steel: To ask the Prime Minister if he will provide details of how the figure of $90 billion, referred to in his statement on the economic summit as the amount of additional income to be gained by developing and former communist countries through completion of the GATT talks was calculated; which countries are likely to benefit from this additional income; and which sectors of the developing countries are likely to benefit from the completion of the GATT talks.

The Prime Minister: The figure comes from a report for the OECD development centre by Ian Goldin and Dominique van der Mensbrugghe entitled "Trade Liberalisation: What's at Stake?" It is available in the House of Commons Library, and should provide the further information requested.

Cyprus

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions he has met the Greek Cypriot leader during the past 12 months; whether he has met the Turkish Cypriot leader in the same period; and what is his policy on meeting foreign political leaders who are not in government.

The Prime Minister: I have met President Vassiliou twice in the last 12 months. I have not met Mr. Denktash who claims to be the head of state which the United Kingdom does not recognise, though United Kingdom representatives have regular contact with him.

I and other members of the Government decide whether to meet foreign political leaders on the basis of a judgment in each case.

Common Currency

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister on what date he expects the United Kingdom to have a common currency with EC nations.

The Prime Minister: Under the protocol to the Maastricht treaty which we negotiated it will be for the Government and Parliament to decide whether the United Kingdom will join a single currency at all.

Neo-Nazi Activities

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what decisions have been taken during his presidency of the EC regarding the neo-Nazi activities against migrants in the former East Germany.

The Prime Minister: The Government deplore and condemn racist attacks wherever they occur. So do the German Government. President von Weizsacker, Chancellor Kohl and other political leaders in Germany have condemned the neo-Nazi attacks and have pledged unrelenting efforts to identify and prosecute those responsible.

Kashmir

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions have taken place between the Governments of the United Kingdom and India to decide appropriate assistance from the United Kingdom, the Commonwealth and the United Nations to assist Kashmir overcome the flooding disaster.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The Government of India have not sought any emergency assistance from the United Kingdom for the flooding in Kashmir.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what forecasts have been received by Her Majesty's Government of the numbers of refugees likely to die in Bosnia and other former Yugoslavian states in the coming winter; what estimates have been received of the numbers of people who will be displaced from their homes or detention camps this winter; and what arrangements have been made by Her Majesty's Government, in conjuction with the EC and the United Nations, for the international community to receive refugees over this winter.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 October 1992]: According to the UN High Commission for Refugees hundreds of thousands are at risk. A total of 1·6 million are already displaced; up to 12,000 are in detention centres. The UNHCR believes that the best policy is for displaced people to stay as close to their homes as possible. We agree and have so far contributed over £55 million to humanitarian relief operations.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what representations have been received by Her Majesty's Government for armed action to be taken against those attacking UN-sponsored humanitarian relief in Bosnia and other former Yugoslavian states and for armed retaliation against air attacks on Bosnia made by Serbian aircraft or Serbian-sponsored aircraft in Bosnia.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Of the several thousand letters received from members of the public concerning the former Yugoslavia, a significant number have advocated military action. The purpose of the 2,400 troops we are providing is the protection of humanitarian convoys in central Bosnia. The Bosnian Serbs have undertaken to remove their combat aircraft to Serbia. The UN is working urgently to ensure that this happens.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what representations have been received by Her Majesty's Government for arms from those in Bosnia fighting aggression from Serbia or sponsored by Serbia; on what dates such requests were made; what types of arms were requested; what was the response of Her Majesty's Government; and whether any requests for arms are being considered by Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 October 1992]: United Nations Security Council resolution 713 of 25 September 1991 established an arms embargo on all the territory of former Yugoslavia, including Bosnia-Hercegovina. There is no question of any consideration being given to requests for arms.

Pakistan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what financial assistance has been given by Her Majesty's Government, to date, to relieve suffering caused by flooding in Pakistan; what other assistance has been given by Her Majesty's Government, to date, to Pakistan, to provide clean water, medical supplies, food, temporary shelter and clothing; and on what date the Government of Pakistan requested formally Her Majesty's Government to assist in relieving hardship caused by flooding.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Although the Government of Pakistan have made no formal request to the international donor community for relief assistance following the recent flooding, the Government have provided £475,088 for relief aid because of the magnitude of the disaster.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what action he has taken through the EC, the Commonwealth and the United Nations to co-ordinate international assistance to relieve hardship caused by flooding in Pakistan.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The United Nations, in co-operation with the Government of Pakistan, has set up a committee of donors to co-ordinate relief efforts. The United Kingdom and its European Community partners, together with the European Commission, have participated in this committee through representatives in Islamabad.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions have taken place between representatives of Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Pakistan about help and assistance from the United Kingdom to provide short, medium and long-term aid to Pakistan to rebuild the country following the flooding disaster; and if he will give dates of when such meetings took place and the designation of officials participating.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Disastrous floods struck northern Pakistan on the night of 10 to 11 September. Senior officials of the British high aid commission in Islamabad, led by the economic and counsellor had discussed relief aid requirements with federal Government officials on 12 September. A first contribution for emergency relief was made the same day. There have since been weekly meetings between the British high commission and federal Government officials through the forum of the UN Disaster Relief Organisation Programme UN Development—chaired special co-ordinating committee for flood relief—on 14 and 24 September and 6 October.

On several occasions following the emergency, the British high commissioner has discussed relief requirements with the Prime Minister of Pakistan, notably during a call on the Prime Minister on 21 September, and other senior ministers.

On 17 September the economic aid counsellor in the British high commission—BHC—had discussions with the Chief Secretary, Government of Punjab to determine further relief needs. As a result, we responded with a supply of tents and blankets which arrived in Lahore on 22 September, on a flight met by the same BHC official and the provincial Minister of Revenue.

On 23 September the economic aid counsellor held discussions with senior officials in the Government of Punjab.

On 27 September the first secretary (aid) visited Lahore for further discussions with senior provincial Government officials on relief distribution and further needs. On 6 October the same official visited Jhelum to monitor the delivery and further distribution of relief goods supplied under British aid, where he met district officials.

In addition, the British deputy high commissioner in Karachi and his staff have held regular contacts with Government of Sindh about emergency needs in the province.

The authorities in Pakistan have stressed the need for self reliance in terms of longer-term rehabilitation, and have therefore made no official request for aid for this purpose. However, we will continue to keep in touch with the Government of Pakistan about longer-term requirements in the context of our bilateral aid programme.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fishing Fleet

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fishing boats are tied up at present at Portavogie, Kilkeel and Ardglass harbours; and if he will make a statement on the size of the Northern Ireland fishing fleet which is still actively involved in the fishing industry.

Mr. Hanley: It is understood that there are, in total, 20 fishing vessels of over 10 m in length which are at present tied up at Portavogie, Kilkeel and Ardglass harbours. As with other member states, the future size of the United Kingdom fishing fleet, which includes that of Northern Ireland, is the subject of continuing examination and consultation with the Commission in multi-annual guidance programme targets.

Students' Unions

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amount of public funds is allocated per annum to the students' unions in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: In the 1991-92 academic year payments —largely from public funds—by universities and colleges of education in Northern Ireland to their respective students unions amounted to £1,427,900. Information in relation to students unions in further education colleges is not readily available.

SCOTLAND

Consultants

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the occasions when his Department has employed Quayle Munro as consultants in the last three years, with details of the projects concerned.

Mr. Lang: Details of the projects undertaken by Quayle Munro on behalf of The Scottish Office in the last three years are as follows:—

Details of Project	Contract Period
Advisers to Secretary of State on privatisation of the Scottish Bus Group.	1988-1991
Advising on proposals for the direct labour organisation of Scottish Homes.	1990
Advising on the sale of Scottish public transport companies by local authorities.	1991 (ongoing)
Advising on the funding arrangements for the Skye Crossing, including the tender competition and tender clarifications with the Concessionaire.	1990-1992
Advising on the options for the future organisation of water and sewerage services in Scotland.	1992

Lockerbie Air Crash

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many officers of (a) the Scottish police and (b) other police forces are currently engaged on the investigation of the bombing of Pan Am 103; and which countries have been visited by British police officers in connection with the Lockerbie disaster.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Seven officers of the Dumfries and Galloway constabulary are currently directly engaged in the Lockerbie investigation. No other police force in the United Kingdom is presently involved. Inquiries have been conducted in 70 countries. It would not be helpful to identify each of the countries visited.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Aerospace

Mr. Bennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with British Aerospace about the joint venture for regional aircraft with Taiwan.

Mr. Sainsbury: The joint venture is a commercial matter between British Aerospace and the Taiwanese Aerospace Corporation. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has, however, been kept informed of progress. He met John Cahill, chairman of British Aerospace and Earle Ho, chairman of the Taiwanese Aerospace Corporation, on 29 July, during the latter's visit to the United Kingdom.

Toys (Safety)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement as to the grounds on which the EC has banned birthday cards which have an age badge attached for children under three years old; and what action his Department is taking.

Mr. Leigh: My Department is not aware of any action by the EC or any member state to ban such items.

Recycling

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the reasons for the recent fall in the United Kingdom's recycling rate for paper.

Mr. Eggar: The recycling rate for paper can be measured in two ways: the proportion of waste paper used in the production of paper and board in the United Kingdom or the amount of waste paper recovered as a proportion of paper consumed in the United Kingdom.

The most recent figures available to my Department show that the proportion of waste paper used in production in the first half of 1992 was, at 59·7 per cent., identical to the rate one year earlier. This was in a period in which United Kingdom production of paper and board increased by 2·8 per cent. Recovery tonnages also increased over the period from 1,585,000 tonnes in the first half of 1991 to 1,616,000 tonnes in the first half of 1992. However, since United Kingdom consumption in the period increased at a faster rate than United Kingdom production, the recovery rate fell from 33·7 per cent. to 32·5 per cent.

My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has met representatives of the paper and board industry to discuss the pattern of trade and, in particular, the impact of changing environmental legislation in other member states of the European Community.

Postal Services

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement concerning the application of the principle of subsidiarity to the purposes, and proposals made in the communication of the European Commission (7390/92) concerning policies for postal services, indicating which proposal for improvements could not be achieved by national postal authorities or by co-operation within the international postal union.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The range, quality, reliability and pricing of postal services varies considerably throughout the European Community. The EC Commission has taken the view that postal services form an essential part of the social and business infrastructure of the EC, and that individuals and organisations are entitled to certain minimum standards. The Commission's proposals in its Green Paper on postal services are to achieve their objective essentially through a combination of harmonisation and market opening measures, and the elimination of harmful cross-subsidies. The principle of subsidiarity will be reflected in that member states will remain free to provide postal services to a higher standard than the minima decreed by the Commission, to adopt more liberal regimes, to organise their regulatory structures and generally to tailor their services to meet the specific needs of local circumstances.

Microelectronics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will publish tables showing the total of payments under the investment support for fibre optics and opto-electronics programme by 31 March 1992, the total payments to projects in each region and any payments during 1991-92 in total and for each region;

(2) if he will publish tables showing the total of payments under the microelectronics industry support programme II by 31 March 1992, the total payments to projects in each region and any payments during 1991-1992 in total and for each region;

(3) if he will publish tables showing the total of payments under the microelectronics industry support programme I by 31 March 1992, the total payments to the projects in each region and any payments during 1991-92 in total and for each region.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Details of financial assistance under these three programmes are contained in the "Industrial Development Act 1982 Annual Report". Copies of the most recent report for the year ended 31 March 1992 are available in the Library.

Electricity Generating Plants

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the installed capacities of electricity generating plants in the United Kingdom of the generating and regional companies using gas for steam and gas turbines respectively; and what capacity of the former was initially installed for burning coal.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: There are at present two combined cycle gas-fired stations in operation in England and Wales:

Organisation	Location	Estimated capacity (MW)
Lakeland Power	Roosecote, Cumbria	235
PowerGen plc	Killingholme, South Humberside	450 (1st unit)

One—Roosecote—is on the site of an earlier coal-fired station.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what instruction, advice or guidance he has given to the main electricity generating undertakings, and regional electricity companies respectively, concerning the short or long-term sources of their fuel supplies, since the privatisation of the electricity production and supply industry.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: I am not in a position to give instructions to private sector companies. I have made clear to all concerned the importance I attach to seeing contracts put in place as soon as possible which will provide stability to the coal industry over the next few years and bring benefits to electricity customers.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the number and total installed capacity of power stations converted or built to use gas as a fuel since the abolition of the Central Electricity Generating Board, stating in broad terms the number and capacity installed by each of the new national and regional electricity undertakings, and others respectively, and the range of gas price per gigajoule paid.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Gas-fired power stations—above 50MW—in England and Wales, commissioned since 31 March 1990 were:

Organisation	Location	Estimated capacity (MW)
Lakeland Power	Roosecote, Cumbria	235
PowerGen plc	Killingholme, South Humberside	450 (1st unit)

Gas prices are a commercial matter for the companies concerned.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total capacity of those coal-fired power stations due to be closed by the main generating undertakings, consequent to their planned reductions in coal burn for 1993, giving the capital cost per megawatt, and fuel cost per gigajoule respectively, for the most efficient coal and gas-fired power stations now available for construction at current gas and United Kingdom produced coal prices respectively.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: These are commercial matters for the generating companies.

Agencies and Trading Funds

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the outturn income and receipts for 1990-91 and 1991-92, projected outturns for 1992-93, and plans for subsequent years for the agencies and trading funds responsible to his Department.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Details that the hon. Gentleman has asked to be published can be found in table 16 on page 20 of the publication entitled "Trade and Industry—The Government's Expenditure Plans 1992-93 to 1994-95", Cm 1904, dated February 1992. A copy of this publication, which is updated annually, is in the House's Library.

SPUR Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the total of applications, offers and payments made under the SPUR scheme as at 1 October 1992, the same information for each region and each region's share of the total.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Applications, offers and payments made under the Support for Products under Research—SPUR—scheme as at 1 October 1992 were as follows:

Region	Applications Number	Applications Per cent. of total	Offers Number	Offers Value £ million	Offers Per cent. of total by value	Payments Value £ million	Payments Per cent. of total

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Cousins: To ask the president of the Board of Trade if he will publish tables showing the total of payments under the enterprise initiative programme by 31 March 1992, the total payments to projects in each region, and payments during 1991-92 in total and for each region, together with the projected outturn total spend for 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Total payments on enterprise initiative consultancy projects from the launch of the scheme in 1988 up to the end of March 1992 amounted to £142·3 million. In the 1991-92 financial year payments reached a total of £52·1 million, and the current forecast for 1992-93 is £57·1 million. Regional breakdowns of project payments for the period to 31 March 1992, and for 1991-92, are as follows. An accurate regional breakdown for 1992-93 will not be available until the end of the current financial year.

Coal Mining

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will summarise the use made by any Government of a member state of the European Community of any provision they make for national support for the coal mining industry, stating the approximate price and percentage assistance per tonne, and per gigajoule respectively.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The amount of subsidy for current caol production in 1990 for relevant European Community member states was as follows:

	£ per tonne
Belgium	55
France	10
Germany	39
Spain	19

Source: European Commission.

The United Kingdom does not provide subsidies for current production. Agreed Community policy is to restructure the coal industries towards economic viability and to eliminate such subsidies.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the articles in any treaty of the European Communities and any regulation or directive applied in this respect which permit any national supports for the deep coal mining industry, or public support for any form of electricity generation.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Article 4 of the treaty of Paris, which established the European Coal and Steel Community treaty, declared that aid to member states' coal industries was incompatible with the common market in coal. Nevertheless, a series of decisions of the Council have recognised that in order to adapt the level of production it was necessary to allow such aid, and laid down the conditions which should be satisfied, which included the authorisation of the Commission. The current decision—2064/86/ECSC—stipulates that for aid to be authorised by the Commission, it must help to achieve one or more of the following objectives:

Improvement of competitivity of the coal industry, which contributes to assure a better security of supply.

Creating new capacities provided that they are economically viable.

Solving the social and regional problems related to developments in the coal industry.

EMPLOYMENT

Young People at Work

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she intends to preside in her capacity as president in office of the Social Affairs Council over a discussion on the proposed Council directive on the protection of young people at work;

(2) if she will make a statement about Government policy towards the proposed EC Council directive on the protection of young people at work;

(3) what is her view on the European Commission's proposals in the draft directive on the protection of young people at work as it concerns (a) night work, (b) rest time, (c) rest period and (d) paid leave.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Discussion of this directive is still at a very early stage. The European Parliament has not yet delivered its opinion and the Commission's proposals may be revised before they are considered by the Council. The agenda for the Social Affairs Council in December has not yet been finalised.

The Government question on the ground of subsidiarity the need for EC legislation on young people's employment. In the United Kingdom the health and safety and educational interests of children below the minimum school leaving age are protected by existing legislation. Young employees above the minimum school leaving age are in general covered by the same legislation as adults in the same occupations. Specific health and safety protection for young employees in the United Kingdom is based on factors distinguishing them from adults. The Government also question whether the Commission's current proposal on night work, rest time, rest periods and paid leave are justified on these grounds.

Social Fund Grants

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the procedure by which colleges of further and higher education should in future apply for European social fund grants once these cease to come through local education authorities; and if she will make it her policy that existing ESF funded courses will continue to be so funded.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Local authorities have offered to continue to handle applications for European social fund grants for courses at colleges of further education for the whole of 1993. Arrangements for applications thereafter will depend upon the results of the forthcoming Community-level review of the EC structural funds, which are due to take effect from January 1994 onwards. The Government will consult closely with all concerned as to arrangements to apply then.

Labour Statistics

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the number of young people seeking a youth training place in Birmingham for the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the current number of job vacancies in the travel-to-work areas which include the coal mines which British Coal has announced will close; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Max Madden dated 20 October

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the number of current job vacancies within the travel to work areas for the coal mines which British Coal has announced will close. This is something which falls within the responsibilities she has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

I attach a table showing the number of vacancies unfilled at Jobcentres on 2nd October 1992, the last statistical count date, for each of the relevant travel to work areas. All of the travel to work areas are included as requested although following the statement by the President of the Board of Trade on 19 October only 8 of these areas have a colliery now designated for closure after the statutory consultation period has been completed.

It is not possible to provide information on the total number of job vacancies available in the labour market but it is estimated that about one third of all vacancies are notified to Jobcentres.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Dentists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will announce measures to alleviate the shortage of manpower in dentistry in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department has recently reminded family health services authorities in Wales that they can apply for permission to employ salaried dentists in areas where there is a serious shortage of general dental practitioners. One FHSA has already been given permission to employ salaried dentists and one other application is under consideration.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total number of sites of special scientific interest in Wales and the number of these that have been (a) partially and (b) wholly damaged.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are 845 sites of special scientific interest in Wales. Since 1985, when formal monitoring began, 137 SSSIs have at some time been damaged and one SSSI has been lost.

Coal Industry

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes in response to recent developments affecting the coal industry in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I recognise that the closures of Betws and Taff Merthyr will have a severe impact on the local economies affected and I am determined that the maximum possible help will be made available to the individuals and communities involved.

The Government have already announced a comprehensive range of services for those affected by the closures, covering in particular their counselling and retraining needs and the assistance they will need to find secure new employment. The training and enterprise councils have a key role to play here.

I have already met the chairmen of the West Wales and Mid Glamorgan TECs and asked them to let me have within two weeks action plans covering all unemployed people in the closure areas and any redundant miners who live outside them. I expect the action plans to address not only the labour market issues but also, in conjunction with the Welsh Development Agency, proposals for business development and the creation of new jobs.

Although the Government have announced a moratorium on the proposed closure of Point of Ayr, I have met the chairman of the North East Wales TEC and asked his TEC to prepare a contingency plan for that area.

To assist implementation of these plans, I have arranged for up to £4·8 million for employment and training measures to be made available over the next 18 months.

I am also concerned to tackle the regeneration of the areas affected and secure their economic, social and environmental development. In particular:

I am making a special allocation of £2·5 million in 1992-93 under the urban programme and I am inviting the local authorities to let me have urgent proposals on how these funds can most effectively be used;

European funding has an important contribution to make. I hope shortly to announce agreement to 80 projects including European Regional development fund grants of over £15 million in the areas affected. In addition, a further £2·8 million is available under the ERDF and, in the light of recent decisions, I shall be exploring with local authorities and other partners how these funds can best be deployed.

In Wales we have the Welsh Development Agency which, with its record budget of £167 million, is already heavily engaged in these areas.

I have discussed with the chairman of the agency its plans taking account of current developments. Overall decisions on the future budget of the WDA have still to be taken as part of the public expenditure round, but I can announce now that the WDA will be spending £33 million over the next 18 months on a range of measures which will assist economic development in the areas concerned. This will include about £16 million on land reclamation and urban property development, and nearly £5 million on business support services and £10 million on urban renewal joint venture schemes.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Questions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the numbers of written answers given to each of the top 30 hon. Members in rank order of number of questions tabled (a) during the 1991-92 session and (b) in the 1992-93 session up to 16 July.

Mr. Newton: The Members receiving the most answers to written questions in session 1991-92, as recorded on the House of Commons Library's POLIS database, were as follows:

Agencies (Letters to Members)

Mr. Page: To ask the Lord President of the Council how the Government intend to respond to the decision of the Administration Committee that letters sent to hon. Members by agency chief executives in response to parliamentary questions should be printed among the written answers in the daily Official Report.

Mr. Newton: The Government welcome the Administration Committee's decision, which was set out by the Committee's Chairman in a previous written answer, Official Report 16 July 1992, column 941. The decision meets the Government's aim that replies from agency chief executives should be more readily accessible. while recognising the direct operational responsibilities of chief executives.

Officials from the Office of Public Service and Science have been discussing the practical implications with the Official Report and with Departments and agencies. Guidance has been issued to allow the new arrangements to come into effect as from the beginning of the new term. The Government will keep the working of the new arrangements under review.

The arrangements apply to questions tabled on operational matters for which responsibility has been delegated by Ministers to agency chief executives. It remains open to hon. Members to write to chief executives direct on such matters and I would encourage them to do so wherever they judge it appropriate.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Water Services

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what were the standard costs of mains water and sewerage installation in the constituency of South Down from 1 April 1980 to 31 March 1992;

(2) what are the current standard costs of mains water and sewerage installation in respect of domestic properties in the constituency of South Down.

Mr. Atkins: The tables show the Department of the Environment's tariffs for connections to public water mains and sewers from 1980 to 1992. The tariffs are the same for all areas of Northern Ireland and cover the cost of time taken and fittings supplied by the Department for the connection between the two pipes.

Since 1988, where the connecting pipe to a water main is over 25 mm in diameter or, in the case of a sewer over 150 mm in diameter, the charge levied is the actual cost to the Department in carrying out the connection.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the numbers of patients waiting for out-patient treatment on 31 March for each individual health authority (a) in total and (b) by main speciality for periods (i) under 12 months, (ii) 12 to 24 months and (iii) over 24 months.

Mr. Hanley: Information on waiting times for first out-patients appointments is not held centrally.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the numbers of patients waiting for in-patient treatment on 31 March for each individual health authority (a) in total and (b) by main specialty for periods (i) under 12 months, (ii) 12 to 24 months and (iii) over 24 months.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is given in the tables.

Housing

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the number of Housing Executive properties (a) demolished and (b) replaced in each of the Province's local authority catchment areas for each year since and including 1979.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the information which is readily available is as follows:

Note (1) This does not cover the Housing Executive's total new build programme but relates mainly to the replacement of dwellings in redevelopment areas and of unfit dwellings in housing action areas. It also includes replacement dwellings for the demolition of obsolete purpose-built stock such as Orlit dwellings, aluminium bungalows and rural cottages.

Anaesthetists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by regional health board the current establishment requirement for anaesthetists; and what is the number in post.

Mr. Hanley: No establishment requirement figure is set by the Department. The table gives the number of consultant anaesthetists, expressed in the form of "whole-time equivalent", for each health and social services board as at 30 June 1992, the latest date for which figures are available.

Health and Social Services Board	Consultant Anaesthetists

Newtownbreda Bomb

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes were damaged as a result of the terrorist bomb explosion at Newtownbreda on Wednesday 23 September; which public services were present in Belvoir estate on Thursday 24 September to assist those who had suffered damages; what arrangements have been made to either rehouse house owners or repair the homes of house owners; and if he will arrange for immediate interim compensation payments to those who have experienced loss as a result of this bomb.

Mr. Atkins: The number of homes damaged at Newtownbreda is estimated to be 1,002 of which approximately 10 per cent. were seriously damaged, 40 per cent. were moderately damaged and 50 per cent. suffered minor damage.

Officials from the following public services were present on 24 September:

1. The Compensation Agency
2. The Northern Ireland Housing Executive
3. The Social Security Agency
4. The Eastern Health and Social Services Board
5. The South-Eastern Education and Library Board
6. The Royal Ulster Constabulary
7. Castlereagh Borough Council
8. Northern Ireland Fire Authority
9. The Department of the Environment.

In addition, 500 meals were provided by Purdysburn and Belvoir Park hospitals on 24 September.

Twenty-four houseowners were rendered homeless as a result of the explosion; three of these have been found temporary accommodation in the Belvoir/Cregagh area, and 11 have been allocated mobile homes sited in the area until such times as the repairs to their own homes are completed. The remaining houseowners have made their own arrangements. Eighteen families in Housing Executive properties were similarly affected and have either made their own arrangements or been found alternative accommodation by the executive.

The Northern Ireland Housing Executive carried out first-aid repairs to approximately 300 owner-occupied houses and to 574 of its own houses. The executive is currently carrying out permanent repairs to its own houses and estimates that all its houses will have been repaired by Christmas. In addition, the executive has been authorised to carry out permanent repairs to private houses, under the special arrangements announced by the Secretary of State, if requested by the owners.

Following the explosion, the Compensation Agency had an incident team of eight people together with a team of 18 loss adjusters working on site by midday on 24 September. The agency has manned an information point in Belvoir activity centre until 15 October and loss adjusters remain on site to assist the public in furthering their claims. As at 14 October 890 notifications to claim compensation have been received and the agency has advanced £30,714 as interim payments. Everything possible continues to be done to ensure that interim payments are made speedily to those in need.

Eye Operations

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been on the waiting list for eye operations at the Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast in each of the past five years.

Mr. Hanley: The numbers of persons waiting for in-patient treatment in ophthalmology at the Royal Victoria hospital in each of the last five years were as follows:

Position at 31 March	Numbers waiting
1988	1,610
1989	2,572
1990	3,083
1991	3,752
1992	3,639

Exact numbers waiting for eye operations are not available.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Civil Servants' Shareholdings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what guidance, other than the civil service pay and conditions of service code and the establishment officers' guide, his Department provides relating to civil servants' shareholdings; if he will list the number of occasions within the past five years on which civil servants have reported shareholdings to establishment officers in his Department; what regulations apply to the staff of the next steps agencies within his Department; what mechanisms are in place to prevent potential conflicts of interest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department's guidance is contained in the departmental personnel management manual which is based on the code and guide. There have been no reports of shareholdings to establishment officers in the last five years.

The code and guide regulations apply to the next steps agencies as to the rest of the Department.

The personnel management manual and next steps agency regulations require all staff to consult personnel if a shareholding might raise a question of possible conflict.

TRANSPORT

Railway Investment

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing state investment in national railway networks in each of the 12 Community countries in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not readily available.

Traffic Accidents

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the past five years the numbers of people (a) killed and (b) sustaining serious injury, where excessive vehicle speed has been a contributory factor; and if he will provide a breakdown of those figures according to the number of incidents involving motor cycles and each other convenient type of vehicle.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This information is not collected by the Department, but we estimate that about one third of all serious accidents are caused by excessive speed.

Environmental Protection

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the initiatives relating to environmental protection taken by his Department since the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development; and what further proposals he plans for 1992-93.

Mr. MacGregor: Speed limiters for new heavy goods vehicles were introduced on 1 August. Certain existing vehicles over 16 tonnes will be required to have speed limiters from 1 August 1993. These measures will improve fuel consumption and reduce emissions.

On 1 September a metered smoke test was introduced into the annual roadworthiness test for heavy goods vehicles. A similar test will be introduced for diesel engined cars and light vans from 1 January 1993.

From the end of this year most new cars will require catalytic converters to meet tighter EC emissions standards. The United Kingdom Government continue to press for even tighter emissions and noise standards for vehicles and to discuss with other member states and the Commission measures to improve the fuel efficiency of new cars.

We are working on a number of other initiatives for 1992-93, including the publication of an updated manual of environmental appraisal. The White Paper "This Common Inheritance—The Second Year Report" gives further information about our work to reduce the impact of transport on the environment.

Bus Deregulation

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to consult on the consequences of bus deregulation.

Mr. Freeman: I am reviewing the operation of bus deregulation to see whether some minor modifications to the system might be appropriate. A consultation paper will be issued in due course.

Leicester Roads

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the origin/destination surveys were carried out on the A47, A6 and A46 on vehicles approaching Leicester; what were the results; and if further surveys will be carried out at a later date.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The most recent origin and destination surveys on the A47, A6 and A46 were carried out in 1988. The surveys showed that through journeys on each of these routes were relatively low. Further surveys will be carried out.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Citizens Charter)

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the citizen's charter applies to the rights of prisoners and, in particular, their dietary requirements.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Yes. The principles of the citizen's charter fully extend to all those held in custody. A code of standards will be published by the end of 1993 and will include a range of standards relating to dietary requirements.

Muslim Prisoners

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in what circumstances any prisoner who is a Muslim is entitled to have halal meat at any meal; what alternatives are available; and if he will make a statement;

(2) for what reasons Muslim prisoners at Armley prison cannot obtain halal meat at weekday meals; what plans exist to change this situation; and whether the current instruction is consistent with the prison dietary scale.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Prison service standing orders provide that prisoners are entitled to a diet which accords with the requirements of their religion as agreed between a relevant religious body and prison service headquarters. The directory and guide on religious practices in the prison service sets out the permitted observances and facilities for Muslim prisoners, as agreed with the Islamic Cultural Centre. This provides that prison establishments should seek to provide halal meat on a number of days each week. Where halal meat is not available and other meat is not acceptable, a vegetarian diet should be provided. The arrangements at Her Majesty's prison, Leeds accord with these requirements. Halal meat is provided at the weekends; otherwise a vegetarian diet is available in accordance with the dietary scales.

British National Party

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer of 13 July, Official Report, column 497, if he will make available in the Library copies of those documents seized by the Metropolitan police from the headquarters of the British National party.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The documents which were seized by the Metropolitan police are with the police at Bexleyheath awaiting collection by the British National party.

The documents consist of samples of a large number of different British National party publications which are available from the British National party bookshop. The Home Office has no copies of the documents to make available to the Library.

Carl Bridgewater

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete his consideration of the Carl Bridgewater convictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: This complex case is being considered with every care and expedition and I hope to be in a position to reach a decision soon.

Racially Inflammatory Publications

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to seek to amend the Public Order Act 1986 to increase its effectiveness in dealing with racially inflammatory publications.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government deplore any actions and publications which are likely or intended to stir up racial hatred. We believe that part III of the Public Order Act 1986 has played an important part in deterring them, but it is for the police and prosecuting authorities to decide whether proceedings should be taken in any particular case. We shall continue to keep the legislation and its operation under review, but we have no present plans for amending it.

Fire Brigades (Fleet Maintenance)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement outlining the procedures to be followed in the event of a company which had gained a tender for the fleet management of fire brigade vehicles subsequently getting into financial difficulties and having its assets seized while still maintaining the tender.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Compulsory competitive tendering for maintaining fire brigade vehicles remains under review, but there are no plans to require tendering for fleet management.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received concerning the implementation of compulsory competitive tendering in the fire service; and how many of these representations have called for the upkeep of fire engines to be made exempt from compulsory tendering arrangements.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: With the exception of Hertfordshire fire authority, all fire authorities and other fire service representative bodies in England and Wales have expressed opposition to compulsory competitive tendering for the maintenance of their vehicle fleets.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the direct fleet maintenance costs for fire brigade vehicles in each fire brigade authority in Wales; and if he will outline the comparable direct costs for each fire brigade authority area which has put tenders out to external companies in England.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about costs of brigade vehicle fleet maintenance is not available centrally.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the fire brigades in Wales which are currently able to identify unit costs throughout their fleet management organisations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Of the eight brigades in Wales, four are currently able to identify their brigade vehicle fleet unit costs, one will have identifiable costs by April 1993 and three are within their local authority costing schemes.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of staff employed by his Department currently specialise on electoral issues; of those staff members how many are responsible for accessibility to the electoral process for disabled people; and what plans he has to increase staff numbers in this area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are currently four members of staff who spend all or most of their time on electoral matters. All include voting rights for disabled people among their responsibilities. There are no plans to increase staffing levels.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to undertake regular consultation with representative groups and organisations concerning the accessibility of the electoral process for disabled people.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We already consult some groups representing disabled people on matters in which they have an interest. We would welcome an approach from any others who wish to bring their particular concerns to our attention, or to offer their special expertise.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to conduct sample surveys on the accessibility of polling stations before, during and after each round of local, general and European elections.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Sample surveys would not be an effective use of our resources in this area, which are better directed to providing financial support. It is our long-term aim to have all polling stations capable of easy access by disabled electors, and we issue regular reminders to district and London borough councils of their obligation to designate as polling places, so far as is reasonable and practicable, only places which are accessible to the disabled.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to review the implementation of schedule 4 to the amended Representation of the People Act 1985, concerning the accessibility of polling stations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We keep all electoral law and practice under regular review. We are currently undertaking a comprehensive review in the light of experience at the general election in April.

Remand Prisoners

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his Department has made in implementing the recommendations of the Woolf report on remand prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Progress has been as follows:

- (a) The assisted prison visits scheme was extended from 1 April 1991 to apply to the families of unconvicted prisoners from the date of the prisoner's reception into custody.
- (b) Guidance on visits by relatives and friends of unconvicted prisoners on the lines recommended in the Woolf report was issued to governors in May 1991.
- (c) A statement of principle on unconvicted prisoners has been adopted, as announced on 15 July in the reply I gave to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) at column 783.
- (d) Bail information schemes are now in operation at 18 local prisons and remand centres and are under consideration at a similar number. The aim is to have schemes at all such establishments by 1995.
- (e) The particular needs of unconvicted prisoners are covered
    - (i) in a model regime for local prisons and remand centres, which is about to be issued as a framework for planning enhanced regimes, and
    - (ii) in guidance to be issued shortly on the management of reception and induction arrangements.

Action is in hand on other aspects of the Woolf report relating to unconvicted prisoners, as indicated in the White Paper "Custody, Care and Justice".

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information his Department holds about the number of remand prisoners in the United Kingdom currently being held in the same cells as convicted prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the number of remand prisoners sharing cells with convicted prisoners is not collected centrally. The prison service seeks to keep unconvicted and convicted prisoners separate but the two classes of prisoner are held in the same wings, and occasionally even share cells, where the alternative would be to increase the overcrowding of part of the prisons or lead to prisoners being held in police cells. In particular, prisoners being segregated for their own protection may be mixed in this way because of limited accommodation.

Murder Statistics

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average period served in custody by those convicted for murder in the latest convenient period for which figures are available and in respect of whom there is no recommendation for a minimum period of detention.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: According to the records held centrally, which are approximate, the average time served under sentence in prison service establishments by murderers first released on licence in 1991 was 11·8 years. This figure excludes one prisoner who was the subject of a formal minimum recommendation under section 1(2) of the Murder (Abolition of Death Penalty) Act 1965.

Prisoners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by (a) sex and (b) year for the last four years, the percentage of prisoners sentenced to prison who have had no previous convictions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available for 1991. Information for 1987 to 1990 is given in the table. This is based on figures published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales"—tables 3.11, 4.9 and 5.9 of the 1990 issue, Cm 1800.

House Fires

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government is taking to reduce to risks of death or injury through fire in the home, in particular among elderly people.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office provides multi-media publicity on fire safety in the home which is targeted at various age groups. Part of that material is specifically for the elderly age group and provides general guidance on fire prevention and fire safety in the home.

The Home Office targeted its 1990-91 and 1991-92 national television advertising campaigns on smoke alarms primarily at elderly people and their carers. The elderly are the group most at risk from fire and among the least likely to purchase alarms. Fire brigades make the maximum use of the available material in their own localities.

There is legislation in place in respect of residential care homes for elderly people which, among other things, makes provision for fire precautions. Such legislation is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Escaped Prisoners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by (a) category, (b) sex and (c) length of time at large, the number of escaped prisoners that are currently on the run; and what are the corresponding figures for 12 months ago.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information relates to prisoners who escaped between 20 June 1988 and 31 August 1992. During this period 1,461 prisoners escaped from prison or prison custody. By 31 August 1992, 1,348 had been recaptured or returned to custody and three were known to be dead, leaving only 110 either at large or unaccounted for. The average time that the 1,348 who were recaptured spent at large was 29·5 days. Of the 110 still at large, 101 are male and nine female; two were remand prisoners provisionally regarded as category A; 10 category B; 53 category C; two category D; and 43 were not categorised, being either remand prisoners, convicted young offenders or women who were not category A or civil prisoners. Corresponding figures for 12 months ago are not available.

Religious Discrimination

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to prevent religious discrimination in employment due to certain unavailability for work due to religious observation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Commission for Racial Equality's second review of the Race Relations Act 1976, presented to the Government on 9 September, recommended that legislation against religious discrimination be given further consideration. We will be looking carefully at the recommendations contained in that review, but the Government have no plans at present to introduce such legislation.

The Government believe that it is for employers to agree with employees arrangements for meeting religious needs. For example, employers might consider whether they can vary or adapt working patterns or facilities to help meet such needs. The Government encourage this voluntary approach, for example, through the guidance pack published recently by the Employment Department and entitled "Equal Opportunities—Ten Point Plan for Employers".

Police Cells

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much his Department paid each police force for holding people in police cells in the first six months of the current financial year;

(2) how many individual prisoners were held in police cells in each police authority area in England and Wales in each of the first six months of the current financial year who would normally be held in prison accommodation;

(3) how many prisoner-nights in police cells were covered in each police force area in England and Wales on each of the first six months of the current financial year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is given in the tables. Information on individual prisoners is not collected centrally.

Prisoners (Clothes)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether prisoners will be allowed to wear their own clothes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The White Paper "Custody, Care and Justice, the Way Ahead for the Prison Service in England and Wales" announced that the Government aim progressively to allow convicted male prisoners to wear their own clothes if they wish; female prisoners and unconvicted male prisoners are already allowed to wear their own clothes. Prisoners at HMP Belmarsh have been allowed to wear their own clothes since the prison opened last year, and similar arrangements will apply at High Down and Woodhill prisons when they open this year. Formal trials are being set up in HMP Wellingborough and in Huntercombe and Finnamore Wood young offender institutions to assess the implications of a more general move towards prisoners wearing their own clothes.

The White Paper also announced that the Prison Service would consider the scope for permitting prisoners to wear specified items of their own clothing, in particular, underwear, socks and shoes, in advance of extending the arrangements to prisoners' outerwear. Prisoners in category C and D establishments, including open young offender institutions, will, where adequate laundering or exchange arrangements can be made locally, be allowed to wear their own socks and underwear. Prisoners in these establishments will also be allowed to have one pair of their own shoes in addition to a prison issued pair.

The scope for further relaxations will be considered in the light of the trials.

Convictions (Safety)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further information he has received concerning the safety of the conviction of Sam Kulasingham and Prem Sivalingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 October 1992]: No information about the safety of these convictions has been received since I answered a question from the hon. Member on 8 June, at column 4. We will give further consideration to this matter as soon as we receive the report from the Essex police to which I then referred.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received into the safety of the conviction of Robert Maynard; if he proposes to refer the case to the Court of Appeal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Representations about the case have been received from solicitors acting for Mr. Maynard—and Mr. Dudley who was convicted with him—and from a number of individuals. As I explained in my reply to a question from the hon. Member on 19 October, at column 59, these representations and the material supplied in support of them are still being examined.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to help secure the release of the 800 individuals removed from Kuwait to Iraq in 1990 and still believed to be held by the Iraqi authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are maintaining pressure on Iraq to fulfil all its obligations under United Nations Security Council resolutions, including the return of Kuwaiti and other nationals still missing in Iraq.

We fully support Kuwait's efforts through the International Committee of the Red Cross to establish the whereabouts of its missing citizens, of whom some 800 are believed to be in Iraq.

We raise this question at each Security Council review of sanctions and will continue to do so until Iraq meets its obligations.

Lorry Blockade, France

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he intends to take to seek compensation from the French Government for British businesses and tourists who suffered financial loss during the recent French lorry drivers' dispute.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have been asked to reply.

We made it clear to the French Government in July that British hauliers would be lodging claims for compensation with the French Government and that we supported these claims. Other countries acted similarly. Regrettably, the French Government have said that they do not intend to pay compensation, though they have not yet responded to all the claims submitted.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated cost to the United Kingdom of implementing title XII on trans-European networks proposed under the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply. The Maastricht treaty does not specify any particular level of expenditure for trans-European networks. The European Community's spending plans for the next few years are presently being considered on the basis of the Commission's proposal in document COM(92)2000; however, decisions have yet to be taken.

DEFENCE

RAF Wattisham

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of RAF Wattisham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department has been looking at possible defence uses for RAF Wattisham after the withdrawal of the Phantom force by mid-1993. I have now decided that two regiments of the Army Air Corps should be based at Wattisham. There are currently two Army Air Corps regiments based in the United Kingdom, at Netheravon and Dishforth. Under "Options for Change", this will increase to four regiments on the redeployment of two of the three regiments currently based in Germany. RAF Wattisham has been identified as the most cost-effective option for an operational base for the two regiments returning from Germany and their support units. The units co-locating at RAF Wattisham will be 3 and 4 Regiments AAC, 71 Aircraft Workshops and 2 Aircraft Support Unit. In addition, two RAF search and rescue Sea King helicopters will move to Wattisham in 1994. It is too early to say what the detailed implications will be for the staff at RAF Wattisham. Full consultation will take place with the trades unions concerned in accordance with agreed procedures. There will also be some other rationalisation moves within United Kingdom: one squadron from 7 Regiment at Netheravon will join 9 Regiment at Dishforth and will be replaced by one of the three new TA flights being formed in 1993. The other two TA flights will be based at RAF Shawbury and RAF Turnhouse.

RAF Search and Rescue

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what conclusions he has reached on the future basing structure of the RAF search and rescue force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have given careful consideration to the future deployment of the RAF SAR force in the light of the reduction in military flying flowing from the conclusions of "Britain's Defence for the Nineties" and the civil helicopter coverage criteria agreed by the helicopter coverage group in 1986. These proposals have been discussed with colleagues at the Department of Transport who have agreed my proposed way forward.

The size of the RAF SAR helicopter force, which is funded from the defence budget, is based on the wartime requirement. Taking all the relevant factors into account I have confirmed that the RAF now requires an all Sea King SAR fleet of a minimum of 25 aircraft to meet the war requirement in the United Kingdom. The intention to order an additional six Sea Kings was announced by the then Minister of State for Defence Procurement in the House on 19 February, Official Report, column 332.

The RAF Sea King force makes an important contribution to the civil SAR services for which the Department of Transport and others are responsible. SAR helicopters are also provided by both the Royal Navy and Her Majesty's coastguard, through a contractor. All these elements combine to provide the Great Britain civil SAR helicopter service.

In order to maximise the flexibility of response to SAR incidents in Great Britain, the practice of basing two aircraft at each flight to provide back-up will be continued. This approach allows flights to respond to concurrent incidents, and in the case of major rescues, to maintain area SAR cover while several SAR helicopters are deployed to assist. It also represents the most cost-effective means of providing area SAR cover. In accordance with the criteria agreed by the helicopter coverage group, during the day one helicopter will continue to be at 15 minutes notice and a second at 60 minutes notice at each station. At night one helicopter will continue to be at 45 minutes notice. As at present, the very great majority of our territorial waters can be covered within this time scale.

The new basing structure is based primarily, as now, on both the areas of high-intensity military flying and the established civil SAR criteria. The RAF assets will be deployed so far as possible to maximise the military contribution to the civil SAR response which is the responsibility of the Department of Transport. This will involve some new arrangements; a new SAR flight will be established at RAF Wattisham, while RAF Chivenor and Valley will benefit by upgrading of their flights with Sea Kings. RAF Leconfield, Lossiemouth and Boulmer will retain their Sea King flights. The flights at RAF Brawdy, Coltishall, Manston and Leuchars will be withdrawn or transferred. This deployment will ensure that the RAF continues to make virtually the same contribution to meeting the criteria laid down by the helicopter coverage group as at present. The flights at RAF Brawdy and Manston will not be withdrawn until April 1994 and mid-1994 respectively, shortly before the RNLI's planned deployment of new, more capable, fast all-weather boats to south-west Wales and Kent later that year.

Complete details of the changes and an explanation of the reasoning behind them are set out in an open government document entitled "The Future Provision of RAF SAR Helicopters", copies of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

The move to an all Sea King SAR helicopter force represents a significant improvement by making this highly capable aircraft more widely available throughout Britain for civil and military missions. Without compromising its military effectiveness, the RAF has sought to deploy these assets in a way which maximises their effectiveness for civil and military SAR operations. The future force will therefore continue to make a very substantial contribution to civil SAR in and around Great Britain.

My Department is also considering the future arrangements for the co-ordination of the military response to SAR incidents by means of the rescue co-ordination centres. Once I have reached my conclusions on this issue I shall inform the House.

The Ministry of Defence and the Department of Transport believe that with the military and the Department of Transport helicopters, the RNLI and HM coastguard a good SAR service will continue to be provided to meet the requirements of the civil community.

Dismounted Public Duties

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the review of dismounted public duties was completed; and with what results.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: After consultation with the royal household, the Metropolitan police and other Departments, a number of measures have been identified which will reduce requirements for the employment of Foot Guards manpower on public duties while maintaining essential security and appropriate ceremonial. Her Majesty the Queen has graciously agreed to these measures and they will be implemented between now and 1994. A document providing the full details is being placed in the Library of the House.

Airborne Warning and Communication System

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the defence contracts placed by United States purchasing authorities as part of the offset for the AWACS early warning contract placed with Boeing; what is the value of each contract and the total value; and to what extent this achieves the target for offsetting contracts agreed between the United States and the United Kingdom Governments.

Mr. Aitken: As I announced in the House on 20 May, Hansard, volume 208, column 190, Boeing has now met its obligation under its industrial participation agreement with my Department. The agreement required Boeing and its subcontractors to offer competitive bidding opportunities to British defence companies, and United States purchasing authorities were not parties to it. Details of individual contracts remain commercially confidential.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes have been treated and what amount has been spent under the home energy efficiency scheme in each network installer area in Scotland since 1 January 1991.

Mr. Maclean: The figures are as follows:

Network installer area	Homes treated	Amount spent in £
1 Borders/Lothian	2,259	240,635
2 West Lothian/Edinburgh	3,413	385,948
3 Dumfries/Strathclyde	714	97,330
4 Strathclyde	1,533	279,655
5 Strathclyde West	4,157	533,451
6 Strathclyde East	8,265	772,086
7 Strathclyde/Glasgow North	4,392	472,284
8 Strathclyde/Glasgow East	4,787	539,975
9 Strathclyde/Glasgow South	1,224	136,331
10 Strathclyde Central	1,939	205,350
11 Fife	4,260	468,691
12 Tayside	3,641	379,517
13 Grampian	3,447	378,435
14 Grampian Highlands	1,429	157,025
15 Shetland Islands	—	—
16 Orkney Islands	145	31,085
17 Western Islands	—	—
Total	45,605	5,077,798

The original area 14 was divided into four on 14 December 1991. No suitable bid for registration as a network installer for the Western Isles has since been received. A network installer was registered for Shetland islands in April this year.

Housing (Pregnant Women)

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many pregnant women were successfully prosecuted in 1991 for fraudulent attempts to gain priority status on housing waiting lists in the London borough of Camden.

Mr. Baldry: Such information is not held centrally.

SSSIs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total number of sites of special scientific interest in England and the number of these that have been (a) partially or (b) wholly damaged.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 20 October 1992]: At 31 March 1992, a total of 3,621 SSSIs had been notified in England under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The latest available information on damage to SSSIs is contained in the 17th and final report of the former Nature Conservancy Council, a copy of which is in the Library. Information in respect of the year ending 31 March 1992 is currently being gathered by English Nature and will be published in its first anniversary report to be presented to Parliament later in the year.

EMPLOYMENT

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what financial provisions, and how much, she has made within her Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which she has responsibility.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Employment Department has two central departmental deregulation units—DDUs—one for the Health and Safety Executive and one which deals with the rest of the Department. Staff costs for the DDUs, including economic support is estimated at £57,245.

In addition, all staff in the Department are fully aware of the need to ensure that regulations should not impose unnecessary and costly burdens on businesses, causing damage to competitiveness and job prospects. Ensuring that proposals for new regulations are assessed thoroughly for the costs they will impose on businesses and reviewing existing regulations are an everyday part of the activities of policy sections.

HEALTH

Cycling

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department is carrying out or sponsoring into the health benefits of cycling.

Dr. Mawhinney: The health benefits of safe physical activity are well established. The Allied Dunbar national fitness survey, published in June, includes comprehensive research data on the whole area of safe physical activity. The survey notes that cycling is a good aerobic exercise.

The "Health of the Nation" White Paper commits the Government, in consultation with others, to develop physical activity strategies in the light of the survey results. Work on this is already taking place.

PRIME MINISTER

Yugoslavia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what is the total, to date, of the financial assistance given by Her Majesty's Government to fund the cost of maintaining refugees from the former states of Yugoslavia; what is the total, to date, of financial assistance given by Her Majesty's Government to fund humanitarian relief in the former states of Yugoslavia; and what proposals Her Majesty's Government have for increasing the United Kingdom contribution.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 October 1992]: I announced yesterday an additional bilateral British contribution of £15 million in the light of reports from the International Committee of the Red Cross and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. This brings Britain's total commitment of humanitarian aid for victims of the conflict in former Yugoslavia to over £70 million; of this, £29·5 million is bilateral aid and £41 million our share of European Community actions.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Currency Unit

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest ecu/sterling exchange rate.

Mr. Nelson: The market ecu : sterling exchange rate at the London close on 20 October was 1·2497 ecu per pound.

Bank of England Governor

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what dates he met the Governor of the Bank of England during the period 12 to 18 September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: Throughout the period from 12 to 18 September I was in regular contact with the Governor of the Bank of England.

Currency Intervention

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which spending programmes he estimates will be affected by the expenditure involved in currency intervention in the period 14 to 18 September.

Mr. Nelson: None. The use of foreign currency reserves for intervention purposes involves an exchange of assets and is, therefore, not public expenditure.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the reasons for the Government's practice of not revealing the amount of intervention, gains and losses arising from currency support to the United Kingdom Exchequer.

Mr. Nelson: It has been the long-standing convention of successive Governments not to reveal the extent of intervention. It would not be in the national interest to do so, because the information is market sensitive.

European Central Bank

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what privileges and immunities Her Majesty's Government have assessed to be necessary for the performance of the tasks of the European central bank in the territories of the member states under article 40 of the protocol to the Maastricht treaty on European central banks.

Mr. Nelson: The relevant privileges and immunities are set out in the protocol on the privileges and immunities of the European Communities annexed to the treaty establishing a single Council and a single Commission of the European Communities—sometimes known as the merger treaty. This is published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, No. 152, 13 July 1967, and reproduced in the full edition of "Treaties establishing the European Communities" published by the office for official publications of the European Communities. In addition, the protocol amending the protocol on the privileges and immunities of the European Communities annexed to the treaty on European union would exempt the European central bank from liability to tax on increases in its capital and from liability to turnover tax.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what sanctions exist to ensure the compliance of national central banks with the instructions of the European central bank under article 14.3 of the protocol to the Maastricht treaty on European central banks.

Mr. Nelson: If the European central bank were to consider that a national central bank has failed to fulfil an obligation under the statute, it may bring the matter before the European Court of Justice under the procedure in article 35.6.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to article 15 of the protocol to the Maastricht treaty on European central banks, what (a) efforts have been made to ensure the harmonisation of national central banks' accounting practices and (b) what estimates have been made of the cost of article 15.4.

Mr. Nelson: Article 26.4 of the protocol on the statute of the European system of central banks and of the European central bank—ECB—provides for the governing council of the ECB to establish the necessary rules for standardising the accounting and reporting of national central bank operations.

It is not possible to estimate the cost to the ECB of issuing reports under article 15.4.

Mr. Peter Clowes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 82, what is the current position of repayment made in respect of the court order for interim payment of damages of £6 million made on 13 April against Mr. and Mrs. Clowes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: On 21 September 1992 the Court of Appeal dismissed Mr. Clowes's appeal against the judgment of the court given on 18 March 1992. It also dismissed Mr. Clowes's appeal against the order of the court, made on 13 April 1992, for an interim payment of damages of £6 million.

Currency Speculation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will undertake an analysis of the impact of clearing banks not speculating against the pound but merely dealing for customers with genuine international trading requirements.

Mr. Nelson: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking against British banks which speculated against the pound in the period 14 to 17 September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: It would not be appropriate to take any such steps. It is for banks and other financial institutions to make decisions about the deployment of funds within their control, subject to the framework of law within which they operate, including prudential regulations.

Economists

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many economists are employed in the Treasury; and what is their total remuneration.

Mr. Nelson: There are currently 87 staff working as economists in the Treasury. Their total annual remuneration is about £2,500,000 based on current pay rates.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the (a) total amount invested in the business expansion scheme, (b) amount invested in private rented housing, (c) total cost of tax relief and (d) amount of tax relief in respect of investment in private rented housing for each year from 1987-88 to 1990-91; and for each year of the existence of the business expansion scheme what were the percentage and amounts of BES money invested in residential and assured tenancy schemes and associated revenue forgone by the Exchequer.

Mr. Dorrell: The business expansion scheme was extended to include investment in private rented housing in 1988-89. The latest estimates are as follows.

	Amounts invested			Cost of income tax relief
	Total	of which investment in private rented housing		Total	of which in respect of investment in private rented housing
	£ million	amount (£ million)	per cent.	(£ million)	(£ million)

[1] Provisional estimates.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many new lettings from investments under the business expansion scheme in 1989-90 there were in (a) south-east England and (b) the United Kingdom; and what percentage these figures represent of (i) all privately rented property and (ii) all rented property.

Mr. Dorrell: Provisional estimates for new lettings from investments under the business expansion scheme in 1989-90 are as follows:

	New lettings
		As a percentage of:
	Total number	All privately rented property	All rented property
		Per cent.	Per cent.
South-east England	1,100	0·20	0·05
United Kingdom	3,100	0·18	0·04

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for each year of the existence of the business expansion scheme, what was (a) the regional distribution of BES funds and the associated cost to the Exchequer, (b) the distribution of BES investments by two-digit standard industrial classification and (c) the average size of investments.

Mr. Dorrell: Information on the companies receiving investments through the business expansion scheme is published in chapter 7 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1991". Further information that is readily available is as follows:

[1] Provisional.

Coal Mining

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the loss in all tax revenues because of the recent announcement of job losses in the coal mining industry and the knock-on effects in other industries.

Mr. Dorrell: The effect of job losses on tax revenues depends on a large number of factors and cannot reliably be estimated.

Tobacco

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the total receipts from taxes on tobacco products in the last financial year for which figures are available; and what estimate he can make of the level of such receipts in the current year.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Revenue from excise duties on tobacco products in 1991-92 was £6,288 million. The estimate provided in this year's Financial Statement and Budget Report for these receipts in 1992-93 is £6·6 billion. A more up-to-date estimate will be available after the autumn statement has been published.

Interest Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how many points United Kingdom interest rates have been reduced (a) since leaving the exchange rate mechanism and (b) between joining the ERM and August 1992.

Mr. Nelson [pursuant to his reply, 19 October 1992, c. 188]: On the level of United Kingdom bank base rates, bank base rates were reduced by a further 1 per cent. to 8 per cent. on 16 October.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Southern Africa

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Community, to press the international community to fund the entire $854 million requested in the United Nations and Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference appeal.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have already committed more than £51 million of bilateral aid in response to the drought in southern Africa. From the outset we have played a leading role in urging EC and other donors to contribute generously and we will continue to do so.

Food Security

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Community to press for the structural adjustment programme to include methods of achieving food security.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We hope that the EC Development Council on 18 November, which will be chaired by my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development, will agree on a statement of development co-operation policy for the 1990s. This will set out how the EC's development policy, including assistance for structural adjustment programmes, can best contribute to sustainable development and the relief of poverty, and thus to improving security of access to food for people in developing countries.

Pakistan (Floods)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Department is taking to help alleviate the suffering caused by the recent floods in Pakistan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Britain was the first donor country to provide assistance and, having committed over £475,000, is second only to Japan in the size of its bilateral response to the current flooding. On 12 September we made an initial contribution of $200,000 before any needs assessment had been carried out. When actual needs became clearer, we arranged a charter flight to Lahore delivering tents, blankets, antibiotics and oral rehydration salts—£227,320. Since then we have arranged to deliver further locally available relief supplies in Sindh province through Pakistan non-governmental organisations—£80,000—and made grants available to the following UK non-governmental organisations:

CAFOD
500 tents for Sindh Province	23,768
Adventist Development and Relief Agency
Medicines for Sindh and Punjab	40,000

We continue to monitor the situation and we are actively considering what further assistance we can provide.

Malawi

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations have been made to the Malawi Government about political and religious rights in that country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We made representations with our EC partners reflecting these concerns in December 1991, March and April 1992. These issues were also addressed in bilateral discussions with Malawian Ministers in May and June this year. Further representations are currently being made to the Malawi Government urging them to respond positively to the call from the religious community and other bodies for democratic reform and to lift the ban on the Catholic bishops' pastoral letter.

World Bank Loans

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if human rights issues are taken into account by Her Majesty's Government when considering World bank loans.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom judges all World bank loans on their economic and technical merits, in line with the provisions of the bank's articles of agreement.

Global Environment Facility

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom contribution to the global environment facility will continue to be additional to the overseas aid budget in 1993-94.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom contribution to the global environment facility has been separate from and additional to aid to developing countries and will continue to be so. The amount of resources which we shall provide in 1993-94 has not yet been decided. This will depend on the outcome of talks with the World bank and other donors.

Somalia

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid the Overseas Development Administration has given this year to Somalia; and what plans there are to increase it.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since January the Government have pledged £26 million in humanitarian aid for Somalia. This includes our share of EC aid and a new pledge of £7·5 million which my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development announced on 15 September. The major constraint to the relief effort in Somalia is the volatile security situation, particularly in the centre and south of the country, which are the regions most affected by famine.

Yugoslavia

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what part British aid has played in the provision of relief to the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: To date Her Majesty's Government have committed over £70 million in humanitarian aid for the former Yugoslavia, including the £15 million the Prime Minister announced yesterday. Of this, £29·5 million is bilateral aid and £41 million aid attributable through the European Community.

The £29·5 million bilateral aid is being channelled through the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other United Nation Agencies; Red Cross; British charities, including CARE and Feed the Children; and Overseas Development Administration direct actions.

Direct actions taken so far by the ODA include the provision of 21 British trucks, based in Split as part of UNHCR road delivery operation, running two or three convoys a week to Sarajevo—during the suspension of the airlift, these trucks were Sarajevo's lifeline—five British logisticians seconded to the United Nations; a British road engineer who undertook an assessment for UNHCR of the state of convoy routes in winter; delivery of £1,130,000 of medical supplies to the World Health Organisation in Zagreb following assessment by British medical team which were then distributed throughout Bosnia, including Sarajevo and Gorazde; support to UNHCR and WHO with anaesthetics, computer equipment and specialist advice; funding of two pharmacists and one computer expert working with WHO and one logistics expert assisting WHO with new consignment of medical supplies; a shelter team to identify where the ODA could best help with the "winterisation" of collective centres in central Bosnia—funding for the activities identified will be provided from the £7·5 million which my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development announced on 24 September to allow rapid implementation of the teams recommendations—and mining and power teams for UNHCR to provide assessment of current position and detailed plans for the emergency provision and distribution of fuel for heating during winter months.

In addition, the ODA is in the process of providing a further 22 trucks plus all support staff and vehicles, the first convoy of which is due to leave the United Kingdom on 26 October; all equipment and staff to run one relief warehouse; a further £1 million of medical supplies for WHO, the initial consignment of which will travel with the first truck convoy; 10 Land-Rovers for UNHCR; and 10 extra staff—logisticians/radio operators—for UNHCR.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what quantity and value of food aid has been promised to Somalia by the United Kingdom and EC in the current year; and what quantity and value of food aid has been actually delivered.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 October 1992]: Relevant figures for United Kingdom and EC food aid to Somalia are set out in the table.

Somalia: Food aid: 1992

Donor	Commitments (Tonnes)	Value (£ million)	Deliveries (Tonnes)	Value (£ million)
United Kingdom	34,100	5·8	19,100	2·7
EC	206,386	36·7	105,000	18·7

Madagascar

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Disaster and Natural Resources Institute has received the recommendations of the Food and Agricultural Organisation's locust consultant in relation to Madagascar; and what action he is taking.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 October 1992]: The Natural Resources Institute has received the recommendations of the Food and Agricultural Organisation's locust consultant and has now passed these on to ODA's disaster unit for consideration. We have recently agreed to support a field trial of insect growth regulators—IGR—in collaboration with the FAO. The trial is expected to produce specific recommendations on the use of IGRs in controlling locust populations which can then be implemented within months. We are currently addressing the specific short-term recommendations of the FAO consultant and will make decisions on further United Kingdom support very shortly.

SCOTLAND

Governance

17. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further stock he has taken about the future governance of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

29. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to announce the results of the Government's taking stock exercise with respect to the governance of Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) earlier today.

22. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on holding a multi-option referendum on the future government of Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Since the general election I have received 54 representations calling for a multi-option referendum on the future government of Scotland.

26. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the effect of the implementation of article 3b of the treaty of European union on the governance of Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The proposed new article 3b of the EC treaty refers specifically and exclusively to the relations between the Community and individual member states. It is up to individual member states to order their own constitutional affairs at the national and sub-national level.

Cashmere and Woollen Garments

18. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the value of cashmere and woollen garments sold annually out of Scotland; and what percentage is exported from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I can best answer my hon. Friend's question by referring to the estimate of the Textile Statistics Bureau that, in 1991, exports of woollen and fine animal hair garments from the United Kingdom were in the region of £472 million. Separate figures are not available for Scotland.

Romanian Orphanages

19. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the work done in Romanian orphanages by Scottish charities; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Detailed information on the work done in Romanian orphanages by Scottish charities is not held centrally. A number of Scottish-based organisations have provided and continue to provide valuable aid of various kinds to Romania.

Sub-standard Housing

20. Mr. Donnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses there are in Scotland which are classed as being below tolerable standard.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities estimated that just over 81,100 houses in Scotland fall into this category.

School Management

21. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he received to the consultation paper "School Management: The Way Ahead".

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office education department has received about 1,200 responses to the consultation paper. We will announce our conclusions shortly.

Local Government Finance

23. Ms. Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next meet representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss local government finance.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. McMaster).

Local Government

32. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet with representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss local government services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. McMaster).

Assured Tenancies

24. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many assured tenancies exist within Scottish Homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no assured tenancies within Scottish Homes housing stock; in common with other public sector landlords, Scottish Homes' tenants hold secured tenancies.

Scottish Council (Development and Industry)

25. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet representatives of the Scottish Council (Development and Industry) to discuss the Scottish economy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend expects to meet representatives of the Scottish Council at Gleneagles on 30 October when he will be addressing the Council's international forum.

Grampian Healthcare

27. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on national health service trust status for Grampian Healthcare.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Grampian Healthcare is one of 14 units in Scotland which have applied for national health service trust status in April 1993. The applications are at various stages of public consultation and my right hon. Friend will be announcing his decisions in due course, following careful consideration of comments received.

Youth Training

28. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he intends to take to assist young people in Glasgow which are unable to obtain a place on a youth training scheme.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The delivery of youth training in Glasgow is the responsibility of Scottish Enterprise and the Glasgow development agency, which have assured me that sufficient places are being made available to cater for those young people in Glasgow who wish to enter the programme. A financial safety net is in place, via the income support severe hardship provision, for those who need financial help while waiting for a start on a youth training place.

Roads, Ayrshire

30. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of the roads programme in Ayrshire.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Many improvements are planned to both trunk and local roads in Ayrshire. So far as the trunk road programme is concerned, the upgrading of the A77 between Glasgow and Ayr to motorway or near motorway standard is one of the Government's top priorities. The programme of improvement of local roads within Ayrshire is a matter for Strathclyde regional council, as the local roads authority, to determine. Work is under way on the local authority's section of the Ayr road route between the existing M77 and the Glasgow city boundary. Work on the trunk road section immediately to the south is planned to allow the two sections to open at the same time. The first of the two schemes to upgrade the remainder of the route has been announced for a start in the next three years.

The Government are also pursuing a programme of smaller schemes on other routes within Ayrshire to ensure that they can continue to provide safe and reliable links to the A77 and other strategic trunk roads.

Fishing Policy

31. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet representatives of the west coast fishing industry to discuss fishing policy.

Sir Hector Monro: I regularly meet leaders of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation which speaks for many west coast fishermen. It is my intention to continue to meet fishermen's leaders from all parts of Scotland to hear their concerns.

GP Fund Holders

33. Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioner practices in Scotland have applied to become fund holders; and how many already are fund holders.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Currently there are 10 operational fund-holding practices in Scotland. In addition, 12 practices are involved in a small practice pilot scheme but are not full fund holders.

Latest returns from health boards indicate that 67 practices have applied, and are likely to be approved by boards to become fund-holding practices in 1993, although not all of these will commence fund holding on 1 April. A number of other practices are likely to follow up their expressions of interest and apply to become full fund holders during 1993. It is therefore expected that up to 90 practices will be fund holders by the end of the 1993-94 financial year.

Skye Bridge

34. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress with regard to the Skye bridge construction project.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since construction began at the beginning of July, the contractor has made good progress. It is planned that the caissons for the bridge, which have been constructed at the Kishorn dry dock, will be floated out and sunk at the main pier positions within the Kyle in two to three weeks' time. The precise timing is subject to the prevailing weather and tidal conditions. This will be a very significant step towards the eventual completion of the project programmed for the summer of 1995.

EC Presidency

35. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for promoting Scotland during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Community.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The holding of the European Council in Edinburgh in December offers a tremendous opportunity for promoting Scotland on a world stage. The Scottish Office is working with a number of other organisations to ensure that the most is made of that opportunity. A co-ordinated media strategy is in place, which includes a programme of visits to Scotland by foreign journalists. Scotland is also playing a major role in the programme of presidency special events, of which over 25 have or will take place in Scotland.

Poverty

36. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans the Government have to eradicate poverty in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government's economic policies are designed to sustain long-term growth which will have benefits for all members of society and the defeat of inflation is essential if this is to be achieved. Monetary and fiscal policies will continue to be dedicated to this objective.

A number of Government programmes are designed to address the complex problems of poverty, including the four Scottish Office-led urban partnership initiatives and the urban programme. This has a budget of £81 million in 1992-93—up from £76 million in 1991-92—and provides 75 per cent. central Government support to projects, in all urban areas of exceptional need, which aim to address problems of poverty and disadvantage.

Investment

37. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet the Scottish local authorities to discuss European-funded investment.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Secretary of State meets the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on a regular basis to discuss local government finance in Scotland. At the last three such meetings, the latest of which was held on 5 October, the subject of European-funded investment was discussed. The next meeting has yet to be arranged but it is likely to take place early in the new year.

Cambuslang

38. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for a special industrial and economic agency for Cambuslang.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. Responsibility for the industrial and economic development of Cambuslang, as for other parts of its area, rests with the local enterprise company, Glasgow development agency. The enterprise company is free to determine the priorities and resources available to it and which, in the current financial year, amount to more than £58 million.

Council House Management

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has received to his consultative document on the future of council house management.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The closing date for responses to our consultation paper "Competing for Quality in Housing in Scotland" was 18 September. Around 100 responses have so far been received, and these are currently under consideration.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the numbers of patients waiting for in-patient treatment on 31 March for each individual health authority (a) in total and (b) by main speciality for periods (i) under 12 months, (ii) 12 to 24 months and (iii) over 24 months.

Mr. Allan Stewart: This information is set out in the NHS "Patient Treatment and Waiting Time Bulletin" for 31 March 1992, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the numbers of patients waiting for out-patient treatment on 31 March for each individual health authority (a) in total and (b) by main speciality for periods (i) under 12 months, (ii) 12 to 24 months and (iii) over 24 months.

Mr. Allan Stewart: This information is not centrally available.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he plans to continue the policy of not allowing domestic disconnections from the water supply in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: We have no plans to change the present policy that domestic water supplies provided by water authorities are not subject to disconnection except for operational reasons. My right hon. Friend will shortly be publishing a consultation paper on the future structure of water and sewerage services.

Water and Sewerage Services

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the timetable for consultation on alternative forms of organisation for water and sewerage services in Scotland; what steps he intends to take to ensure maximum possible participation by the general public; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend will shortly publish a consultation paper on the future organisation of water and sewerage services in Scotland. The paper will be made available to all interested parties, including the media and the general public.

Railway Viaduct, Kirkcudbright

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what grounds the Big Water of Fleet railway viaduct near Gatehouse of Fleet, Kirkcudbright was removed from the register of listed structures; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Big Water of Fleet viaduct was removed from the statutory list of buildings of special historic or architectural interest in 1990-91 in the course of the national re-survey. It was assessed as not meeting the standard required to justify its retention on the list because of the extensive use of brick in strengthening the viaduct.

Although it is no longer a listed structure, the viaduct has been recognised by Dumfries and Galloway regional council in the regional structure plan as an important industrial archaeological site. The council also recognises the contribution made by the impressive span of the structure to the high visual and amenity quality of the locality.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Church Fees

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will estimate what would be the additional revenue for the Church Commissioners if the current fees charged for marriage, funerals and baptisms were doubled.

Mr. Alison: Fees for marriages and funerals—they are not charged for baptisms—are paid to the officiating minister and the parochial church council, not to the commissioners.

Total fee income for the year to 31 March 1991 was about £13 million. An increase of 15 per cent. in most fees was implemented from 1 January 1992. It is difficult to know whether a doubling of the fees would result in a pro-rata increase—that is, to about £30 million—because there could be a slackening of demand.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he received the second progress report of his advisory committee on business and the environment; what response he has made; and if he will list those recommendations in the first ACBE report on which his Department has taken action to date.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on Monday 19 October, Official Report, column 227.

Wind Power

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's assessment of the proportion of United Kingdom energy requirements that could be supplied by wind power; and what he is doing to ensure that maximum use is made of this renewable energy source.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 20 October 1992]: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply I gave her on 19 October, Official Report, column 236.

Regional Preferential Assistance

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the amount of regional preferential assistance paid to each standard region of England, Scotland and Wales in each year from 1978-79 in (a) cash and (b) constant prices and with an annual index.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information on regional preferential assistance in each standard region of England, Scotland and Wales from 1978-79 at cash and 1991-92 prices with an annual index is set out in the tables. The expenditure is gross of recoveries. Regional information on a net basis is not readily available.

Notes to tables 1, 2 and 3:

[1] All figures are gross and include payments to nationalised industries.

[2] Includes some minor expenditure in West Midlands in respect of Oswestry TTWA which ceased to be an assisted area in 1982-83.

[3] Certain TTWAs in the West Midlands were designated as assisted areas on 29 November 1984.

[4] Expenditure on a 1991-92 price basis for each year is calculated by applying the appropriate deflator to expenditure at current prices.

[5] Includes expenditure in Cumbria, otherwise shown within the totals for Northern region.

The items included in the expenditure are regional development grants, regional selective assistance and regional enterprise grants; expenditure on Land and factories by the English Industrial Estates Corporation, the Scottish and Welsh Development Agencies, the Development Board for Rural Wales, and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Energy Requirements

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what approximate proportions of national energy requirements, excluding transport, have been supplied by (a) coal, (b) domestically produced petroleum, (c) imported petroleum, (d) domestic natural gas and (e) renewable sources, for each of the past five years; what proportions he expects those sources to supply in the next five years, consequent on the published plans of the bodies concerned; and if he will give the net costs for past years using the actual exchange rates, and, for future years, a range of possible exchange costs likely to be incurred.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Data on final energy consumption in the United Kingdom are published in table 8 of the annual "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics". The shares of final energy consumption, excluding consumption by the transport sector, met by coal, petroleum, natural gas and renewable sources during the period 1987 to 1991 are set out in the table.

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Coal[1]	10·3	9·5	8·6	7·8	7·9
Petroleum	15·3	17·3	15·7	15·2	15·4
Natural gas	46·3	45·0	45·7	47·1	48·1
Renewable sources	0·8	0·8	0·8	0·9	0·8
Percentage share other fuels[2]	27·3	27·4	29·2	29·0	27·8

[1] Excluding other solid fuels.

[2] Includes solid fuels other than coal, coke oven gas and electricity produced from non-renewable sources.

In 1991, approximately 10·1 million tonnes, or 13·6 per cent. of the consumption of petroleum products in the United Kingdom, including that by the transport sector, was met by imported petroleum products. During the same period, exports of petroleum products amounted to approximately 19·4 million tonnes. These figures and data for earlier years are published in tables 33 and A8 of the annual "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics".

In 1991, approximately 89 per cent. of natural gas consumption was domestically produced. This figure and data for earlier years can be derived from table A10 of the annual "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics".

The estimated expenditure on energy by final consumers is published in table 9 of the annual "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics". Figures consistent with the previous table—that is, excluding the transport sector—are set out in the following table.

£ million

	Coal[1]	Petroleum	Natural gas	Renewable sources	Other fuels[2]

[1] Excluding other solid fuels.

[2] Includes solid fuels other than coal, coke oven gas and electricity produced from non-renewable sources.

My Department does not produce forecasts of future energy requirements. However, an indication of the likely range of energy requirements in some possible future energy scenarios can be obtained from Energy Paper No.

59, which was recently published by this Department. A copy of this paper has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Imported Coal

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the main fluctuations in the price—cif—in pounds per tonne, or energy equivalent and an indexed figure, of coal of power station quality available for import into the United Kingdom over the past eight years, the current price and his estimate of trends in future prices in a situation of European or world economic recovery.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The annual average prices for imports of steam coal over the last eight years were:

	£ per tonne (cif)
1984	56·6
1985	47·5
1986	37·2
1987	35·0
1988	36·5
1989	39·0
1990	37·6
1991	33·9
[1]1992	31·2

[1] January to August.

Source: Central Statistical Office.

During this period, monthly average prices have fluctuated between £27·6 per tonne in July 1992 and £69·8 in February 1985, while the price in August 1992, the most recent available was £28·4 per tonne, cif.

My Department does not make forecasts of future fuel prices. However, an indication of the likely range of coal prices in some possible future energy scenarios can be obtained from Energy Paper No. 59, which was recently published by this Department. A copy of this paper has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has of the proportion of coal imports into the United Kingdom for 1991 and the first six months of 1992, respectively, that were carried to the United Kingdom in ships other than those owned or registered in the United Kingdom, stating the approximate non-sterling costs incurred thereby, and his estimate of the range of such transport costs likely to be incurred in 1994 and thereafter.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Imports of coal, coke and briquettes to the United Kingdom both in 1991 and in the first six months of 1992 carried by ships registered outside the United Kingdom amounted to 64 per cent. of the total of these imports. From the information available we are not able to provide a reliable estimate of the non-sterling costs involved.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the tonnes of coal imported into the United Kingdom in the first six months of 1992, and his estimate of the quantities likely in 1993, stating broadly the proportion or quantities from each of the main supplying areas or states.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The breakdown of coal imported into the United Kingdom in the first six months of 1992 by country of origin is as follows:

Country of origin	Quantity (thousand tonnes)	Percentage
United States of America	4,367	39
Australia	2,418	21
Colombia	2,038	18
Former USSR	472	4
Canada	407	4
Poland	469	4
South Africa	403	4
Others	709	6
TOTAL	11,284

Source: Customs and Excise.

The Government do not produce estimates of future coal imports.

Coal Prices

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current price per gigajoule of deep-mined coal sold by British Coal to the main electricity generating undertakings, and the price at 1992 prices expected to be charged following implementation of its plans for pit closures.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The prices paid by the electricity industry to individual coal suppliers are confidential to the companies concerned. The average price of all coal purchased by the major United Kingdom electricity generating companies is however published in table 26 of "Energy Trends", the Department's monthly statistical bulletin. In the second quarter of 1992 the average price was £1·81 per gigajoule.

Equivalent prices for the second quarter of next year will not be known until the necessary returns have been made, but the prices are likely to be substantially lower.

Electricity Generating Plants

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is, in pence per unit, and as a percentage of the domestic price, the approximate cost of (a) capital cost of generation, (b) fuel and its safe disposal, (c) transmission and distribution and (d) other costs, respectively, of each of the main fuel categories of power available for installation.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The average price of electricity used in domestic premises this year is expected to be approximately 8p/kwh. Of this, around half is attributable to generation costs and around one third to transmission and distribution, with the remainder accounted for by supply costs and the fossil fuel levy.

Trade in Energy

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what overall assessment he has made since assuming office of the trends in the balance of payments of the United Kingdom trade in energy—including the channel link—other than in oil; and where such assessments are published, what distinction he draws between his responsibilities for attaining a balance or surplus of trade in this commodity, as compared to any other.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The balance of payments deficit for United Kingdom trade in energy, other than in oil, in 1991 was £1,260 million, broadly the same as in the last five years. Data are published by the Central Statistical Office in the 1992 Pink Book, "UK Balance of Payments".

The Department does not aim to maintain a trading surplus in any particular commodity or fuel but rather to ensure that overall the United Kingdom remains competitive with the other trading nations of the world.

Inmos

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 11 May, Official Report, column 361, if he will make a statement on plans to intervene to ensure that the production of semi-conductors by Inmos Ltd. continues at Newport, Gwent.

Mr. David Hunt: I have been asked to reply.

Following extensive discussion, the European Commission ruled out United Kingdom Government assistance at the exceptionally high level sought by this company to develop its operation at Newport. We have made it clear that the Government remain ready to explore further with the company whether there is any alternative basis on which assistance might be provided.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Allowances

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library statistics relating to the performance of disability living allowance and disability working allowance.

Mr. Scott: I am pleased to announce that from this month such statistical information will be placed in the Library each month. We will aim to make the information available within seven working days of the end of the previous month.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimates he has made of the estimated cost to his budget of the recent announcement of job losses in the coal mining industry and their knock-on effects in other industries.

Mr. Burt: The characteristics of individual claims will vary widely and entitlement to benefit will be affected by redundancy and/or compensation payments. However, the effect on expenditure of a variation of 100,000 in the numbers of unemployed people is given in figure 25, page 18, of the second departmental report of the Department of Social Security, Cm 1914, published in February 1992, a copy of which is in the Library.

Social Fund

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the number and percentage of total applications which were refused for (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) crisis loans for each of the years of the social fund's operation; and if he will provide a breakdown by (i) region and (ii) local DSS office.

Mr. Scott: [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1992, c. 596]. Some of the information requested was inadvertently omitted. The missing tables have now been placed in the Library.

WALES

Special Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of children in special schools in Wales do not have a statement of needs.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information provided by schools indicates that, at September 1991, 4 per cent. of children in special schools did not have a statement of special educational needs. However, many of these were in assessment centres and in the process of having their needs assessed prior to a possible statement.

University Hospital of Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning a proposed grade-separated cross-over road access from Eastern avenue to the University hospital of Wales, the Heath, Cardiff.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has received 15 representations, including one from the Allensbank Permanent Allotment Association. Those making representations have expressed concern about environmental matters, the possible loss of allotment land, and traffic.

Infrastructure Projects

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much is currently allocated by his Department to (a) road and (b) rail infrastructure projects in Clwyd; and if he will publish an estimated figure for expenditure by his Department in Clwyd in 1993-94 and 1994-95 indicating in each case the principal projects allocated moneys.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In 1992-93, some £16·7 million has been directly allocated to road projects in Clwyd. This includes expenditure on the recently opened Mold bypass and the county council's transport grant settlement. Additional expenditure is incurred by Clwyd county council using credit approvals and revenue support grant provided by the Welsh Office. The Department does not directly provide funds for British Rail infrastructure projects. Expenditure decisions for 1993-94 and 1994-95 will be announced following the annual public expenditure surveys.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will state the hourly rates for all types of legal aid over each of the last 20 years and also give the figures in real terms.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The available figures are as follows. Prescribed hourly rates for solicitors undertaking criminal legal aid work in the magistrates courts and the Crown court were introduced in October 1982. The paying authority has the power to allow fees higher than the prescribed hourly rates where these rates would not reflect the exceptional competence and dispatch with which the work was done, or the exceptional circumstances of the case.

In 1988 standard fees replaced hourly rates for the majority of Crown court criminal work. Prescribed hourly rates were introduced for legal advice and assistance in police stations in 1986 and for matrimonial work in 1988. Non-matrimonial civil work is not covered by prescribed rates.

The duty solicitor scheme providing legal advice and assistance in magistrates' courts is based on an average of the prescribed hourly rates for advocacy and preparation—before April 1992 travelling and waiting—for criminal legal aid work in the magistrates' courts. Since 1989 separate hourly rates have been prescribed for care proceedings, for mental health review tribunal work and for non-care proceedings under the Children Act.

The prescribed hourly rates from 1982-92 for criminal work, for matrimonial work and for legal advice and assistance in police stations are set out in the tables. The tables give basic rates only and do not include London weighting. Each table is followed by a table giving the figures in real terms.

The figures have been uprated to 1992-93 prices using the GDP deflator.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what investigations he has made into the numbers and proportions of solicitors' firms that accept legal aid work; and if he will state the findings of such investigations.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No statistics are available on the number of firms of solicitors undertaking legal aid work at any one time. The Legal Aid Board does, however, publish a figure showing the number of offices receiving payment. For the last five years these were as follows:

Year	Number
1987-88	11,617
1988-89	11,558
1989-90	11,455
1990-91	11,125
1991-92	11,060

The Legal Aid Board also publishes statistics which show that although the number of offices receiving payment has fallen, the number of legal aid payments made to solicitors has risen.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what provision he intends to make in the legal aid fee structures for listening to tape recordings of police interviews with suspects.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Listening to tape recordings of police interviews forms part of the preparation of a criminal case, and is remunerated as such under the present arrangements. Under the proposed system of standard fees for solicitors' criminal legal aid work in the magistrates' courts, it is intended that payment for listening to tape recordings should be included in the standard fee, since it forms part of the normal preparation of a case.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what account he has taken of representations made to him by the Law Society concerning the question of fixed fees for legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Fixed fees have not been proposed. The consultation period on the proposed standard fee system for solicitors' criminal legal aid work in the magistrates courts is planned to continue until the end of October.

Discussions with the Law Society on standard fees began in July 1991. As a result, the Lord Chancellor has made several changes to his proposals. These include a fee structure based on the amount of work done, rather than hearing time as originally suggested, and allowing waiting time to be claimed separately.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current backlog of appeals for (a) the immigration tribunal and (b) the immigration appeal tribunal in each of the appeal centres.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As of this month 23,000 cases were outstanding before immigration adjudicators and 322 before the immigration appeals tribunal. In order to break down the first figure regionally it is necessary to consider cases listed, cases awaiting instructions from one of the parties and the balance which, alone, is in the control of the administration/judiciary and to employ some apportionment. This approach produces the following figures:

	Numbers
Thanet House	13,730
Birmingham	2,230
Leeds	1,010
Harmonsworth	3,510
Manchester	1,860
Glasgow	660

Legal Advice

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the rates have been for green form legal advice for each of the last 10 years; and if he will give the figures in real terms.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Before 1989, solicitors' bills for legal advice and assistance were assessed by the Law Society. The hourly guideline rates from 1982 to 1988 were:

Year	Rate	Rate expressed at 1992-93 prices
1982	24·00	41·89
1983	25·00	41·70
1984	26·00	41·31
1985	27·00	40·65
[1]1986	28·50	41·54
[2]1986	30·50	44·46
1987	32·50	44·93
1988	34·50	44·48

[2] October

Since 1989 the rate paid to solicitors for legal advice and assistance is the same as that for work in criminal proceedings in the magistrates court. The prescribed hourly rates since 1989 have been:

Year	Rate	Rate expressed at 1992-93 prices
1989	36·50	44·15
1990	39.25	43.89
1991	42.00	43.98
1992	43.25

Figures have been uprated to 1992-93 prices using the

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action he has taken and intends to take to increase the proportion of blacks and Asians in the judiciary.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's policy is to appoint to judicial office those best qualified, regardless of sex, ethnic origin, political affiliation or religion. Without prejudice to this overriding principle, the Lord Chancellor has stressed publicly, and will continue to do so, that he would like more black and Asian practitioners who are suitably qualified to be appointed to the judiciary. A major factor has been the lack of such candidates in the legal profession in the relevant age groups. There are now more ethnic minority practitioners within the legal profession who the Lord Chancellor hopes will come forward for consideration. To encourage this, he has made the booklet on the judicial appointments system widely available to ethnic minority practitioners and representative groups. Particular consideration is given to reviewing ethnic minority candidates in the field for particular appointments and ethnic recording arrangements were introduced for applications for judicial appointment made after 1 October 1991. The Lord Chancellor and his officials also have periodical meetings with groups representing the interests of black and Asian practitioners where matters relating to the judicial appointments system are discussed.

Law Centres

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what amount of central Government funding has been given to law centres for each of the last 20 years; and if he will give the figures in real terms.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is as follows:

Year	Grant £'000	At 1992-93 prices
1974-75	50	254
1975-76	100	405
1976-77	150	535
1977-78	225	706
1978-79	273	773
1979-80	381	923
1980-81	445	911
1981-82	535	1,000
1982-83	583	1,017
1983-84	618	1,030
1984-85	649	1,031
1985-86	675	1,016
1986-87	695	1,013
1987-88	712	984
1988-89	730	941
1989-90	768	929
1990-91	822	919
1991-92	841	877

This Department made no grants to law centres before 1974-75. The figures from then to date are set out in the table. At various times during the past 20 years some law centres have received central Government funding from sources other than the Lord Chancellor's Department. These figures do not include income from the Legal Aid Fund.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement in respect of the governor of Hong Kong's emergency meeting held on 25 September, in connection with threats to the colony's marine police officers by Chinese security officials in the colony's waters.

Mr. Goodlad: On 25 September, a Hong Kong fishing vessel was boarded by Chinese security officers within Hong Kong territorial waters. This was a serious incident and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised it with the Chinese Foreign Minister on the same day. On 29 September, Chinese officials made clear to the Hong Kong Government that the action of the Chinese officers concerned had been incorrect, and offered apologies for the incident. This response underlines the shared interest of Hong Kong and China in effective cooperation to combat smuggling.

UN Assembly Speech

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out in the Official Report the main points he made in his speech to the General Assembly of the United Nations in September; and what was the response he received from his counterparts.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The main purpose of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs' speech, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House, was to offer a response, on behalf of the European Community and its member states, to the Secretary-General's report "An Agenda for Peace". In the subsequent debate in the general assembly there was widespread agreement that the report was welcome, and that it provided a quarry of ideas to be followed up on a case-by-case basis and in the relevant UN bodies.

Test Ban Talks

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to discuss with his French counterpart the resumption of multilateral nuclear test ban treaty talks.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have regular discussions with the French Government on a range of nuclear defence issues, including nuclear testing. We have always accepted a comprehensive test ban as a long-term goal, but we continue to believe that nuclear testing is the best means of ensuring the safety and credibility of our nuclear deterrent.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current backlog in each of the queues at the following posts (a) Bombay, (b) New Delhi, (c) Islamabad, (d) Karachi, (e) Dhak, (f) Nairobi and (g) Dar-es-Salaam; and what is the average length of time in each queue from application to interview.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As at 31 August the number of people waiting for interviews for entry clearance were:

	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4	Total
Bombay	0	163	424	205	792
New Delhi	0	297	295	134	726
Islamabad	3	166	52	465	686
Karachi	5	108	34	8	155
Dhaka	350	1,679	212	277	2,518

There are no queues in Nairobi or Dar-el-Salaam.

The estimated waiting times, in months, are:

	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4
Bombay	—	4	9	10
New Delhi	—	3	7	10
Islamabad	3	3	6	10
Karachi	2	2	3	7
Dhaka	3	6	7	9

Yugoslavia

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Walsall, North of 19 October Official Report, columns 34-35, on war crimes in former Yugoslavia, if Her Majesty's Government will consider submitting information to the United Nations on the actions of Slobodan Milosevic and Radovan Karadzic in connection with crimes against humanity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave to him on 19 October, at columns 34-35.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Clenbuterol

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will introduce legislation to ban the possession of the drug Clenbuterol for sporting purposes.

Mr. Brooke: The Government have no plans at present to do so.

Sports Sponsorship

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage by what date the pound-for-pound business sports sponsorship incentive scheme announced on 19 December 1991 will be established; how much funding will be allocated to the scheme; over what time scale it will operate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Government remain firmly committed to Sportsmatch. I shall soon make an announcement on its launch date and funding. It will be to the benefit of the scheme and all those involved in it if Sportsmatch can be launched with a secure future. No time scale has been set for the operation of the scheme. This will depend very largely on its success.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the approximate costs arising in his Department from the direct administration of grant-maintained schools for the year 1992, or 1991-92, and the estimated costs he expects to arise either in 1993, or the financial year 1993-94, stating the actual or expected number of schools in respect of each period.

Mr. Forth: The running costs of staff employed on the direct administration of GM schools and associated policy were £706,000 in 1991-92. Estimated outturn for 1992-93 is £1,450,000. Budgets for 1993-94 have not yet been set. In March 1992 there were 143 GM schools operating. There are currently 278 GM schools operating, with 30 more approved or minded to approve.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what arrangements he has made for allocating costs of the national fund for in-service training of teachers in grant-maintained schools for the year 1992-93; and what is the approximate expenditure for this purpose which he expects to allocate in the year 1993-94, expressed as an aggregate sum, and as the amount per teacher eligible for such training.

Mr. Forth: In 1992-93 each grant-maintained school is eligible for a special purpose grant (development) allocated at the rate of £42·50 per pupil. Schools are expected to spend at least half of this grant on staff training and development. Grant-maintained schools may also meet such costs out of their annual maintenance grant. Decisions have not yet been taken about special purpose grant (development) allocations for 1993-94.

University Research

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of gross domestic product is devoted to research in universities; and what information he had for the comparative figures in other EC countries.

Mr. Forman: Data in the 1992 annual review of Government-funded research and development indicate that in 1990 0·3 per cent. of United Kingdom GDP was spent on research and development in higher education, compared with 0·4 per cent. in Germany, 0·3 per cent. in France and 0·25 per cent. in Italy.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of research in British universities is funded by charities; and what information he has on the comparable figures in other European countries.

Mr. Forman: United Kingdom charities provided 22·3 per cent. of the income from research grants and contracts of United Kingdom universities in 1990-91. Comparable information for other countries is not available.

Universities (Clerical Staff)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he plans to take to ensure comparability in the rates of pay and conditions of work of the clerical staff of universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: The pay of clerical staff employed by the universities is entirely a matter for their employers. The Government have no intention of becoming involved in the negotiating arrangements.

Defence Research

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of Government-funded research in British universities is devoted to defence issues.

Mr. Forman: Data in the 1992 annual review of Government-funded research and development show that in 1990-91 research and development spending by the Ministry of Defence accounted for 6·5 per cent. of all specific Government funding for research and development in higher education institutions.

University Staff Pay

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what role the trade unions will have in the operation of new pay structures for university staff at university and college levels.

Mr. Forman: The Government expect employers in higher education to settle their own future negotiating arrangements including any arrangements for trade union involvement.

Non-maintained Special Schools

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from St. Vincents school for blind and partially sighted children in Liverpool in respect of the consultative paper on special educational needs; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement on the future of such non-maintained special schools.

Mr. Forth: I have replied to several Members about the future of non-maintained special schools under our proposed legislation. Schools such as St. Vincent's should continue to offer high-quality special education. Their future is not threatened by our legislative proposals.

Child Care and Nursery Education

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the relative positions of each member state of the European Community in respect of the provision of child care and nursery education.

Mr. Forth: It is not possible to offer comprehensive comparisons across the European Community but statistical comparisons of educational and group day care provision in a majority of EC states are available for 1987. Figures for participation in public and private sector provision in that year are as follows:

Percentages[1]

	Education		Day Care

TRANSPORT

Buses, London

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what surveys or investigations he has made concerning the location, capacity, and management of bus stands in central London after the proposed deregulation and privatisation of its bus services.

Mr. Norris: This is a matter for which the London Bus Executive will be responsible. The Government do not anticipate that deregulation will cause any significant changes in the provision and usage of bus stands. However, this is a point which can be considered further by the Department's consultative forum, whose first meeting I announced on 13 May, as part of its remit to advise on the practical aspects of implementing deregulation in London.

Cannon Street Collision

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to implement the recommendations in the report on the collision of 8

January 1991 at Cannon Street station that legislation should be introduced making it an offence for railway employees with safety responsibilities to be impaired by the consumption of alcohol or drugs.

Mr. Freeman: The Transport and Works Act, which received Royal Assent on 16 March 1992, contains new comprehensive provisions to deal with drink and drugs offences on the railways. The offences, penalties and police testing powers are similar to those under the Road Traffic Act. The new provisions will come into force on 7 December 1992.

Rail Services

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will request the British Railways Board to report on the practicality of introducing a rail service between Clapham and Willesden junctions on the west London line, calling at appropriate intermediate stations, subsequent on the completion of its electrification.

Mr. Freeman: This is being examined by a working group of officials representing British Railways, London Transport, the Department of Transport, four London boroughs, and the local business community. I expect its report shortly.

Akatsuki Maru

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has received from his Japanese counterpart in regard to safety and security arrangements made for the voyage of the Akatsuki Maru carrier-ship between Japan, La Hague in France and Sellafield transporting plutonium.

Mr. Norris: None.

British Rail Freight

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what fee was agreed by Mercer Management Consulting to advise his Department and British Rail on the sale of British Rail's freight operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This information is commercially confidential.

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to take external advice on the privatisation of British Rail's freight operations.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Transport and the British Railways Board have jointly commissioned Mercer Management Consulting to provide detailed advice on structural options for the transfer to the private sector of British Rail's domestic and international freight services, including the rail express systems parcel business. Work on the study commenced on 28 September.

Safety Schemes

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the expected average rate of return from the £31 million transport supplementary grant earmarked for local safety schemes in the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Returns provided by local authorities indicate that the sum earmarked for local safety schemes in the transport supplementary grant settlement for 1991-92 produced an average first year rate of return of 76 per cent., and over the first three years a rate of return of 213 per cent.

ENVIRONMENT

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of staff changes in each of the National Rivers Authority regions as a result of the proposed environment agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The number and distribution of staff within the environment agency will be matters for its management.

Recycling

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure that the United Kingdom meets its recycling target of 25 per cent. of household waste by 2000.

Mr. Maclean: We are undertaking a wide range of measures to ensure that we reach our recycling target. In particular, we are setting a legislative and economic framework designed to make recycling the preferred choice when it is the best environmental option.

The Environmental Protection Act 1990 introduces the most favourable legal framework for recycling ever provided in this country. To help authorities in England to implement their recycling strategies, we have introduced a programme of supplementary credit approvals. In order to assist industry to overcome technical and market barriers to recycling, the Government provides funding for research and development through the ETIS scheme, operated jointly by my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry, and the DEMOS and EUROENVIRON schemes, administered by the Department of Trade and Industry. We have introduced an economic incentive in the form of recycling credits; my noble Friend Lord Strathclyde announced on 30 September that the value of credits will double from 1 April 1994.

Ozone-destroying Chemicals

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the continued production of ozone-destroying chemicals.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has received many representations on this issue.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the quantity of (a) chlorofluorocarbons, (b) halons and (c) methyl chloroform produced in (i) 1990-91, (ii) 1991-92 and (iii) proposed for 1992-93.

Mr. Maclean: An estimated 681 kilotonnes of CFCs were produced world-wide in 1991. Figures are not yet available for 1992, but are expected to show a sharp decline. Figures are not available for world-wide production of halons or methyl chloroform.

Montreal Protocol

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation he has undertaken with industry prior to the Montreal protocol renegotiation in Copenhagen from 17 to 25 November.

Mr. Maclean: Officials from this Department and the Department of Trade and Industry meet representatives from the relevant industry sectors on a regular basis to discuss issues related to the Montreal protocol.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation he has undertaken with environmental groups prior to the Montreal protocol renegotiation in Copenhagen from 17 to 25 November.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State receives many communications from such groups. He met representatives of Greenpeace on 21 September when the Montreal protocol, together with various other environmental issues, was discussed.

Hydrochlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for an increase in the production of the use of hydrochlorofluorocarbons as transitional substances.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom Government support the tightest possible limits on the use of HCFCs consistent with achieving the fastest possible elimination of the consumption of CFCs. The details of these controls will be worked out with other Montreal protocol parties in Copenhagen.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement relating to the effect on the environment of continued production of HCFCs and other chemicals.

Mr. Maclean: In the forthcoming revision of the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer we will promote provisions to ensure the HCFCs are used only in those applications where they are the only practicable alternative to use of the much more damaging CFCs. The use of HCFCs instead of CFCs in these applications will be beneficial for the ozone layer.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what communications he has had with the Federal German Environment Ministry as regards to the acceptability to Germany of implementing the radiological equivalence plan for the return of radioactive wastes arising from reprocessing as announced to Parliament on 2 May 1986, Official Report, column 500.

Mr. Maclean: The question of the substitution of radioactive wastes remains under consideration. The views of the German government on any proposals made by British Nuclear Fuels plc will be a matter to be taken up as appropriate with the German Government by BNFL's customers.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his reply of 14 July, Official Report, columns 643-4, if he has now received from the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee its views on the implementation of the radiological equivalence proposals for the return of radioactive wastes after reprocessing.

Mr. Maclean: Yes, and I am considering the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's report.

Probation Hostels

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether planning permission is required for a mainly probation hostel to switch to a mainly bail hostel.

Mr. Baldry: The conversion of a building used mainly as a probation hostel to one used mainly as a bail hostel would probably not require planning permission, unless the building were enlarged or the exterior substantially altered.

Rents

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assumption he proposes to apply in respect of the maximum increase in guidelines rents to take effect from April 1993, under the housing revenue account subsidy determinations.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will consult local authorities and other interested organisations in November on the proposed HRA subsidy determinations for 1993-94, including the proposed maximum increase in rent guidelines. His final decisions will be announced in December.

Housing Funds

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the place, manner or mode in which he has placed restrictions on the expenditure of local authorities on new municipal housing from funds accrued by them from sales of residential premises, together with the statutory basis of such restriction, and the approximate total sums of such funds now available for such building; and if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government concerning the future use of these funds.

Mr. Robin Squire: Under part IV of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, local authorities may use 25 per cent. of their capital receipts from the sale of council houses, and 50 per cent. of most other receipts, to finance new capital expenditure on any service. They are required to set aside the balance as provision to meet credit liabilities. The total of the amounts set aside under the present capital finance system, including receipts from council house sales, was about £5·5 billion at 31 March 1991. If authorities were allowed to spend a larger proportion of their capital receipts, their net indebtedness would rise and the total of spending by the public sector and the public sector borrowing requirement would be increased. The present system has also enabled a greater proportion of capital receipts to be recycled in the form of new credit approvals to those authorities where needs are greatest. We therefore have no plans to change these arrangements.

Municipal Mutual Insurance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions and meetings he has had concerning Municipal Mutual Insurance and local government insurance.

Mr. Robin Squire: None.

City Challenge

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has so far been awarded under the city challenge programme.

Mr. Robin Squire: Subject to satisfactory performance by pacemakers and the approval of authorities' action plans for round 2, city challenge expenditure on pacemakers and round 2 winners will be £82·5 million and £150 million per annum respectively for five years. No decisions on future rounds of city challenge have yet been taken.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the next round of the city challenge awards is to be announced.

Mr. Robin Squire: Twenty local authorities, with their partners, bid successfully in the second round of city challenge and are currently preparing five year action plans for ministerial approval with a view to implementation from April 1993. They have been asked to submit their completed plans by 31 December 1992 and it is intended that approval decisions will be announced in February 1993. A decision about subsequent rounds of city challenge will be made in due course.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much extra Government grant he has determined he will need to provide to compensate for the fact that average house prices are lower than the Government estimated for the council tax valuation.

Mr. Robin Squire: The provision for Government grant each year depends on a large number of factors. These include the Government's view of the appropriate total of revenue spending by local authorities, the estimated amount of non-domestic rates, the implications for local taxes and what the country can afford. Average house prices are not a material consideration, either under the present system or under the forthcoming council tax.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has carried out into the costs or savings of compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has commissioned two studies by the Institute of Local Government Studies at the university of Birmingham to evaluate the effects of the competitive tendering provisions in the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988 on local authorities' direct service organisations. The studies include consideration of the costs and savings.

A report summarising the initial findings of the evaluation of the 1988 Act was published in February 1991. Copies are available in the House Library. I anticipate that final reports for both studies will be published in the new year.

Letchworth Garden City Corporation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the long-term future of Letchworth garden city corporation.

Mr. Baldry: The Corporation was established as a statutory body under the Letchworth Garden City Corporation Act 1962 to manage the garden city estate. The Department recently invited the corporation to consider how best to undertake its functions within the private sector, while retaining the fundamental aims and objectives of the garden city movement.

The corporation has indicated that it intends to place a Bill before Parliament this November to transfer the assets, liabilities and activities of the corporation to a new charitable organisation to be called the Letchworth Garden City Heritage Foundation. The corporation is currently undertaking a consultation exercise on its proposals.

The Department supports the corporation's proposed way forward.

Poll Tax

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide the total and a breakdown of the costs so far of the implementation of the poll tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) on 15 July 1992, Official Report, column 1132.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total expenditure so far by his Department on publicising the poll tax and related information.

Mr. Robin Squire: Since enactment, my Department has produced, distributed, and maintained a series of leaflets on the community charge system. At various times advertising was taken to draw the attention of the public to these leaflets and to the availability of community charge benefit and transitional relief and how to claim them. The costs to date are £5,710,500.

Tarmac Construction

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all funds paid to Tarmac Construction in connection with its takeover of the Property Services Agency; and if he will give a statement of how these sums were arrived at.

Mr. Redwood: No funds have been paid to Tarmac Construction as yet. The amounts to be paid over in connection with Tarmac's purchase of PSA Projects were determined by open competition and will depend on the numbers of staff choosing to transfer on sale with the business, the completion audit and thereafter on the numbers of any redundancies should there be insufficient work in the future to sustain employment levels as planned.

Opencast Coal

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proposals he has to amend the passage in mineral planning guidance 3 of 1988 on opencast which says that it is in the national interest to maximise coal production;

(2) if he will withdraw mineral planning guidance 3 on opencast and let local councils decide whether they want opencast in their area.

Mr. Baldry: I announced on 15 July that the guidelines will be revised. My Department expects to bring forward a draft for public consultation next year. I hope that the hon. Member will appreciate that I cannot pre-empt what the revised guidelines will say.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what consideration he will give to the level of overall coal production in taking the decision on whether an opencast site should be allowed at Baddesley Ensor in Warwickshire;

(2) when he expects to announce his decision on the application for an opencast site at Baddesley Ensor in Warwickshire.

Mr. Baldry: I shall take account of all considerations which are material to the planning decision. The decision will be announced as soon as possible.

Sludge Incinerators

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning applications for sludge incinerators are currently being considered by planning authorities in England and Wales; and if he will name those which he has called in for public inquiry.

Mr. Baldry: There is no mechanism whereby the Secretary of State for the Environment or the Secretary of State for Wales are automatically informed of all planning applications for sewerage sludge incinerators, as planning applications are primarily a matter for the local planning authorities. However the Town and Country Planning (Development Plans and Consultation) Directions 1992 require local planning authorities to notify the Secretaries of State of development proposals which would significantly prejudice implementation of a development plan. We are therefore aware of only two applications currently before local planning authorities. These are Thames Water's incinerator proposals at Crossness in the London borough of Bexley and at Beckton in the London borough of Newham. Neither of these applications has been called in. There may be other applications of which we are unaware.

In addition to these current applications, Northumbrian Water and International Technology Europe Ltd. have appealed to the Secretary of State in respect of their incinerator proposals at East Howden in North Tyneside and at Portrach in Stockton-on-Tees; a public inquiry has been held and the Secretary of State is considering the inspector's report.

Local Government

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has conducted or intends to conduct into the relative costs of two-tier and single-tier structures for local government.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Local Government Commission will assess the costs and benefits of changes to local government structure in the shire counties as it carries out its reviews area by area. In 1984 we estimated that some £100 million long-term savings per annum resulting from staff reductions should follow abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils. We later estimated that some 6,300 posts had been saved immediately on abolition.

WALES

Manufacturing Trainees

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) apprenticeships and (b) trainee posts in manufacturing industry were available in Wales in each year from 1979 onwards.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Estimates from the Employment Department's short-term employment surveys are given in the table. Welsh data from this source are available only from 1981 up to 1990 after which this inquiry was discontinued. The labour force survey sample in Wales does not allow for reliable estimates of manufacturing apprentice numbers for Wales, but the 1992 results showed that an estimated 206,000 people of working age across all industries in Wales had received a job-related training in the four weeks prior to the survey compared with a figure of 95,000 in 1984, when this information was first recorded.

Manufacturing industries

Year	Number of apprentices (thousands)	Number of other trainees (thousands)
1981	6·0	1·9
1982	4·7	1·8
1983	3·6	1·2
1984	3·1	1·4
1985	2·8	0·9
1986	2·3	1·1
1987	2·3	1·4
1988	2·4	1·3

Jobs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of all jobs that have transferred from companies in Wales to companies operating in other EC countries in the last four years including dates, company names and totals of jobs lost to Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not available.

DWR Cymru

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many prosecutions of DWR Cymru have been made since September 1991; and what pollution incidents were involved.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information regarding prosecutions brought by the National Rivers Authority against pollution incidents occurring in its Welsh region during 1991 is contained in the authority's report "Water Pollution Incidents in 1991" published in September 1992, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. This is the second report, which is updated annually.

Paediatric Occupational Therapy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will grant special funds to Clwyd health authority for the establishment of a paediatric occupational therapy service in Clwyd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Clwyd health authority is required to formulate a local strategy for health jointly with the family health services authority and to use the resources which it has at its disposal for the health care needs of its resident population in accordance with its own locally determined priorities. If it wishes to see a new service offered by service providers in Clwyd, it should explore with those providers and local GP fund holders the viability of developing such a service.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many paediatric occupational therapy services there are in each of the health authorities of Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The requested information is not held centrally.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he is taking concerning the assessment and treatment of myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office, in common with other Government health Departments, accepts myalgic encephalomyelitis—ME—as a debilitating and distressing condition.

The protocol for investment in health gain, pain, discomfort and palliative care, launched by the Department earlier this month, recognises ME as a cause of pain and discomfort, and acknowledges the need for research on the nature and pattern of this illness, and on possible treatments.

The protocol was developed by the Welsh Health Planning Forum mainly to assist health authorities in developing their local strategies for health. ME will, therefore, be considered by all health authorities as they devise individual strategies.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the incidence of myalgic encephalomyelitis in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the incidence of myalgic encephalomyelitis in Wales is not held centrally.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of public expenditure in those areas which have assisted area status for each of the years since 1980.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not available in the form requested. To produce the data in this format would involve disproportionate time and cost.

Orthoptics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many orthoptic patients were treated outside the Clwyd health authority area because of lack of staff or facilities in the past 12 months; and what is his estimate of the figures for the next 12 months.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The requested information is not held centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he intends to take to improve waiting time for treatment in orthoptic departments in (a) Clwyd health authority and (b) Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Funding is not made available specifically for improving orthoptic waiting lists as the setting of priorities is a matter for health authorities. However, central funding has been provided which will assist authorities in the reduction of overall waiting times.

A total of £1 million has already been allocated to Welsh health authorities under this year's waiting times initiative: Clwyd received £140,300. Funding is not aimed at specific specialities, but at those people who have been waiting more than two years for non-urgent treatment; 18 months for hip or knee replacement or cataract operations and one month for urgent treatment.

Central funding of £2·1 million has been made available to Welsh health authorities under the treatment centre initiative: provision for Clwyd health authority has been made for 110 cataract operations at the ophthalmic treatment centre in Bangor at a cost of £91,630.

The authority has also received £164,806, from £1·6 million set aside to assist health authorities in developing their day surgery facilities; £12,500 of this allocation is being used to improve the provision of ophthalmic day case facilities.

Housing, Buckley

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet representatives of Alyn and Deeside district council to discuss the provision of specific additional funding for the refurbishment of the houses of Terring crescent, Buckley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We have no plans to do so. It must be for the district council to decide what priority to give the refurbishment of these homes within the resources avaialble to it.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in each county in each month since June.

Mr. Gummer: The information as requested for Great Britain is as follows—some of these confirmed cases will have a date of clinical onset and date of report before 30 May 1992.

County/region	June (30 May-26 June)	July (27 June-31 July)	August (1 August-28 August)	September (29 August-25 September	October (26 September-16 October)

Bananas

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to consult with his European Community colleagues on the question of future EC banana quotas; what the effects are likely to be for the United Kingdom's trade with Belize; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Agriculture Council will discuss the Commission's proposals for a common organisation of the market in bananas at its next meeting on 26 and 27 October. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has discussed with the Prime Minister of Belize the proposed distinction to be drawn between traditional and non-traditional exports. We shall ensure that discussions in the Community take account of his concerns.

PRIME MINISTER

Single Market

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Prime Minister what measures are outstanding to complete the single market.

The Prime Minister: Of the 282 measures in the Commission's White Paper, "Completing the Internal Market", only 25 have not yet reached at least a common position or political agreement.

Of these, six fall into the agriculture area; five deal with intellectual property; five are related to VAT; four are on company law; two on financial services; two on tax; and one on rights of residence.

India

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library the latest text of the extradition treaty with India.

The Prime Minister: The extradition treaty between the United Kingdom and India was signed on 23 September 1992 and copies placed in the Libraries of both Houses on that date.

Western Shoshone Indian Land

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what correspondence Her Majesty's Government have received from Chief Raymond Yowell of the Western Shoshone National Council, Nevada, concerning the continued use by the United Kingdom of the Department of Energy nuclear weapons test site on Western Shoshone Indian land.

The Prime Minister: The only correspondence I have received was in October 1991. The British ambassador in Washington replied on my behalf. A copy of Sir Robin Renwick's letter was placed in the Library of the House.

United Nations Day

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what plans Her Majesty's Government have to mark United Nations Day on 24 October.

The Prime Minister: The flag of the United Nations will be flown in Parliament square on 24 October.

Our commitment to the United Nations, as a founder of the organisation and a permanent member of the Security Council, remains as firm as ever. The end of the cold war and successes in, for example, Namibia and Kuwait have given the United Nations new authority. We welcome that and will continue to work for a stronger, more effective United Nations which can meet the challenges of the 1990s.

EC Commissioners

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister when he will be making a statement on the appointment of the United Kingdom's EC Commissioners.

The Prime Minister: As announced on 20 October, I have nominated Sir Leon Brittan and Mr. Bruce Millan to serve in the Commission of the European Communities taking office in January 1993.

Ministry of Justice

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to abolish the Lord Chancellor's Department to make way for a Ministry of Justice.

The Prime Minister: None.

Government Consultants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish guidelines concerning the appointment of consultants by his Government.

The Prime Minister: A guidance booklet on seeking help from management consultants was published by HM Treasury in May 1990. This booklet, copies of which are available in the Libraries of both Houses, also identifies central sources of advice and guidance for other types of consultancy, for example, information and technology and purchasing.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish the 22-page document including a draft inter-institute agreement relating to the principle of subsidiarity forwarded to him by the President of the Commission of the European Communities.

The Prime Minister: The President of the Commission made a substantial presentation on subsidiarity at the Birmingham European Council, but he has not yet formally submitted a Commission paper. When the Commission submits a paper to the Council it will, of course, be published and deposited in the normal way.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 22 October.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 22 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled People

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current percentage of disabled people in employment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Figures covering all disabled people are not readily available; however, we do have information for disabled people of working age.

Research commissioned by the Department and published in 1990 found that 78 per cent. of people in Great Britain who were occupationally handicapped, economically active and of working age, were in work.

The labour force survey for the spring quarter of 1992 found that 80 per cent. of people in Great Britain who had a health problem or disability which limited the kind of work they could do, were economically active and were of working age, were in work.

Direct comparison between these findings is difficult, because they do not always use the same definitions, in particular the definition of disablility.

Youth Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the expenditure on youth training in the London East training and enterprise council area in 1991; and what it is in the current year.

Mr. McLoughlin: Expenditure on youth training in the London East TEC area in the period 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992 was £10,051,191. Figures from 1 April 1992 are not yet available. The budget for expenditure for YT in the LETEC area for the current financial year is £13,056,731.

DEFENCE

Festival Sites

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the disused sites owned by his Department which might be available for free festivals following the request to his Department for suitable sites to be identified; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to make available MOD sites for free festivals.

SCOTLAND

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the replacement costs of the assets of each Scottish water authority; if he will estimate for each authority what percentage of the population are supplied with (a) mains water and (b) sewerage by that authority; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Details of the assets of each Scottish water authority are not held centrally. The percentages of population receiving public mains water and public sewerage are given in the table.

Authority	Proportion of population receiving mains water Per cent.	Proportion of population receiving sewerage Per cent.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Allan Stewart: All Departments within the Scottish Office have an ongoing responsibility to identify potential areas for deregulation and any Department proposing new legislation or regulations which are likely to impose a burden on business must carry out an assessment of the cost to business of compliance. No separate financial provision has been made within the operating costs of the Scottish Office departments for those purposes.

Bellwin Formula

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which local authorities claimed assistance under the Bellwin formula, following the storm damage of December 1991 and new year's day 1992; and how much was (a) claimed by and (b) paid to each authority under the scheme.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I announced the triggering of the Bellwin scheme on 10 January. On that occasion, the triggering applied to the Shetland, Orkney, and Western Isles islands council areas, and Highland and Central regions. Only Shetland islands council has submitted a claim for financial assistance this totals £83,000. Payment will be made once the council has provided some outstanding information to establish the eligibility of the expenditure incurred.

Water Industry

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the representations received regarding the future arrangements for the organisation of the water industry in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: Some 1,400 representations have been received to date.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the meetings or discussions held between his Department and (a) English water companies and (b) French water companies in the last two months.

Sir Hector Monro: One meeting has been held with an English water company, at its request, to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the consultants' report on the future of the water industry in Scotland will be published.

Sir Hector Monro: A consultation document setting out a range of options for the future structure of the water and sewerage service in Scotland will be published shortly. The consultants' report itself will not be published.

Hampden Park

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a list of tenderers for the upgrading of Hampden park;

(2) by what date tenders are to be submitted for the upgrading of Hampden park;

(3) if he will ensure that at least one independent construction company with its administrative base in Scotland is included on the list of tenderers for the upgrading of Hampden park;

(4) how much the Scottish Office has invested in the joint venture with the Scottish Football Association and the Football Trust for the upgrading of Hampden park.

Sir Hector Monro: The Government are providing £3·5 million as a cash-limited contribution towards a £12 million project being undertaken by the national stadium committee to make Hampden park all-seated, in line with Taylor report requirements. The national stadium committee, set up by Queen's Park FC, the Scottish Football Association and the Scottish Football League to respond to Scotland's national football stadium needs, is solely responsible for all matters relating to the contracts for work to make Hampden all-seated.

National Council for Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of the National Council for Vocational Qualifications programme and its implementation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The remit of the National Council for Vocational Qualifications does not extend to Scotland. The equivalent body, which is responsible for the accreditation and award of vocational qualifications in Scotland, is the Scottish Vocational Education Council.

The Scottish programme is designed to make available vocational qualifications which are broadly compatible with those being developed by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications. Scottish vocational qualifications—SVQs—embrace industry-determined standards to meet the needs of specific occupations. The target set by the Government was to have these qualifications in place for 80 per cent. of the Scottish work force by December 1992. The Scottish Vocational Education Council is well on course towards meeting this target, 288 individual SVQs having been accredited to date.

Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has received on the cause and cost of the technical problem that resulted in the shut-down for an indefinite period of the prototype fast reactor at Dounreay; and when is it expected to re-open.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

We receive regular reports from the Atomic Energy Authority on the performance of the prototype fast reactor. It has been shut down since 29 June 1991 when a leak of oil into the primary sodium cooling circuit was discovered. The major cost has been the loss of electricity revenue. The amount involved is commercially confidential. I understand from the AEA that it hopes to restart the reactor by the end of January.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Collapsed Holiday Firms

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received seeking increased powers to deal with holiday firms which have collapsed without bonding and assistance to those people who have lost money or their holiday.

Mr. Leigh: I have had a number of such representations. I shall shortly be laying before Parliament regulations which will require all organisers of packages, including package holidays, to have security for prepayments in the event of insolvency.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people were affected by the collapse of Land Travel.

Mr. Leigh: The exact number of people affected by the collapse of Land Travel is not known since claims are still being received by the liquidator. In the region of 40,000 claims have been submitted so far but many of these are for multiple bookings.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the implications for United Kingdom civil nuclear reprocessing at Sellafield and Dounreay of the provisions of articles 107a to 107c on the amendments concerning Euratom in the treaty on European Union (Cm 1934).

Mr. Eggar: There are none. These articles bring the Euratom treaty into line with the treaty of Rome, as amended by the treaty of European union.

Export Licences

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 6 July, Official Report, column 28, if he has now received a response from The Independent newspaper in regard to export licences.

Mr. Needham: No.

Wave Energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the report on wave energy by Tom Thorpe commissioned by his predecessor in April 1989.

Mr. Eggar: The report on the wave energy review is in preparation, and I expect to receive a copy by the end of the year.

Radioactive Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will investigate the discovery of radioactive materials on 11 October at an unlicensed site in Cranbrook, Kent, in regard to the application of safeguards to the materials.

Mr. Eggar: A small radioactive source was discovered at an address in Cranbrook, Kent on 11 October and was taken to Dungeness power station for analysis. If the substance is confirmed to be subject to safeguards legislation it will be declared to Euratom.

Municipal Mutual Insurance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what meetings and discussions he has had concerning Municipal Mutual Insurance.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department has been in constant contact with Municipal and Mutual Insurance Limited since the company informed the Department in March 1992 that it might have failed to maintain its required minimum solvency margin.

Displays (Safety)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has concerning consultations in preparation for, or draft of, a regulation of the European Economic Community prohibiting the inclusion of artificial or real grapes in floral or similar displays, on the grounds of child or other safety considerations.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 October 1992]: I am not aware of any consultations at present concerning any EC regulations prohibiting the inclusion of artificial or real grapes in the products mentioned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to reply to the recommendations of the Third Report of the Procedure Committee, Session 1990-91 on Parliamentary Questions.

Mr. Tony Newton: I am considering the report and will reply in due course.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Monetary Co-operation

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which states at present qualify for co-operation under the terms of the declaration on monetary co-operation with non-Community countries.

Mr. Nelson: Whether or not the Community would consider that a particular country qualified for monetary co-operation is a matter for the Council of Ministers. It is therefore not possible to provide a definitive list.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to publish the Bingham report into BCCI in full.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend has concluded that the balance of public interest lies in favour of publishing not only Lord Justice Bingham's recommendations and conclusions, but the report in full.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost to the Exchequer of the Bingham inquiry into BCCI.

Mr. Nelson: The total direct costs of Lord Justice Bingham and his inquiry team to date are some £595,000. These costs are shared equally between the Treasury and the Bank of England. The overall cost to the taxpayer also includes the administration and legal costs of the Government Departments concerned. To provide an estimate of these costs would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many claims have been paid by the deposit protection board to former depositors with BCCI by (a) number and (b) value.

Mr. Nelson: I understand that at 19 October 1992 some 9,500 claims had been processed involving payments of some £51·7 million.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the Governor of the Bank of England concerning the Bingham report into BCCI since he received a copy of the report.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend meets the Governor of the Bank of England frequently and they discuss a wide range of issues.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to publish the Bingham report into BCCI.

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to publish the Bingham report on the failure of BCCI.

Mr. Nelson: The report of Lord Justice Bingham's inquiry into the supervision of BCCI has been published today, in response to an unopposed motion for the return of papers.

Bank of England

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to announce the name of the next Governor of the Bank of England.

Mr. Nelson: The Governor of the Bank of England is appointed by Her Majesty the Queen on the advice of the Prime Minister. The present Governor's term of office expires on 30 June 1993. The name of the next Governor will be announced in due course.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effects on inflation of the withdrawal from the ERM.

Mr. Nelson: The easing of monetary policy which has occurred since sterling's withdrawal from the ERM is consistent with keeping downward pressure on inflation. I shall be publishing a revised forecast of prospects for inflation in the autumn statement, in the usual way.

Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes have been made in the rules on travel, subsistence and relocation expenses for civil servants.

Mr. Dorrell: As part of our ongoing programme for delegating to departments and agencies greater responsibility for managing personnel management policies, departments and agencies have been given the freedom to determine within defined limits their own rules and rates for subsistence and the use of private cars on official business.

The rates for subsistence will continue to reflect the principle of reimbursement of necessary additional costs. The rates for motor mileage allowance may go beyond reimbursement of motoring costs and provide an incentive for staff to use their cars on official business but only where it is cost effective for the department to do so. We will also be extending the range of measures available to departments and agencies to meet motoring costs incurred on official business by giving departments and agencies the freedom to offer eligible staff an interest free loan towards the purchase of a car needed for official business.

Such loans may be made only in circumstances where this is the most cost effective approach for departments. The package of measures for new recruits has been extended to provide for refund of relocation expenses on the same basis as existing staff, provided it is limited to shortage and hard-to-fill posts.

The use of these additional measures is at the discretion of departments and agencies, and they must be contained within existing resources.

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Sir John Cope: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Community met in Luxembourg under my presidency on 19 October.

The Council discussed three issues related to the current review of the Community's future financing: overseas loan guarantees; aspects of the cohesion fund agreed at Maastricht; and the inter-institutional agreement on budgetary discipline and improvement of the budgetary procedure, between the Council, the Commission and the European Parliament. On loan guarantees, the Council agreed in principle to establish a self-standing fund, to make provision against liabilities on loans to third countries guaranteed by the Community. Payments into the fund would be set as a proportion of the value of new loans, and would be financed by a reserve in the financial perspective and the Community budget.

Of the cohesion fund the Council discussed the rules of eligibility and allocation criteria for the fund, and how the provisions of the Maastricht cohesion protocol on macroeconomic conditionality should be applied. All member states agreed that the criterion laid down in article 104c of the Maastricht treaty, on excessive budget deficits, should be the basis of the macroeconomic test; on other aspects no conclusions were reached.

The Council also had the opportunity to give first reactions to the Commission's proposal for a new inter-institutional agreement. The Council agreed that the Commission draft formed a good basis for discussion, and that the Presidency should report member states' initial reactions to the European Parliament.

The Council discussed the need for improved offers of market access for financial services from a number of countries in the GATT round and agreed that the presidency and the Commission should lobby those countries accordingly on behalf of the Community and its member states.

The call for a review of recent economic and financial events in the conclusions of the special European Council was remitted to the Committee of Central Bank Governors and the Monetary Committee for further work.

The Council agreed to the release of the remainder of Russia's share of the Community's 1·25 becu loan to the former Soviet Union for food and medical aid. The Council also adopted a balance of payments loan to Bulgaria but the first tranche will not be released until Bulgaria has reached satisfactory rescheduling agreements with its creditors in the Paris Club. A request from Poland for a structural adjustment loan was remitted to the Monetary Committee for further consideration.

The Council discussed future relations with Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia with Mr. Attali, the President of the EBRD in preparation for the presidency's meeting with those countries on 28 October. The Council also agreed in principle to continue to provide technical assistance funding from the PHARE and TACIS programmes to be administered by the EBRD.

Following the resolution of outstanding problems, the Council adopted the package of eight indirect tax proposals on the structures and rates for VAT and excise duties provisionally agreed at the 27 July meeting of Finance Ministers. This was a key objective for the United Kingdom presidency as agreement was necessary for the introduction of the single market on 1 January 1992.

The agreement includes an undertaking from the United Kingdom that we will progressively reduce the duty differential, between intermediate products (fortified wines) exceeding 15 per cent. alcohol by volume (abv) and those intermediate products up to 15 per cent. abv, to 25 per cent. by the end of 1995. The undertaking also provides for the use of the names "British Sherry", "Irish Sherry" and "Cyprus Sherry" to end by 1 January 1996. In return Spain will discontinue their present action against the United Kingdom in the European Court of Justice.

There was no substantive discussion of the 7th VAT Directive on second-hand goods, including works of art. The Commission explained why such a directive was necessary and it was agreed that the proposal should be remitted to working groups for further discussion.

Research Contracts

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the contracts the Treasury has placed with non-governmental advisory bodies on research and forecasting matters, together with information on the value of all contracts for the last 15 years.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 21 October 1992]: Details of project expenditure from the Treasury's macroeconomic research budget for 1983-84 to 1991-92, and of planned expenditure for 1992-93 have been placed in the Library of the House. Corresponding information for the microeconomic research budget is also provided. Information could not be obtained for earlier years.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to carry out the recommendations of the Social Security Advisory Committee that the DSS reviews the procedures for young people claiming income support.

Mr. Burt: Social security administration is subject to continuous review. Procedures for young people are part of this process.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he has given to the recommendation of the Social Security Advisory Committee in its sixth, seventh and eighth reports that the full rate of income support should be restored for young people under 25 years of age living away from home; and what was his conclusion.

Mr. Burt: We have studied these reports by the Social Security Advisory Committee. We have no plans to change the level of income support personal allowances paid to people aged under 25 years.

Children

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the latest figures showing how many (a) families with children and (b) children are living on income support.

Mr. Burt: There are 1·3 million claims which include one or more children under 16. The total number of children in families receiving income support is 2·4 million.

Source: Income support annual statistical inquiry, May 1991.

Benefits

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards the updating of pensions and other benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: The House will be informed in due course.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the failure-to-claim rate in respect of social security benefits; and what savings to social security expenditure this represents.

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the latest figures for the take-up of income-related benefits.

Mr. Burt: We will publish the latest available estimates for take-up of the income-related benefits shortly.

Pensioners

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people living in residential care will not receive an increase in their pension from 5 October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The income support pensioner premiums were increased on 5 October. People living in residential care and receiving the higher income support limits do not receive premiums.

Social Fund

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes he intends to make to the social fund in light of the "Evaluating the Social Fund" report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We are carefully considering the report on the social fund by the university of York's social policy research unit. No decisions have been made about the future operation of the social fund.

HEALTH

Severe Combined Immune Deficiency Syndrome

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what grant the supra-regional services advisory group has recommended for the Newcastle general hospital in respect of severe combined immune deficiency syndrome care.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 22 June at columns 53-54.

Diet

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, as part of her quality of service objectives, she will require the publication of all reports related to the cost of a healthy diet commissioned since 1986 using public money.

Mr. Sackville: I am not aware of any such reports which have been commissioned by central Government and are awaiting publication.

Secure Places

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will indicate the number of secure places for young people aged under 18 years in England and Wales and their percentage occupancy in 1991-92; and whether she has plans to increase the number of places within the next two years.

Mr. Yeo: On 30 September 1992 there were 290 secure places in local authority community homes in England. In addition, the youth treatment service runs two youth treatment centres providing 60 secure places.

Information about the use of local authority secure units, including numbers accommodated at the end of each month, is in the annual statistical publication "Children accommodated in secure units during the year ending 31 March". The latest available information covers the 12 months ending 31 March 1991. Copies are available in the Library.

Discussions are currently being held with a range of local authorities to determine how the additional secure accommodation which will be required to implement fully the revised juvenile remand arrangements in the Criminal Justice Act 1991 might most effectively be provided.

The information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to discuss with West Midlands regional health authority its treatment of offers of voluntary part-funding for an magnetic resonance imaging scanner at the Midland centre for neurology and neurosurgery.

Mr. Sackville: The acceptance of voluntary funding is a matter for West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are the terms of reference and the time scale for the involvement of Sir Roy Griffiths in the West Midlands regional health authority; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what plans she has for an investigation into the activities of the West Midlands regional health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Roy Griffiths has been asked to work with West Midlands regional health authority to help it discharge its role efficiently and effectively for the future. This work is already underway and Sir Roy will be keeping me in touch as this develops. No time scale has been set for the completion of his work and I have no plans to set up any further investigation into the activities of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the operation of the West Midlands regional health authority's computerised hospital supply system.

Dr. Mawhinney: I understand that the Audit Commission is looking into this matter and is to report to West Midlands regional health authority.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give for England the numbers of people on waiting lists on 30 September 1987 and at the end of each subsequent six-month period, for admission for (a) in-patient and (b) day case treatment and the numbers on each occasion who were categorised as (i) self-deferred, (ii) waiting under 12 months, (iii) waiting 12 to 24 months and (iv) waiting over two years.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given in the Department of Health's statistical bulletins which are available from the Library. From March 1992, self-deferred cases are included in the total number waiting.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the reasons for the differences between the figures given for the numbers of people on waiting lists in March and September of 1988 to 1991 in her Department's statistical bulletin 2(5)92 and those given in statistical bulletin 2(8)92.

Mr. Sackville: In statistical bulletin 2(5)92 and in previous bulletins, figures for self-deferred cases were shown separately. From March 1992, self-deferred cases are included in the overall total waiting. This is consistent with the provisional figures from regional health authorities published quarterly.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish her estimates for each six-month period from April 1987 of (a) the numbers of people admitted from waiting lists to hospital for in-patient treatment, (b) the numbers of people removed from in-patient waiting lists for reasons other than treatment, (c) the numbers of people admitted from waiting lists for day case treatment and (d) the numbers of people removed from day case waiting lists for reasons other than treatment.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested, which is only available from 1988, is given in the table.

Most removals are due to health authorities validating their waiting lists. It is good management practice to validate lists regularly to ensure they include only those who need treatment. Many patients on waiting lists no longer need to be admitted for treatment because, for example, they have moved or had their treatment elsewhere. Validation leads to fewer cancelled operations and faster treatment for those who need it.

Mersey Regional Health Authority

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the visit of the Minister for Health to the Mersey regional health authority headquarters on 21 September; what subjects were discussed; and what proposals were made.

Dr. Mawhinney: I visited Mersey regional health authority headquarters on 21 September as part of my programme of visits to regions throughout the country. While in Mersey, I also visited the Countess of Chester hospital and the Liverpool drug dependency clinic. I met a cross-section of staff and discussed a range of different subjects.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the visit of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health to the Mersey region on 1 October.

Mr. Sackville: I visited Mersey region on 1 October as part of my programme of visits to regions throughout the country. I visited the regional headquarters, Mersey Regional Ambulance Service NHS Trust, Walton Centre for Neurology and Neurosurgery NHS Trust, Royal Liverpool Children's Hospital NHS Trust and Princes Park health centre. I met a cross-section of staff and discussed a range of different subjects.

Dentistry

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish the report of the oral health strategy group on proposed changes to dental policy; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The oral health strategy group was asked, among other things, to advise on the development of an oral health strategy for England. Work on the strategy is still being carried forward.

Home Care Services

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received urging legislation requiring the inspection of private home care services; if she has any proposals to introduce such legislation; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: A small number of representations have been received urging statutory or voluntary control of independent sector domiciliary care agencies. We have no proposals to introduce controls at present.

London Health Care

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish the Tomlinson report; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Soon.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Prevention

1. Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that the drug prevention initiative fully participates in European drug prevention week.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The central drugs prevention unit and the 20 local drugs prevention teams have been actively involved in the planning of events for European drug prevention week. In co-operation with local agencies and community groups, the local teams have devised full and varied programmes. The drugs prevention initiative will make a major contribution to the international seminar and workshop to be held in London on 17 and 18 November.

16. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what commercial support has been received by his Department's drug prevention initiative.

Mr. Jack: In addition to cash donations, commercial support for the drugs prevention initiative has been given in the form of in-kind contributions of a number of specific events and projects. Between 29 October 1990, when the first local drugs prevention team began work, and 31 August 1992 the estimated total amount of quantifiable commercial support was £140,000, in cash and in kind.

Extradition

13. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek amendment to the rules on international extradition regulations, with a view to clarifying the legal position of Libyans suspected of the Lockerbie bombing.

Mr. Kenneth Clark: The legal position is not in doubt. By its resolution 748, the Security Council of the United Nations decided that the Libyan Government must surrender the accused for trial, either in Scotland or in the United States. Under the United Nations charter this obligation prevails over any other obligation which Libya might have under any other international agreement.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to extradite persons to India who would be liable to capital punishment there.

Mr. Jack: It is already Government policy in all cases in which an extradited person might be subject to capital punishment to obtain a satisfactory and acceptable guarantee from the requesting state that the death penalty will not be imposed or carried out. That policy is underpinned by provisions in both the Extradition Act 1989 and the new extradition treaty with India.

Primates

14. Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the standards set out in the code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures with regard to primates.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures is based on guidelines drawn up jointly by the Royal Society and the Universities Federation for Animal Welfare. We have no present plans to amend the code.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of primates used in scientific procedures in the United Kingdom are single housed in isolation from their fellows.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We are not aware of any cases where primates used in scientific procedures are being singly housed in isolation from their fellows—that is, without any opportunity to see and hear other primates held in the same room.

Holding primates in isolation would need special scientific justification and would require specific authority on project and personal licences issued under Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of primates used in the United Kingdom in scientific procedures in each of the last five years for which figures are available were (a) wild caught, (b) captive bred outside the United Kingdom and (c) captive bred in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not collected on a regular basis, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Guildford and Woolwich Bombings

15. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects Sir John May to complete his inquiry into the Guildford and Woolwich bombings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Sir John May has completed his examination of the circumstances surrounding the convictions of the Maguire family and their co-defendants. I expect shortly to receive his final report on that part of his inquiry. He announced on 31 July how he intends to examine the Guildford and Woolwich case without prejudicing the impending trial of three Surrey police officers. I expect to receive his report on this next year.

Prisons (Overcrowding)

17. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to find a solution to the problem of overcrowding in prisons generally and Cardiff prison in particular.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The existing prison building programme is intended to provide sufficient places for those sent to prison. It was begun in the early 1980s and will have delivered in excess of 11,000 places when it reaches completion in 1994. I hope very much to be able to provide additional accommodation in Cardiff prison, but it is not yet possible to announce our conclusions on this matter.

Police

18. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the level of expenditure on police, excluding police salaries, over the last five years; and how much of this amount was specifically for crime prevention equipment.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Between 1986-87 and 1990-91 central and local government spent £4 billion on non-pay expenditure in the police service. No specific expenditure is allotted by the police for crime prevention equipment.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the estimated cost of overtime payments to police officers in the financial year 1991-92 in respect of the holding of prisoners in police cells in England and Wales, the Metropolitan police district, Greater Manchester and west Yorkshire, respectively.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the cost of overtime payments to police officers is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The table shows the total payments made in 1991-92. The sums paid covered police salary costs, and all other costs arising from the operation including food, medical facilities, repairs to accommodation and transport.

Payment made to police forces, 1991-92

Police force	Total paid £
Greater Manchester	20,522,278·17
Metropolitan	11,316,943·02
West Yorkshire	5,425,866·08
England and Wales total	94,739,978·00

Travellers

19. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received regarding new age travellers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received several hundred letters from Members of Parliament and the public over the last few months.

Vehicle Marking

20. Mrs. Chaplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces have adopted vehicle-marking schemes.

Mr. Jack: There are now 32 vehicle watch type schemes operating in different police force areas in England and Wales.

Traffic Congestion, London

21. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will discuss with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis the problem of traffic congestion in London.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has no current plans to discuss the subject with the Commissioner.

Special Constabulary

22. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will include the special constabulary in his review of the police service.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No.

Law and Order

23. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on questions relating to law and order over the past three months.

Mr. Jack: I have received very many representations on a wide variety of issues which are covered by the term law and order from hon. Members, organisations and the public.

Frontier Controls

24. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will discuss with the European Commission the implications of article 8A of the treaty of Rome for frontier controls after 1 January 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government's views on article 8A are well known to the Commission, and vice versa. In my right hon. and learned Friend's discussion with Vice-President Bangemann, however, we have agreed to concentrate on practical measures to make it as easy as possible for EC nationals to enter and leave the United Kingdom. My right hon. and learned Friend will report to the House in due course on the outcome of these discussions.

Cheshire Police Stations

25. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been housed in Cheshire police stations after conviction since 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information available centrally enables me to provide for each month since April 1990 a figure for the average daily total of inmates, both convicted and unconvicted, who should have been in prison but were held instead in police cells in the Cheshire force area. I will arrange for a table, setting out this information, to be placed in the Official Report.

On 21 October, the latest date for which information is available there were 27 prisoners in police cells in Cheshire of whom one was convicted and sentenced.

Prisons (Children)

26. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of children in prison with their mothers, their ages and the establishment in which they reside.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 8 October 1992, there were a total of 26 babies in the three prison mother and baby units. The 10 babies at Holloway were all under nine months; the seven babies at Styal were between two months and 18 months and the 11 babies at Askham Grange ranged from one month to 18 months.

Criminal Offences

27. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many criminal offences were recorded in the first six months of 1992; and what was the number for the first six months of 1979.

Mr. Jack: Information for the first six months of 1992 is not yet available, but in the 12 months to the end of March 1992, 5·4 million notifiable offences were recorded by the police. But this is not directly comparable with 2·5 million recorded notifiable offences in 1979, because of the new counting rules introduced at the beginning of 1980.

Wheel Clamping

28. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed wheel clamping with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no specific discussion with the Commissioner on that subject. Officials, however, maintain regular contact with the Metropolitan police about the wheel clamping operation.

United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the replacement of the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement outlining the proposed organisation, structure and services provided by the United Kingdom Immigration Advisory Service; and if he will ensure no final decisions are made until the House has had an opportunity to debate his proposals.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 8 July, at columns 202-3.

Crime

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences of each category of crime were committed in each of the police divisions of the South Wales constabulary in the year ending March 1992; and what percentage this represented compared to (a) the year ended March 1991 and (b) the year ended March 1990.

Mr. Jack: The information available centrally for the year ending March 1992 relates to the South Wales constabulary as a whole and is contained in the table. Information on total crime recorded in each police division for calendar years can be found in the annual report of the chief constable for South Wales.

Notifiable offences recorded by the police in the South Wales police force area

	Number of offences in year ending March 1992	Percentage change year ending March 1992
		Over year ending March 1991	Over year ending March 1992
Violence against the person	5,180	16	15
Sexual offences	521	−1	6
Robbery	358	47	44
Burglary	37,618	27	48
Theft and handling stolen goods	82,642	7	30
Fraud and forgery	3,615	14	26
Criminal damage	33,466	13	40
Other offences	786	11	38
Total	164,186	13	35

Repatriation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give the number of voluntary repatriations over the past 12 months showing (a) how many of those who were repatriated suffered from mental illness and (b) to what countries they were repatriated;

(2) if he will make a statement on the legal and administrative processes involved in the decision to authorise repatriation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Between September 1991 and October 1992 there have been 44 cases of voluntary repatriation under section 29 of the Immigration Act 1971, involving 56 individuals. None of these individuals was suffering from any form of psychiatric illness at the time of departure. Under the section 29 scheme, financial assistance is available in certain circumstances from public funds for non-British citizens settled in this country who wish to return permanently to their country of origin. This scheme is administered on behalf of the Home Office by the International Social Service of the United Kingdom, which assesses each application for assistance on its merits, according to certain conditions. If the hon. Member has any particular case in mind, he is invited to write to me and I shall send a substantive reply.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to ensure that proposals and resolutions presented for adoption by the immigration Ministers of the member states of the EC meeting inter-governmentally on 30 November and 1 December are in compliance with the international obligations of the member states and Community law.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The proposals and draft resolutions do not constitute legally binding instruments and cannot override Community law or the other international obligations of member states.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proposals or resolutions are being presented to the immigration Ministers of the member states of the EC meeting inter-governmentally on 30 November and 1 December; what is the status of such proposals; and if he will place copies in the Library;

(2) what steps have been taken to inform Parliament about the contents of proposals and resolutions which will be considered for adoption by the immigration Ministers of the member states meeting inter-governmentally on 30 November and 1 December and the extent to which such proposals or resolutions will affect United Kingdom immigration control, policy and law.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the answers which I gave to his previous questions on this matter on 19 October 1992 at columns 45-50. Parliament will be informed in the normal way of decisions or resolutions adopted by Ministers.

Blasphemy Laws

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reform the blasphemy laws.

Mr. Jack: We have no plans to legislate in this area.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whom he consulted in creating the information pack sent to judges to increase their awareness of their duty to avoid racial discrimination.

Mr. Jack: The publication "Race and the Criminal Justice System" published under section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 and drawing on statistics and research findings currently available was published after consultation with the Judicial Studies Board and in particular the chairman of its ethnic minorities advisory committee.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend legislative protection from racial discrimination to cover religious discrimination.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In its second review of the Race Relations Act 1976 the Commission for Racial Equality has recommended that consideration be given to legislation on religious discrimination. The Government are currently giving careful consideration to all the recommendations which were put forward in the review.

Race Relations

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to the recommendations of the Commission for Racial Equality in the second review of the Race Relations Act 1976.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Commission for Racial Equality has put forward wide-ranging recommendations in its second review of the Race Relations Act 1976. The Government are now giving these careful consideration.

Racial Harassment

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to amend the Race Relations Act 1976 to make racial discrimination and harassment of one private household by another an offence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 19 October 1992]: Sanctions against threatening, abusive as anti-social behaviour, which clearly could include racial harassment, are contained in several Acts of Parliament. Sections 4 and 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 may be used where appropriate.

The Government are currently giving careful consideration to the recommendations which were put forward last month by the Commission for Racial Equality in its second review of the Race Relations Act 1976.

Crime Squad Report

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to the report of Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary on No. 8 regional crime squad.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I was pleased to note the recent report of Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary which attested to the effectiveness of the existing No. 8 regional crime squad. However, I share the inspector's view that the region would be better served by amalgamating the No. 7 and No. 8 regional crime squads.

Animal Experiments

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will withdraw the project licence authorising the University of Glasgow's department of neurophathology to undertake research on guinea pigs.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend is required by the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to consider the scientific justification for research involving living animals, alongside any adverse effects on the animals involved. He is satisfied that the work authorised at the university of Glasgow meets this test.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the trends in the numbers of animals used in scientific procedures.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There has been a long-term downward trend in the number of experiments using animals, although there are bound to be fluctuations from year to year. For example, the 1991 statistics, published in July, showed that animal testing for cosmetics safety was down on the previous year and so was the number of experiments involving primates, but that there had been a slight increase in the total number of procedures carried out. The main reasons for the latter increase were the development of new techniques involving genetically modified material, and the clarification of rules controlling the number of times individual animals may be used in research.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reasons underlay his decision to discontinue the listing of statistics for the LD50 and LC50 tests on live animals separately from other statistics relating to laboratory procedures on animals.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The change in the published statistics in 1990 and 1991 was for the sake of clarity, the objective being to ensure that all acute lethal toxicity tests were clearly identified, and not just the formal LD50 and LC50 tests.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to announce the name of the next chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I hope to make an announcement in the near future.

Suspects' Rights

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that the leaflet which police must give all suspects explaining their rights can be understood by the average suspect.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend recognises that some suspects have reading or learning difficulties. It is in their best interests to tell the custody officer about their problem so that he can explain their rights to them. For those who are reluctant to admit a disability, he is considering the issue of a simplified leaflet which could complement the existing notice of entitlements.

Suspects whose main language is other than English are offered a leaflet in one of the 29 languages now available.

Trial By Jury

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to restrict defendants' rights to trial by jury.

Mr. Jack: We have no current plans to restrict the existing rights of defendants to elect trial by jury.

Police Complaints Authority

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new appointment has been made to the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Mr. John Cartwright, the former Labour and Social Democrat Member for Woolwich, has accepted my invitation to serve as a member of the Police Complaints Authority. He will take up his post on 26 October.

British National Party

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he intends to make to the statement by police in Woolwich and Plumstead concerning the effect of the activities of the British National party on the level of racial harassment, intimidation and attacks in the area.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I am not aware of any such statement. The number of reported racial incidents in Woolwich and Plumstead is much lower this year than it was last.

Of the 103 racial incidents reported this year, only two were directly attributable to the activities of the British National party. I have every confidence in the ability and determination of the local police to respond effectively whenever any individual steps outside the law with regard to racial harassment.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No separate financial provision has been made. Identifying the potential for deregulation is an integral part of this Department's work.

Fire Services (Wales)

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangments he envisages for the organisation of fire services in Wales following the planned introduction of unitary authorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These matters are still under discussion.

General Election

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average cost of the general election to public funds in constituencies in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Great Britain; and what were the three highest and three lowest in each case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the cost of the general election in each constituency will not be available until all returning officers' accounts have been submitted and settled. Returning officers have 12 months from the date of the general election in which to submit their claims.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the (a) average, (b) shortest and (c) longest period of time taken to carry out the count for constituencies in (i) England, (ii) Scotland, (iii) Wales and (iv) Great Britain at the general election in 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the time taken to count the votes at parliamentary elections is not collected centrally.

Police Shootings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the people shot dead by police officers for each year since 1979 giving the date in each case.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is set out in the table:

Year and Date	Name
1979—21 March	Paul Andrew Howe
1980—12 June	Gail Kinchen
1985—24 August	John Shorthouse
1987— 6 February	Denis Bergin
19 July	Nicholas Payne
19 July	Michael Flynn
22 November	Glyn Davis
23 November	Tony Ash
1989—13 April	James Farrell
	Terence Dewsnap
1990—26 April	Michael Alexander
27 November	Kenneth Baker
	Ian Garfield
1991—12 August	Gordon
12 October	Derek Wallbanks
10 December	Keith Carrott
1992— 1 January	Ian Charles Bennett
27 February	Barry Clutterham
23 June	Peter Swann

Immigration Records

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what records of passengers arriving at United Kingdom ports of entry, by category of admission, are placed on the immigration and nationality department electronic computer system—INDECS—computer; what actions are recorded about individuals; what criteria are used when considering whether passenger details should be entered on INDECS; and how many entrants to the United Kingdom have had any details entered on INDECS.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 19 October 1992]: INDECS contains records of passengers given a limited leave to enter the United Kingdom although most people admitted for short-term purposes are not entered on the system. Details on the landing card are recorded with the expiry date of the leave to enter. Any subsequent variations to that leave, and the person's departure from the United Kingdom, are also recorded. Of the 8·1 million admissions of non-EC nationals in 1991, 1·2 million were recorded on INDECS.

Convictions (Safety)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received into the safety of the conviction of Frank Johnson; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 October 1992]: My right hon. Friend is considering representations about this case received recently from the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair). Representations have previously been received from Mr. Johnson, from a number of hon. Members and former hon. Members and from the National Association of Probation Officers in conjunction with the organisations Conviction and Liberty; but no grounds for intervention in the case could be found after consideration of any of these particular representations.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Addiction

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the drug addicts notified to the Home Office in 1991 were resident in Wales; and how many of those in Wales were (a) new addicts, (b) under 25 years and (c) new addicts under 25 years.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is contained in tables A1, A3, A9 and A10 of the area tables of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of drug addicts notified to the Home Office, United Kingdom, 1991", a copy of which is in the Library.

South African Security Personnel

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will conduct an immediate investigation into the activities of South African government security personnel in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. Any such activities are subject to the normal process of law.

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration was given to deporting Captain Pamela du Randt and Mr. Leon Flores under the prevention of terrorism Acts.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None. The exclusion powers under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 may be used only in respect of people involved in terrorism connected with the affairs of Northern Ireland.

Asylum

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Sikhs have applied for political asylum since 1984; and how many have been successful.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The statistics on persons applying for asylum do not identify the ethnic origin of the applicant, but are analysed by citizenship. From January 1984 to September 1992 inclusive, some 5,900 Indian citizens, excluding dependants, applied for asylum in the United Kingdom. It is likely that the majority of these applications have been made by Sikhs. Since 1984, no applicants have been found to be genuine refugees and granted asylum, but nearly 800 of those refused asylum have been granted exceptional leave to remain.

No. 8 Regional Crime Squad

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from chief constables in Wales, police authorities in mid and south Wales and other bodies in Wales regarding the future of No. 8 regional crime squad.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend recently received a letter from Mr. Hugh Thomas, the clerk to the South Wales police authority, on behalf of the three police authorities—South Wales, Dyfed-Powys and Gwent—which make up No. 8 regional crime squad, asking whether I will receive a deputation on this subject.

Foreign Entrants

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been allowed to enter the United Kingdom from Somalia and the former Yugoslavia in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Provisional figures show that in the 12 months to the end of August 1992, some 3,600 nationals of Somalia and 50,800 nationals of the former state of Yugoslavia were given leave to enter at United Kingdom ports. The vast majority of these persons were visitors, students, transit passengers or passengers returning. In addition, during the same period, some 665 nationals of Somalia and 500 nationals of the former state of Yugoslavia applied for asylum at the ports and were given temporary admission.

Visas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to curtail or abolish the right of appeal for those refused a visa to visit the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 22 October 1992]: The Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill, introduced on 22 October, contains provisions to amend part II of the Immigration Act 1971, to remove the right of appeal against certain immigration decisions, including the refusal of a visa to come to the United Kingdom as a visitor.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken on the findings of the Commission for Racial Equality that young black people, particularly in inner cities, were substantially more likely to be charged than whites for similar offences.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 October 1992]: I have recently received this report and will be looking closely at its findings. The report suggests that further data are needed to establish the reasons for differences in prosecution rates, and that these data can be obtained only through permanent ethnic monitoring. The Home Secretary now has a duty under section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 to publish information on race and the criminal justice system, and the first booklet containing such information was published in September this year.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people over the past year, to date, from former states of Yugoslavia, have applied to enter the United Kingdom; how many applied (a) to visit, (b) to study, (c) to settle as a dependent relative, (d) to join a relative, (e) for political asylum and (f) for other reasons; how many applications, in each category, have (i) been granted, (ii) been refused, (iii) are still being considered, (iv) are subject to appeal, or (v) the applicant has been removed from the United Kingdom to return to country of origin.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The available information relates to nationals of the former states of Yugoslavia admitted or refused at United Kingdom ports, and is given in the table.

Nationals of the former states of Yugoslavia

	January to August 1992[1]
Total admissions (ie, persons given leave to enter	33,200
Of whom:
visitors	21,900
students	1,680
spouses, fiance(e)s, children	50
others[2]	9,540
Persons refused leave to enter and removed[3]	429
Persons applying for asylum at United Kingdom ports[4][5]	930

Notes:

[1] Figures are provisional.

[2] Mainly passengers returning and transit passengers.

[3] The majority of those refused and removed were seeking entry as a visitor or student. No asylum seekers have been returned to Yugoslavia; 43 have been removed to safe third countries.

[4] Covers period January to September 1992.

[5] Such persons are given temporary admission while their application is being considered. Nearly all of these persons are still awaiting a decision. The figure excludes dependants.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Tenancies

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what stage has been reached in the discussions with the industry on the reform of agricultural tenancy legislation; and when he will lay new legislation before the House.

Mr. Gummer: The consultations that I announced to the House on 12 February 1991, Official Report, column 391, have led to a wide measure of agreement within the industry on the principle of reform of the legislation. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I remain convinced that new simpler and leaner legislation is needed to enable farmers and landowners to adapt to changing conditions in agriculture and the economy of the countryside. We have refined our proposals in the light of the consultations and we intend to complete discussions on the outstanding points by the end of the year with a view to introducing legislation as soon as parliamentary time becomes available.

EDUCATION

School Meals

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table showing the latest figures on the take-up of school meals broken down into (a) all schools meals, (b) free school meals and (c) paid school meals, for (i) primary school children and (ii) secondary school children separately.

Mr. Forth: Provisional information about school meals take up in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England in January 1992 is shown in the table.

(Thousands)

	Paid	Free	Total
Primary (including nursery)	1,139	681	1,820
Secondary	866	294	1,160

University Technicians

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to ensure consistency in the application of new pay structures for university technicians in different parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forman: The pay of university technicians, and the consistency of applications of any new pay structure, is entirely a matter for their employers. The Government have no intention of becoming involved in the negotiating arrangements.

Further Education

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many full-time 16 to 18-year-old students in England and Wales fail to complete A-level courses.

Mr. Forman: This information is not available in the form requested.

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many 16 to 18-year-olds stay in full-time education; what proportion takes (a) A-levels, (b) vocational courses and (c) other courses; and what are the corresponding figures five years ago.

Mr. Forman: The information requested is given in the table for young people aged 16 and 17 at 31 August at the start of each academic year:

	1986-87	1991-92[1]
Total aged 16 and 17 in full-time education	571,000	677,000
A/AS level—per cent.	54	57
Vocational courses—per cent.	22	25
Other courses[2]—per cent.	24	19

[1] Percentages do not add to 100 because of rounding.

[2] Includes GCSE, courses leading to no explicit qualification and college certificates and diplomas.

Education Reform

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received about the schools' reorganisation proposals published in October 1991 and January 1992 by the Roman Catholic diocese of Arundel and the Brighton Schools Commission; and when he now expects to announce his decision on these proposals.

Mr. Forth: A substantial number of written objections to the proposals have been received and I have also listened to arguments put forward by deputations led by a number of my right hon. and hon. Friends.

The proposals are complex and wide ranging but I hope that our decision can be announced very shortly.

WALES

Environment Wales

• Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what organisations have been supported by his Environment Wales grant scheme; and what criteria he adopts in awarding grants.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The following organisations have been supported by Environment Wales:

Association of Welsh Wildlife Trusts
Amelia Trust Farm
Brecknock Wildlife Trust
British Trust for Conservation Volunteers
Cardiff City Farm
Centre for Alternative Technology
Community Service Volunteers
Field Studies Council
Flat Holm Society
Friends of the Earth
Friends of Forest Farm and the Glamorgan Canal
Greenfield Valley Heritage Trust
Groundwork
Gwent Wildlife Trust
Harvest Trust
Keep Wales Tidy Campaign
Montgomery Wildlife Trust
National Society of Allotment and Leisure Gardeners
National Trust
North Wales Wildlife Trust
Offa's Dyke Association
Open Spaces Society
Pengwern Hall
Pentre Ifan Environmental Centre (Urdd Gobaith Cymru)
Presteigne Recyling Scheme
Prince of Wales Committee
Prince of Wales Committee—Environmental Education Group
Rambler's Association
Royal Society for Nature Conservation
South Glamorgan Play Resource Centre
Track 2000
Treescene
Wales Wildlife and Countryside Link
Welsh Historic Gardens Trust
West Wales Energy Group
Wildfowl and Wetlands Trust

The policy for awarding grants under the initiative is outlined in the Environment Wales policy statement, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Environmentally Friendly Farming

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress made with the Tir Cymen scheme for environmental friendly farming in Wales; and what resources have been committed to the scheme to date.

Mr. David Hunt: The Tir Cymen scheme was launched on 21 July 1992. The application period for entry to the scheme in 1992 ends on 30 October.

The resources committed to the scheme are £500,000 in 1992-93.

Special Protection Areas

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional resources have been committed to establish the five new special protection areas to which reference is made in chapter 18, paragraph 18.5 of "Britain's Environmental Strategy", Cm 2068.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department has allocated no additional resources specifically related to the designation of the five special protection areas in question.

Singleton Hospital

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations resulted from the consultation on the proposed trust status for Singleton hospital; and how many of these supported the proposal and how many opposed it.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A total of 90 representations have been received in response to the public consultation on the application from the west unit, West Glamorgan health authority to become an NHS trust in April 1993. Where a clear view was expressed, 19 supported the proposal for trust status and with 49 did not.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Action

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give for the most recent date for which figures are available the number of employment action places proposed and filled for each region and for Great Britain.

Mr. McLoughlin: Employment action plans to help 60,000 people in Britain in 1992-93. Figures for planned places are not available by region. Information from the Employment Service indicates that as at 10 September the number of employment action participants was as follows:

ES Region	Participants
Northern	1,658
North-west	3,644
Yorkshire and Humberside	2,945
West Midlands	2,250
East Midlands	2,600
London and south-east	6,251
South-west	1,908
Scotland	2,741
Wales	1,790
Great Britain	25,787

PRIME MINISTER

Sir Peter Kemp

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what were the reasons for Sir Peter Kemp's departure as Permanent Secretary at the Office of Public Service and Science.

The Prime Minister: When Sir Peter Kemp was appointed Second Permanent Secretary in 1988, the main responsibility of his post was to lead the "next steps" project, which he did with distinction. The formation of the Office of Public Service and Science after the general election created a new department with wider responsibilities, demanding different qualities in the Permanent Secretary. Since no suitable alternative post was available at Permanent Secretary level, the Head of the Civil Service decided to ask Sir Peter to take early retirement on the favourable terms available in those circumstances.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will make a statement on the details and grounds of enhancement on pension and other departure terms afforded to Sir Peter Kemp, following his departure as Permanent Secretary at the Office of Public Service and Science;

(2) how many years' service Sir Peter Kemp had left, before normal retirement age, prior to his departure as Permanent Secretary at the Office of Public Service and Science.

The Prime Minister: Sir Peter Kemp was asked to take early retirement, with effect from 14 September 1992, from his post as Second Permanent Secretary of the Office of Public Service and Science.

The terms under which he left were those appropriate to a compulsory early retirement as set out in the civil service pay and conditions of service code. He received six months' pay in lieu of notice and a lump sum compensation payment; he will also receive payment of his pension and lump sum enhanced by two years and 25 days —the period between his date of leaving the service and the normal retirement age of 60.

Fort Victoria

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what completion date was given by (a) Swan Hunter and (b) Harland and Wolff, in bidding for the contract to construct the Royal Navy supertanker Fort Victoria; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The original acceptance date for Fort Victoria based on Harland and Wolff's tender was January 1990. The date offered by Swan Hunter Shipbuilders was later that year.

Thames Path

Ms. Walley: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received concerning the facilitating of the Thames path along the Albert embankment; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Two—from Lambeth council and the Ramblers Association, in relation to part of the proposed Thames path to which the public do not enjoy access at present.

London Police Forces

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the non-Home Office police forces operating within Greater London, and their responsible Minister.

The Prime Minister: A full list of all such organisations operating within Greater London is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The forces concerned range from large organisations such as the British Transport police, the Ministry of Defence police and the Royal Parks constabulary to small groups of constables sworn in by local authorities for specific areas or undertakings. Responsibility for non-Home Office forces rests with the appropriate Government Minister, Department, local authority or the private company concerned.

EC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy not to agree to an increase in the United Kingdom contribution to the EC budget under the treaty on European union.

The Prime Minister: The draft treaty on European union does not of itself provide for an increase in the European Community budget. In the review of Community future financing now in progress, the Commission has proposed significant increases in Community expenditure and in the own resources ceiling. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has indicated, these increases are not acceptable.

European Union

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will invite Lord Mackenzie Stuart, the retired President of the EC Court of Justice, to discuss with him the effect of article 3b of the treaty on European union.

The Prime Minister: No. As I told the hon. Gentleman on 20 October, Official Report, column 326, I share the Lord Chancellor's view that subsidiarity is a principle enforceable by the European Court of Justice.

Government Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister within what period it is his policy to achieve (a) full employment and (b) a sustainable rate of growth.

The Prime Minister: The Government's policies are designed to achieve sustained non-inflationary growth. This is the best means of promoting sustainable, long-term growth in employment.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his plans to return to member states some of the power which the EC institutions at present exercise over them; and if he will list the provisions of the Maastricht treaty which he will use for this purpose.

The Prime Minister: The Community exercises only those powers conferred on it by the Community treaties, signed and ratified by all member states. The principle of subsidiarity, as expressed in article 3b of the Maastricht treaty, is designed to ensure that the Community does not go beyond those powers, and that where the treaty allows a choice between Community level action and action at the level of the member state there will be presumption in favour of the latter.

Death Row, Jamaica

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister if he will protest to the Prime Minister of Jamaica about the number of Jamaicans held on death row for long periods.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 October 1992]: We have told the Jamaican Government of our concern about the prisoners on death row. I understand the legislation on the death penalty is at present before the Jamaican parliament.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the next steps agencies established by this Government since 1979.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 October 1992]: The information requested is set out.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Currency Speculators

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he will be making to the EC to curb the activities of speculators in the currency market.

Mr. Nelson: I have no plans to propose controls aimed at curbing the activities of speculators in the currency market.

VAT

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reduce value added tax to 15 per cent.

Sir John Cope: No. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has no plans to do so.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to ensure that day care and domiciliary care services provided under contract to statutory bodies are not liable to value added tax charges.

Sir John Cope: No. My right [illegible] Friend has no plans to extend the current relevant exemption which is for supplies of welfare services if they are supplied by a charity or public body otherwise than for profit.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any officials from the Bank of England supervision department have been suspended pending investigations by the Serious Fraud Office into allegations of bribery in relation to the BCCI affair.

Mr. Nelson: The allegations have, at the request of the Bank of England, been investigated by the Serious Fraud Office which announced on 20 October that its investigations had revealed no evidence to substantiate any of the claims made.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to Senator John Kerry's report into the supervision of BCCI; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 22 October 1992]: My right hon. Friend has seen Senator John Kerry's subcommittee's report of its investigation of BCCI, which goes a good way beyond the supervision of the bank. He notes, that unlike Lord Justice Bingham, Senator Kerry's sub-committee had no access to the Bank of England's documents, took no evidence from the bank or BCCI's auditors, and failed to check any conclusions or findings with either of them.

Revenue Implications

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue lost from (a) income tax, (b) value-added tax and (c) other revenues to the Exchequer for a reduction in employment of 20,000 employees, for a range of different assumptions of average income of such employees.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 22 October 1992]: The effect of job losses on tax revenues will depend on a large number of factors in addition to the level of income of the employees affected and cannot therefore reliably be calculated.

Invalidity Benefit

Ms. Liz Lynne : To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans there are for the taxation of invalidity benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 22 October 1992]: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 19 October, Official Report, column 190.

HEALTH

Bail Hostels

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the operation of catering, sanitary and medical facilities, and so on at bail hostels are subject to the normal inspection of health and safety officers.

Mr. Sackville: Local authorities are responsible for normal inspection of hostels including sanitation facilities, and catering facilities where food is provided to bail hostel residents rather than self catering.

Health and Safety Executive inspectors are responsible for enforcing provisions on the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 at bail hostels. These premises are subject to the same considerations as others for which HSE has enforcement responsibility and may be visited for a variety of purposes, including planned inspection and the investigation of incidents and complaints.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women in the national health service have agreed to their names being put on a confidential list to be used by her Department to assist NHS managers in a drive to get more women into top positions; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: A total of 973 women have requested that their names be placed on the NHS women's national career development register.

This programme is an innovation, not just for the NHS but for other public and private sector employers. In this respect the NHS is leading the field in women's employment and development by providing a programme of positive action and career development at this level of the organisation.

Creuzfeld-Jakob Disease

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of possible, probable and confirmed (a) new cases of and (b) deaths from Creuzfeld-Jakob disease in each year since 1986.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) on 23 June at columns 155-56.

National Incontinence Helpline

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has made a section 64 grant for the current year to the national incontinence helpline operated by the Newcastle Dene centre; and what similar grants were given in previous years.

Mr. Yeo: A section 64 grant has not been paid to the Dene centre incontinence helpline for 1992-93. Previously £20,000 was awarded over two years from 1988-89. This service has now been secured with the help of the Continence Foundation, which also receives our financial support.

Dentists

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the number of dentists in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority withdrawing national health service treatment from their existing patients; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since 3 July 1992, the Lancashire family health services authority, which covers Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale, has not reported any dentists asking for their names to be removed from the family health services authority list. Over the same period, nine dentists in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale area have notified the family health services authority of their intention to remove 68 adult patients and one child from their patient lists. I am informed by Lancashire family health services authority that there are no patients who have contacted it for assistance in obtaining national health service dental treatment for whom such treatment could not be arranged.

Supra-regional Services

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make available a summary of the funding and levels of activity agreed for 1992-93 with centres designated to provide supra-regional services.

Mr. Sackville: A summary of this information has been placed in the Library as an addendum to the document "Supra regional services 1992-93: announcement by the Secretary of State for Health".

Learning Disabilities

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she proposes to issue guidance on the development of services for people with learning disabilities.

Mr. Yeo: I will be issuing guidance on 26 October to health and local authorities on the development of services to meet the health and social care needs of people with learning disabilities. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Students (Health Care)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what criteria are used to decide whether a full-time student is eligible to receive full financial assistance with dental and other national health service charges;

(2) if it is Government policy to include a national student loan in their calculations concerning full financial assistance to full-time students for health care.

Dr. Mawhinney: Dental treatment and other national health service services are provided free to patients, including full-time students in higher education, who are eligible for charge exemption on grounds of health or status, or who qualify for full charge remission under the national health service low income scheme. Full or partial help from this scheme is income related taking account of all resources available to individual patients, including student loans.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the retirement pension for a single person and a couple would be in April 1993 if it had continued to be uprated with earnings or prices, whichever was the higher, since the link was broken.

Miss Widdecombe: Figures for April 1993 are not yet available. The current—April 1992—rates of basic retirement pension would be £71 for a single person and £113·65 for a couple. This would cost a man on average earnings and his employer an extra £11·20 per week between them in national insurance contributions.

Note:

There are no "single" or "couple" rates of Retirement Pension. The standard pension is calculated on the basis of individual contribution records or, in the case of some married women, on the basis of their husbands' contributions. Adult dependency additions may be awarded where the wife of a pensioner is under pension age. The rates quoted are those which would be payable (a) on the basis of a person's own contributions (assuming the contribution conditions were fully satisfied) and (b) the total of (a) plus a pension based on a husband's contributions or an adult dependency increase.

Therapeutic Earnings

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the rules surrounding the treatment of therapeutic earnings in (a) the income support regulations and (b) the housing benefit regulations; and what discretion is available to DSS officers and housing benefit officers, respectively, when assessing income from therapeutic earnings.

Mr. Burt: Neither income support nor housing benefit has specific rules about therapeutic earnings.

In income support, both disabled and able-bodied people may work part time—under 16 hours a week—and £5 or £15 a week of their earnings will be disregarded. In the case of a person who is entitled to, or has an underlying entitlement to, the disability premium, the higher, £15, disregard applies.

In addition, certain disabled people—those whose earning capacity is reduced to 75 per cent. or less of what it would be but for their disability, and people in residential care—can work for more than 16 hours a week and still be entitled to claim income support.

Unlike income support, housing benefit is payable irrespective of the number of hours worked. In housing benefit, a person who is entitled to, or has an underlying entitlement to, a disability premium will similarly receive the £15 earnings disregard. Otherwise, the amount of earnings disregarded will generally be £10 in the case of a couple, or £5 in the case of a single person.

Benefits

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women were in receipt of the housewives non-contributory invalidity pension; how many men were in receipt of the non-contributory invalidity pension from the date of their introduction until 1983; and how many people were in receipt of severe disablement allowance broken down into men and women since 1983.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is given in the tables.

Table 1

Non-contributory invalidity pension (NCIP) and housewives non-contributory invalidity pension (HNCIP) beneficiaries (in 1000s)

Date	NICP Beneficiaries (Male)	HNCIP Beneficiaries (Female)

30 March 1991	116	178	293

[1] Figures not available for 1977. HNCIP was introduced on 17 November 1977.

[2] Figures not available for 1983. SDA was introduced on 29 November 1984.

Figures for 1991-92 not yet available.

Numbers rounded to nearest thousand.

The total number of beneficiaries is shown at a point in time for each year from the introduction of the benefit. Beneficiaries in each year are not necessarily the same people.

National Insurance Benefits

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Ainsworth), of 6 July, Official Report, columns 85-86, if he will make an estimate of the cumulative spending and savings made on the various national insurance benefits since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Reliable estimates are not possible because there have been significant changes in the number and characteristics of beneficiaries, and in general economic circumstances, since the measures were introduced.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures based on the households below average income statistics which show the numbers and proportions of people living below 50 per cent. of average income before and after housing costs in each region of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Burt: A reliable regional breakdown of the numbers and proportions living below half average income could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Statistics for the United Kingdom as a whole are available in "Households Below Average Income", copies of which are available in the Library.

TRANSPORT

British Rail Stations

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has been made by his Department of the number of stations on the British Rail network that can be safely operated without staff during hours when the stations are open.

Mr. Freeman: Staffing levels are a matter for British Rail and it is for BR to assess, on a station-by-station basis, which stations can be operated without staff. Before reaching a decision to operate a station without staff BR takes full account of any possible implications for safety. A code of practice for unstaffed stations has also been agreed between BR and the Central Transport Consultative Committee, which provides for prior consultation between BR and the relevant area committee before a station is destaffed.

Bridges (Corrosion)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the locations of (a) the motorways and (b) the trunk roads on which his Department is inspecting bridges with tensioned steel reinforcing that may be suffering from corrosion from de-icing.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: All bridges and other structures on the truck road and motorway network in England are inspected at least once every two years. In addition to these regular inspections, each of the post tensioned structures on the network, of which there are approximately 600, will be given a special, more detailed inspection in the course of the next five years.

Pit Closures

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluation he has made of the employment implications for road haulage and rail freight of Her Majesty's Government's decision to contract the coal mining industry with pit closures.

Mr. Freeman: The demand for haulage of coal by road and rail depends on the amounts, types and sources of coal required by power generators and other users. It is for British Rail to assess the impact of changes in the scale and pattern of demand on its operations and staff requirements. No comparable assessment can be made for the road haulage industry because of the great number of flows and operators concerned.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance is given by his Department to local planning authorities about planning applications for the creation of accesses from trunk roads.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Circular Roads 4/88 "The Control of Development on Trunk Roads", dated November 1988, to chief executives of local authorities sets out the policy and principles which guide the Department in exercising its powers under the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 and in offering views on planning applications. The guidance covers creation of accesses.

The circular is also widely available to developers along with Circular Roads 6/91, "Development in the Vicinity of Trunk Roads, Agreements under Section 278 of the Highways Act 1980", dated October 1991. Copies of both circulars are in the Library.

New proposals for developers' contributions to highway works were announced on 14 August and are currently the subject of public consultation.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the expenditure which has been incurred to date (a) on planning and design work, (b) on preliminary works currently being undertaken in the vicinity of Westminster station and (c) on other preliminary works which have been undertaken to date, in preparation for the extension of the Jubilee line to Stratford.

Mr. Norris: To 10 October 1992, expenditure of (a) some £79 million has been incurred on planning and design; (b) some £2 million on the preliminary works at Westminster station; and (c) some £62 million on other preliminary works, in preparation for the extension of the Jubilee line to Stratford.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to approve the construction of the Jubilee line extension.

Mr. Norris: Talks are continuing on the promised £400 million contribution from the private sector. I cannot speculate on the future of the Jubilee line extension in advance of the conclusion of those talks.

North Circular Road

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received concerning access to side roads from the north circular road.

Mr. Norris: A large number of representations concerning access to side roads from the north circular road are currently being considered by the Department in relation to proposed major road improvements.

ACCOMMODATION AND WORKS COMMITTEE

Old Palace Yard

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee (1) what sum has been expended on the refurbishment on 6-7 Old Palace Yard since 9 April;

(2) what is the present cost of the refurbishment and alterations at 6-7 Old Palace Yard.

Mr. Ray Powell: The expenditure on refurbishment of 6-7 Old Palace Yard since 9 April 1992 was £4,700. In addition £7,200 was spent on replacement furniture and essential routine maintenance continued as necessary.

As a consequence of the transfer of the buildings to the other place, the cost of any future conservation and restoration will be the responsibility of that House.

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what is the estimated cost of refurbishment and alteration to the premises at 7 Millbank to receive the secretaries who presently work at Old Palace Yard.

Mr. Ray Powell: As plans for the refurbishment of relevant accommodation at 7 Millbank have not yet been finalised, it is not possible to provide this information.

Palace of Westminster

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what sums were spent on the Palace of Westminster and its associated offices during the summer vacation.

Mr. Ray Powell: The cost of the 1992 summer works programme in the Palace of Westminster and its associated buildings was some £5 million.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Works of Art (Export)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the report of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art, 1991-92, will be published.

Mr. Brooke: The reviewing committee's annual report, 1991-92, has been published today, and copies have been laid in the Libraries of both Houses.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to increase the funds available to local authorities for the maintenance of listed buildings owned by themselves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will be announcing details of the local government finance settlement in November, which will take into account the pressures falling on local authority expenditure in 1993-94.

Listed Buildings, Buxton

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the current position in respect of the listed crescent in Buxton, Derbyshire which his Department has ordered should be repaired or face compulsory purchase; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Following the visit of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to Buxton in September, there have been discussions between English Heritage and the owners of the former St. Ann's hotel. But the owners have not so far put forward convincing plans for carrying out restoration work to an acceptable timetable. Work is therefore in hand on the preparation of a repairs notice under section 48 of the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990.

On 19 October, I met a delegation from Buxton who handed me a petition signed by many local residents. I assured them of my determination to see the crescent restored.

ENVIRONMENT

Tenanted Houses (Transfers)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the consultation paper on the future arrangement for the voluntary transfer of tenanted houses from local authorities to other landlords.

Mr. Baldry: Soon.

British Coal Opencast

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the procedures whereby British Coal Opencast is given preferential treatment over other mineral operators, and bring British Coal into line with other operators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Yes. We are bringing British Coal's permitted development rights for opencast exploration into line with those available to other mineral operators by amendment to the General Development Order. Other matters are under review.

Roads (Planning)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement clarifying the role of an inspector when presiding over an appeal against a decision by a local planning authority to refuse permission for the construction of an access from a trunk road to a side road in those cases where the authority concerned had been directed by the Department of Transport to refuse such an application.

Mr. Baldry: The role of a planning inspector in such circumstances is to visit the site, review all the material considerations made in writing or in person at the public inquiry and produce a report with recommendations on whether the appeal may be allowed, subject to conditions, or dismissed. It is then for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to decide the appeal in the light of that report.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance about the impact upon businesses is given by his Department to local planning authorities when considering applications to retain accesses to side roads from trunk roads.

Mr. Baldry: The Department's planning policy guidance note 13 gives advice on highways considerations in development control, including the question of access to primary routes. I am sending my hon. Friend a copy of that note.

Homelessness

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, to the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms. Jackson), Official Report, column 215, what plans he has to amend homelessness legislation to end the alleged practices of women becoming pregnant in order to obtain council house tenancies.

Mr. Baldry: The Government have no immediate plans for further legislative change, although the operation of the homelessness legislation is monitored closely.

Drinking Water Inspectorate

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it remains his policy to transfer the drinking water inspectorate to the proposed environmental protection agency.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend on 15 July 1992 to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones), Official Report, column 858.

Tarmac plc

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he is making to protect the security of defence establishment and royal palace records following the transfer of PSA Projects to Tarmac plc; and whether Tarmac employees will receive any security vetting.

Mr. Howard: Records on work completed by PSA Projects have been archived within government and will not be transferred with PSA Project Ltd. on sale to Tarmac plc. Classified records for current projects will be loaned to PSA Projects Ltd. but will be returned to Government once work is completed. Government Departments will continue to be responsible for security arrangements on their establishments and the same procedures will be followed in the future as has been followed in the past. The private sector, including Tarmac Construction Ltd., has worked on Government defence contacts for many years and is aware of the rules governing the control and access for classified documents. In general, existing PSA Projects staff will continue to work on the projects on which they are currently engaged. Security vetting of any new employees of PSA Projects Ltd. will be organised as necessary after completion of the sale. PSA Projects does not hold records on royal palaces.

Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what performance targets he has set for the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre executive agency for 1992-93.

Mr. Baldry: The key performance measure for the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre is the net balance on its operating account. The target for 1992-93 is an operating deficit of £1·49 million.

The centre has also projected room occupancy levels for the year of 1,242 days usage and revenue from catering commission and presentational facilities, expressed as a percentage of room hire, of 15 per cent. and 18 per cent. The centre will be expected to meet or better these projections.

Merseyside Development Corporation

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the exit plan of the Merseyside development corporation will include the transfer of land and assets to community development trusts; and whether the Merseyside development corporation will be allowed to negotiate during the current period of the transfer of land and assets to community development trusts.

Mr. Robin Squire: The exit plans of Merseyside development corporation will, at the appropriate time, consider all options and assets will be transferred to the appropriate body. MDC is encouraged to dispose of land and assets throughout its lifetime, but is required to obtain market value in relation to the use proposed.

Vehicle Pollution

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet with the Institution of Environmental Health Officers and the National Society for Clean Air to discuss an effective framework for vehicle nuisance control that would include noise, smoke and gaseous pollution detection from road vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: As the matter falls within the remit of the Secretary of State for Transport, I have been asked to reply.

Provisions for enhanced emission testing and control at annual testing and spot checks have already been implemented for petrol-powered cars and diesel-powered heavy vehicles as part of an already comprehensive and established framework for curbing nuisance from noise and emissions from vehicles in use. The provisions for emission control will be expanded to remaining diesel-powered cars and light vehicles from 1 January 1993, with further reductions planned in line with our obligations under the European Community roadworthiness directive, 92/55/EEC. Noise controls also form an integral part of current and planned future action, backed by appropriate research at the Transport Research Laboratory, to improve enforcement of this particularly intrusive nuisance. All interested parties, including EHOs and the NSCA, will be fully consulted prior to making new regulations.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Euthanasia

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if, following the conviction of Dr. Cox for attempted murder, he will carry out a review of the law regarding euthanasia.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have no plans to carry out a review of the law in this area.

DEFENCE

Vacant Property, Northern Ireland

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many units of personnel accommodation are vacant awaiting sale, vacant for letting and vacant awaiting repair in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 September 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 32 MOD-owned service married quarters vacant awaiting sale, 179 vacant for letting to entitled service personnel and 108 vacant awaiting works in Northern Ireland. This excludes barrack and mess accommodation.

Nuclear Testing

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how his Department plans to maintain the safety of the United Kingdom's nuclear warheads following the withdrawal of underground nuclear testing facilities in September 1996.

Mr. Aitken: If testing ends in 1996, we shall have to rely on alternative methods to ensure the safety of our weapons. Alternative technologies exist, but are not at present an adequate substitute for underground testing. Their development is a matter which we will now be considering.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the circumstances under which the United Kingdom would continue underground nuclear testing after September 1996.

Mr. Aitken: Assuming the current United States legislation is not amended, the prohibition on testing at Nevada will be lifted if another country tests after September 1996.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department is undertaking regarding the testing of nuclear weapons without resort to underground nuclear testing.

Mr. Aitken: We have been involved with work on alternative technologies for proving nuclear warheads for many years. However, they are not at present an adequate substitute for underground testing.

US Energy Appropriation Laws

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications of the United States energy appropriation legislation for (a) the United Kingdom's Trident warhead programme, (b) the WE177 replacement programme and (c) the ability of the United Kingdom to develop new nuclear warheads.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no implications for the Trident warhead programme, the tests for which have been completed. No decision has been taken on WE177 replacement, but development of a suitable warhead could be completed even assuming that we are unable to test beyond 1996. It remains our view that a minimum programme of testing is the best means of ensuring the continuing safety and credibility of our deterrent.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

East Timor

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Comonwealth Affairs if the Government will exert their influence in the European Community and the United Nations Security Council to urge the imposition of concerted trade sanctions against Indonesia until such time as a United Nations monitored referendum for independence is held in East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: The Government do not believe that the imposition of trade sanctions against Indonesia would be an appropriate or effective way of promoting a solution to the East Timor question.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Comonwealth Affairs what measures Her Majesty's Government have taken as current President of the European Community to advance Portugal's legal and political efforts to address the political and human rights situation in East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: As current President of the Community, the United Kingdom has made representations and taken action with the Indonesians on the situation in East Timor on the basis of agreed Community views and policies. We have made clear continuing Community concerns about the human rights situation in East Timor and about disparity in the sentencing of those involved in last year's Dili incident. We have welcomed the recent resumption of a dialogue between Portugal and Indonesia, under the United Nations Secretary-General's auspices, about East Timor.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to raise the problems of clandestine nuclear materials sales and the import of red mercury from the Commonwealth of Independent States into the European Community in the next meeting of European political co-operation under his presidency.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is this Government's policy to take every appropriate opportunity to raise with other Governments the problem of sales of clandestine nuclear materials from the CIS and elsewhere. We discuss this issue both with our European partners and [illegible] a wider context, with other nuclear suppliers.

Punjab and Kashmir

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of India regarding abuse of human rights by security forces in Punjab and Kashmir; and what was their response.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Both bilaterally and with our European Community partners, we have regularly raised with the Indian Government our concerns about abuses by security forces in Punjab and Kashmir. They have told us of their determination to investigate allegations of abuses and to bring wrongdoers to justice, and that over 250 members of the security forces in Kashmir and Punjab have been punished.

European Community

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals the United Kingdom has put to the European Council to make more transparent its decision-making processes in the European Communities.

Mr. Garel-Jones: As presidency, the United Kingdom proposed an initiative at the Birmingham European Council to increase transparency in the Community's decision-making processes. It was agreed that Foreign Ministers would come forward with suggestions before the Edinburgh European Council, including the possibility of some open Council discussion. The Commission also offered to consult more widely before proposing legislation.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the existing and (b) the proposed legislative acts of the EC which he proposes to seek to have withdrawn as offending against the principle of subsidiarity.

Mr. Garel-Jones: It is too early to specify which items will pass or fail the subsidiarity test. We are working to put procedures in place in the Commission and Council to ensure all proposals for legislation in future comply with the principle of subsidiarity. The Birmingham declaration called for decisions on this at Edinburgh, where the Commission will also present the first results of its review of existing Community legislation.

EC General Affairs Council

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement on the outcome of the General Affairs Council on 21 September.

Mr. Hurd: I chaired an extraordinary session of the General Affairs Council in New York on 21 September. The Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs—my right hon. Friend the Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones)—represented the United Kingdom.

The Council met to consider the way forward after the French referendum on the treaty on European union. The Council noted that ratification procedures were well advanced in most member states and agreed the importance of a speedy and successful conclusion of the process, without reopening the present text, on the timing foreseen in article R of the treaty.

The Council welcomed the statement issued on 20 September by Economic and Finance Ministers meeting in Washington. Ministers agreed that the preoccupations which had been expressed in the wider debate in all member states over recent months should be addressed in the future internal and external development of Europe. They welcomed the presidency's decision to convene a special European Council in October to consider these issues.

The Council also welcomed the presidency's determination to make progress on other urgent business, including the completion of the single market and negotiations on the Community's finances.

A copy of the declaration issued by the Council on 21 September has been placed in the Library of the House.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 5 and 6 October.

Mr. Hurd: I chaired the Foreign Affairs Council on 5 October with the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs—my right hon. Friend the Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones)—representing the United Kingdom. My right hon. Friend took the chair for the session on 6 October, attended by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade.

Foreign Ministers received a report from the Committee of Permanent Representatives on work in hand to follow up the remit from the Lisbon European Council to undertake urgent work on procedural and practical steps to implement the principle of subsidiarity. It was agreed that COREPER should press on with this work, including the adoption of new procedures for addressing subsidiarity in the Council, and report back to the Foreign Affairs Council on 9 November. I also briefed colleagues on the presidency's objectives for the Birmingham Special European Council.

Ministers had a general discussion of the Commission's future financing proposals. I explained how the United Kingdom presidency intended to handle negotiations between now and the Edinburgh European Council.

The Council welcomed the Commission's opinions on the applications from Austria and Sweden to join the Community, and instructed work on the Community's general negotiation framework for the European Free Trade Association applicants to continue. The Council recalled the importance of developing relations with Turkey, Cyprus and Malta in accordance with the conclusions of the Lisbon European Council.

Ministers discussed recent developments in the former Yugoslavia. They expressed full support for the efforts of Lord Owen and Mr. Vance, and agreed that the Community should continue to increase pressure on the Serbs, who were failing to honour the commitments given at the London conference. Ministers agreed on the need for increased help for refugees and displaced persons and called for an end to atrocities and for the investigation of war crimes.

The Council discussed the Uruguay round and agreed that a final effort was needed to conclude the negotiations by the end of the year. It urged the Commission to continue to negotiate constructively and to report to the Birmingham European Council. The Council approved the Commission's mandate for negotiations with third countries for extension of the multi-fibre arrangement. The Council noted with concern the large number of anti-dumping and countervailing duty cases filed by US industry against EC steel products, and called for an early resumption of talks on the multilateral steel arrangement. The Council discussed the establishment of the single market in bananas, and re-affirmed the aim to renew agreement by the end of this year.

The Council agreed the negotiating directives for new partnership and co-operation agreements with the states of the former Soviet Union. The Council heard an account from my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development on the visit of the troika of Development Ministers to Somalia. Ministers agreed a statement expressing sympathy for the victims of the air crash near Schiphol airport.

Ministers met the Foreign Ministers of Poland, Hungary and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic in the margins of the Foreign Affairs Council and issued a joint statement welcoming the process of strengthening dialogue and co-operation between them.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement in the Official Report on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 20 July.

Mr. Hurd: I chaired the first Foreign Affairs Council of the United Kingdom presidency in Brussels on 20 July. The Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs—my right hon. Friend the Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones)—represented the United Kingdom.

The main item on the Council's agenda was the follow-up to the Lisbon European Council. I explained how the United Kingdom presidency intended to handle negotiations on the Community's finances over the next six months, and there was broad support for our approach. On subsidiarity, President Delors reported on the Commission's planned new working procedures and on its review of existing Community rules. The Council instructed the Committee of Permanent Representatives to examine possible new Council procedures. On enlargement, the Council agreed to consider the available Commission opinions on the European Free Trade Association applicants on 5 October. Ministers discussed a presidency paper on developing EC relations with Turkey. I briefed EC partners about the presidency's plans to invite the Foreign Ministers of Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia to a meeting in the margins of the October Foreign Affairs Council and to host a meeting with Heads of State or Government of these countries in London on 28 October.

Ministers had a full discussion on the former Yugoslavia and issued a statement reaffirming their commitment to Lord Carrington's conference. I reported on my visit to the region. Ministers decided that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia should not be regarded as the sole successor of the former Yugoslavia and that it should therefore be excluded from international bodies. Ministers agreed that an additional 120 mecu package of emergency EC aid should be made available immediately for use in the former Yugoslavia. They welcomed the decision of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to convene an international conference on refugees in and from the former Yugoslavia. The Council adopted a Commission proposal to amend the seventh directive on aid to shipbuilding. It had a preliminary discussion of the Commission's negotiating mandates for partnership and co-operation agreements with the former Soviet Union. It also discussed the Commission's mandate for a revised co-operation agreement with the Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN) and a proposal by the European Court of Justice to transfer a range of cases from its jurisdiction to that of the court of first instance.

Ministers agreed a statement marking the third anniversary of Aung San Suu Kyi's detention. I reported on plans to arrange a visit by the troika of Foreign Ministers to South Africa in early September.

A Co-operation Council with Egypt was held in the margins of the Foreign Affairs Council.

Nuclear Tests

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards a moratorium on United Kingdom nuclear tests.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Rather than declare unilateral moratoria, we believe the right approach is to restrain testing to the minimum level necessary to ensure the safety and credibility of nuclear weapons. In our case, this has meant testing less than once a year.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment of the potential impact of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty on the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons arsenal.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We believe a limited programme of nuclear tests continues to be the best means of ensuring the safety and credibility of our nuclear deterrent.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the maximum number of underground nuclear tests that the United Kingdom is permitted to carry out under the terms of the United States energy appropriation legislation.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Three.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what restrictions are placed on the purposes for which the United Kingdom may conduct underground nuclear tests under the terms of the United States energy appropriation legislation.

Mr. Garel-Jones: None.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the negotiation of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have always accepted the long-term goal of a comprehensive test ban, to be achieved on a step-by-step basis.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment of the potential impact of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty on the prospects for agreement at the non-proliferation treaty extension conference in 1995.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The case for extension of the non-proliferation treaty stands irrespective of the state of progress towards a comprehensive test ban.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom will resume direct negotiations towards a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Garel-Jones: When we believe it would be in the best interests of our security to do so.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the conditions under which the United Kingdom may be entitled to conduct a nuclear test under the terms of the United States energy appropriation legislation.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act requires the United States President to determine that nuclear tests conducted by the United Kingdom are in the interests of United States national security.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what alternative sites are being considered by his Department for conducting underground nuclear tests.

Mr. Garel-Jones: None.

EC Treaties

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those topics which under the current treaties of the European Community, as amended by the treaty on European union, will be within the exclusive competence of the Community, with an authority for each item on the list.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General's answer to his question of Tuesday 19 May 1992. The European Community has exclusive competence where that is conferred upon it by treaty provision or measures taken under the treaty. It is not possible to draw up an exhaustive theoretical list. Current examples include the common agricultural policy, the common commercial policy and the external tariff.

Human Rights Mission (China)

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the forthcoming human rights mission to China by Lord Howe of Aberavon.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister proposed to Premier Li Peng in January that a delegation should visit China to exchange views on human rights issues and to study China's provisions and practices in this area. The Chinese People's Institute for Foreign Affairs has invited my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Howe to lead a delegation to China between 1 and 8 December. Lord Howe has invited three hon. Members and a number of experts in the relevant field to accompany him. Details of the programme are under discussion.

European Year of Elderly People

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek an increase in the budget allowed to the Commission for the European year of elderly people.

Sir John Cope: I have been asked to reply.

When the Budget Council met on 23 July, to establish its first reading draft budget for 1993, it agreed the figure of 3·5 million ecu for the programme for the elderly and the European year of older people and solidarity between generations, judging this to be appropriate provision for 1993.

SCOTLAND

Anaesthetists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by regional health board the current establishment requirement for anaesthetists; and what is the number in post.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No establishment requirement figure is set by the Scottish Office. The numbers—whole-time equivalent—of consultant anaesthetists in post in Scotland at 30 September 1991, the latest date for which information is available, are given in the table:

Consultant anaesthetists in post by health board as at 30 September 1991

	Whole-time equivalent
Scotland	294·9
Argyll and Clyde	15·6
Ayrshire and Arran	19·6
Borders	5·0
Dumfries and Galloway	6·5
Fife	14·0
Forth Valley	13·0
Grampian	26·9
Greater Glasgow	86·9
Highland	8·5
Lanarkshire	24·5
Lothian	47·8
Orkney	—
Shetland	—
Tayside	25·6
Western Isles	1·0

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the members of his advisory committee on water, stating for each their relevant qualifications and any shareholdings held in the private water companies in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend has no advisory committee on water.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to bring forward amendments to section 1(a) of the Water (Scotland) Act 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Alternative forms of organisation for water and sewerage services in Scotland are currently being considered. A consultation paper will be issued shortly.

Property Law Report

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the report of the Scottish Law Commission on property law and abolition of the feudal system.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Law Commission is at present analysing responses received to its discussion paper No. 93, "Property Law: Abolition of the Feudal System", published in July 1991, and will publish a final report thereafter. Since several substantial issues have been raised by consultees, the commission is unable to give a precise indication of when the report will be available.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the latest figures on the youth training guarantee defined from the careers service management returns supplement of 10 September, and in particular (a) the number of clients who have left full-time education and are maintaining contact with the careers service, (b) the number of clients in the guarantees and currently seeking a youth training place and (c) the number of clients know to be endorsed for special training needs including 1991 and 1992 leavers and others for each of the regions and islands authority areas and for Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The arrangements for obtaining management information from the careers service in relation to the youth training guarantee are still developing. Discussions are taking place to ensure that the data are reliable and consistent. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment told the Select Committee on Employment on 21 October that she would make available to the Select Committee final figures from the October return when they are available. I shall write to the hon. Member with the figures for Scotland as soon as I am in a position to do so.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to make available resources to non-governmental organisations to travel to, attend and participate in the public inquiry beginning on 1 December into Scottish Nuclear's proposals to build a dry store for nuclear waste at Torness.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 23 October 1992]: It remains the Government's policy that it is for non-governmental organisations and individuals attending public inquiries to meet their own expenses.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations Her Majesty's Government have received from (a) the United Kingdom and (b) abroad in regard to plans to export plutonium from Sellafield to (i) Japan and (ii) Europe.

Mr. Eggar: No arrangements have been made at this stage for the shipment of plutonium from the United Kingdom to Japan. My Department has received a number of communications on the export of plutonium. Plutonium arising from civil reprocessing at Sellafield is transferred overseas only subject to the application of safeguards and on receipt of assurances covering peaceful use, physical protection and controls on re-transfer.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria are used by the Government to decide which countries are suitable to receive exports of plutonium from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: All applications for the export of nuclear materials from the United Kingdom are given careful consideration before an export licence is granted. The guidelines for British policy on exports and transfers of nuclear materials, including plutonium, were first announced by the then Foreign Secretary, now Lord Callaghan, on 31 March 1976 at columns 515-16 and have been applied by successive Governments.

Particular attention is paid to whether the receiving country is a party to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty or has an equivalent commitment or has concluded a full-scope safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency. Consideration is also given to other factors such as strategic concerns, the risk of diversion or a lack of effective export controls of the receiving country.

Coal

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investment has been made by his Department and previously by the Department of Energy into the combined-cycle clean coal-burn topping prototype plant at Grimethorpe since the inception of the project; what investment has been made by foreign investors in the project; and if he will make a statement on the future of the project.

Mr. Eggar: My Department and the former Department of Energy have provided approximately £11·6 million towards the funding of the clean coal-burn topping cycle prototype plant at Grimethorpe. Overseas commitments to the topping cycle programme at Grimethorpe amount to approximately £1·4 million. Government funding ensured the successful completion of experimental work at the Grimethorpe facility earlier this year.

Experimental work to further advance various technical aspects of the topping cycle is currently being undertaken at the coal research establishment, Cheltenham. Meanwhile, my Department has provided £170,000 towards an independent expert review of the topping cycle concept to assess whether and how this technology should be taken forward. A report on the findings of this review is currently being considered by my Department.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many pits there were in Leicestershire in 1962, 1970, 1980, 1990 and to date; and how many jobs there were in those pits.

Mr. Eggar: The number of deep mines in Leicestershire, and the number of men employed at those collieries, has declined sharply due to exhaustion of economic reserves. The figures are as follows:

	Number of deep mines	Number of men employed
1962	12	9,545
1970	9	7,280
1980	9	7,328
1990	2	1,099
1992	1	419

The one remaining mine, Asfordby, is a new colliery with extensive reserves and has benefited from £217 million of capital investment to date. It is expected to commence production in 1993-94.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of coal were imported in each of the years 1985 to 1991 and the current year to date; and how much in each year was not suitable for use in power stations.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is as follows:

		Quantity (thousand tonnes)
Year	Total coal imports	Not suitable for use in power stations[1]
1985	12,732	8,357
1986	10,554	6,852
1987	9,781	7,065
1988	11,685	7,886
1989	12,137	8,763
1990	14,783	9,282

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much German coal was imported into Britain in 1991 and so far in the current year.

Mr. Eggar: The amount of coal imported into the United Kingdom from Germany in 1991 and January to August in 1992 was as follows:

Year	Quantity (thousand tonnes)
1991	220
[1]1992	160

[1] January to August.

Source: Customs and Excise.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to ensure that surpluses within the mineworkers' pension scheme are not utilised to pay for forthcoming redundancy packages in the coal mining industry.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the trustees of the mineworkers' pension scheme.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the response of Her Majesty's Government to the proposal of the European Commission permitting use of natural gas for the generation of public electricity supplies; what assessment he has made of the implications for the use of indigenous coal resources; and what notification of adopting such a policy was given to the House or the public in his related memorandum.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 October 1992]: The European Commission's 1975 directive, 75/404/EEC, restricting the use of natural gas in electricity generation was repealed on 18 March 1991 by directive 91/148/EEC in the light of the increased availability of gas and the need for generators throughout the Community to be able to switch to low-polluting fuels. This information was conveyed to the House in a reply by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy, the hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 16 April 1991, Official Report, column 134.

The choice of fuel for use in power stations is a matter for the operators of those stations, subject to meeting emission limits set by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, and other relevant statutory requirements.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans of the Central Electricity Generating Board for future production of electricity from coal-burning stations were abandoned, subsequent to arrangements concerning privatisation; and what would be the approximate cost per unit of such generation at (a) current coal costs and (b) costs expected in 1993.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 October 1992]: The CEGB planned the construction of three 1,800 MW coal-fired power stations in the period prior to privatisation. No application for consent was made for Kingsnorth B in Kent, and the application for Fawley B in Hampshire was subsequently withdrawn. West Burton B in Nottinghamshire was granted consent in March 1990, but construction was not begun.

The cost of electricity from these stations would depend on the contractual terms under which the stations were constructed and operated as well as coal costs.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the total value of stores, machinery, materials and other contracts made by British Coal with other bodies or persons, and supplied for the 31 coal pits now proposed for closure, for each of the calendar or financial years 1989 to 1991.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 October 1992]: My Department does not receive management information from British Coal at the level of detail requested. These are matters for British Coal.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing (a) the lowest price per gigajoule at which any supplier of gas or coal produces or supplies its fuel to electricity generators at 1992 prices, followed in no less than 10 categories by similar prices at equal steps to the highest price at which he expects production costs or contracts for future generating stations in the next 10 years, (b) the installed capacity for which it would be economic to generate at each respective price for coal, (c) new coal generation capacity contracted for, but not in production, (d) with minimum burn requirement on the basis of those contracts already made, (e) and (f) repetition of the two preceding columns in respect of new gas generation capacity not operating, but for which statutory approval has already been given and (g) and (h) the approximate respective capacities of gas and coal generation expected to be used in 1993, in respect of each price in that year, using levels of demand and supplies of electricity from other sources, of 1991, at each price shown in (b) and (c).

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 October 1992]: Under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 and preceding legislation, consents have been given that allow for the construction of around 13 GW of major—above 50 MW—gas-fired plant in England and Wales, in addition to that currently available for generation. Possession of a construction consent does not automatically mean that a project will proceed.

There is no new coal generation capacity contracted for but not currently available for generation.

The other matters on which information is requested are commercial matters for the generating companies and fuel supply companies.

World Uranium Hearings

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department was represented at the world uranium hearings held in Salzburg in Austria, on 13 to 19 September.

Mr. Eggar: My Department was not represented.

Nuclear Industry (Privatisation)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to privatise the Atomic Energy Authority and British Nuclear Fuels.

Mr. Eggar: No decisions have been taken on whether any parts of the nuclear industry should be privatised.

Electricity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last discussed electricity pricing with the Director General of the Office of Electricity Regulation; and what decisions were taken.

Mr. Eggar: I have consultations with the Director General of Electricity Supply from time to time on a range of issues. Licence conditions, including the electricity price controls, are a matter for the director general.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he has made to the public statement of the chief executive of PowerGen on the relative costs of coal and gas-fired electricity production and on the policy of regional electricity companies on contracts for electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The relative costs of coal and gas-fired electricity depend significantly upon the contractual terms of fuel purchase and the contractual terms under which the power station is to be constructed and operated. These are commercial matters for the companies concerned. My Department will be assessing the evidence available on the comparative costs of power stations using different fuels as part of the Government's review. It is for the Director General of Electricity Supply to ensure that regional electricity companies comply with their obligation to purchase electricity from the most economic source available.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will specify the statutory authority by which the suppliers of natural gas to undertakings using such gas for generation for sale to the electricity pool are permitted to charge for gas that may not be consumed; and if he will give consideration to introducing legislation to prohibit any such practice.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 October 1992]: The contractual arrangements between suppliers of natural gas and customers engaged in electricity generation are a commercial matter for the companies concerned.

Government Intervention

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all occasions (a) since April 1992 when the Government intervened to assist British industries and (b) since January 1982 when the Government intervened to assist British computer and computer component manufacturers.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 October 1992]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has created a number of new industry sponsorship divisions within the Department whose role is to assist individual sectors of industry to compete in world markets. The Department also operates a wide range of schemes providing specific help to industry, including research and development support, regional selective assistance, export support and a range of support for small and medium-sized companies. Companies in the computing sector have obtained substantial benefit from these schemes over the past decade and will continue to receive support and help from my Department where this is appropriate.

LINK Initiative

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the programmes and projects approved under the LINK initiative as at 31 March 1991, 31 March 1992 and currently.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The table below lists—in date order of announcement—each of the programmes under the LINK initiative, together with the number of projects approved in each programme for the financial years ending 31 March 1991 and 31 March 1992, and, according to information available to date, those which have been approved so far during the current financial year, ending 31 March 1993. To list all projects individually would incur disproportionate cost. Twenty-seven programmes were announced up to 31 March 1991 and a further three were announced up to 31 March 1992; no new programmes have been announced so far during the current financial year. Four hundred and fifty-nine projects have been approved to date.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish tables showing the cumulative and annual total of expenditure under the LINK initiative as at 31 March 1992, together with the projected outturn for 31 March 1993, together with a breakdown of those tables showing regional expenditure.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The table gives the cumulative and annual DTI expenditure on advanced technology programmes as at 31 March 1992 together with the projected outturn for the financial year to 31 March 1993. Information on a regional basis could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish tables showing the cumulative and annual expenditure on advanced technology programmes as at 31 March 1992, together with the projected outturn for 31 March 1993 and a breakdown of those totals showing regional expenditures.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The table details the cumulative and annual Government expenditure on collaborative research under the LINK initiative for the financial year ending 31 March 1992 and the projected outturn for the financial year ending 31 March 1993. Also shown is the cumulative expenditure at 31 March 1991, 31 March 1992 and 31 March 1993. Parcelforce

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce legislation to privatise Parcelforce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 20 October 1992]: I have no plans to introduce legislation to privatise Parcelforce and see no need for a statement at this stage.

British Coal Pension Scheme

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what circumstances funds from the British Coal pension scheme may be used for expenditure incurred in connection with pit closure other than payments for the exclusive benefit of retired and serving miners.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 October 1992]: This is a matter for the trustees of the British Coal pension schemes.

Trentham Colliery

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) pursuant to his statement of 19 October, if he will give details of the anticipated production, seam by seam, projected for the second half of the financial year 1992-93 at Trentham colliery;

(2) if he will give details of each development for which there was a prior approval at Trentham colliery at the commencement of the 1992-93 financial year, and specify which have been shelved and the reasons in each case.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 October 1992]: The issues which the hon. Member raises are matters for British Coal.

Skelton Grange Power Station

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when Skelton Grange power station, Leeds is due to close.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 October 1992]: This is a commercial matter for National Power, the station's owner.

Written Answers to Questions

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

EC Research Programmes

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster following his letter of 15 July to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, if he will list the actions taken to ensure the effective management of EC research programmes.

Mr. Waldegrave: Her Majesty's Government consistently pressed for proper assessment of proposals and rigorous evaluation of results to ensure effective management of research programmes. The EC Council of Research Ministers on 12 October welcomed the evaluation of the second EC R and D framework programme carried out by CREST—the EC science policy advisers' committee. The report was prepared under United Kingdom chairmanship, and a copy will be placed in the House of Commons Library. The Council considered that this report should help to determine future EC R and D priorities, and underline the need for regular and independent evaluations.

EC Biomedical and Health Programme

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the result of discussions between Vice-President Pandolfi and the advisory committee on the biomedical and health programme of the EC, to which he referred in his letter of 15 July.

Mr. Waldegrave: The immediate problems with the scientific evaluation process were resolved without the need for direct discussions with Vice-President Pandolfi. The Commission is now considering which proposals to approve for funding, in the light of the advisory committee's views.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Property Speculation

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, if the Church Commissioners will establish an inquiry into their loss on property speculation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: The Archbishop of Canterbury, as Chairman of the Church Commissioners, recently announced that he has:

(1) asked Coopers and Lybrand to examine and report upon (a) the Commissioners' borrowings and (b) the information flow required for the management of their assets; and

(2) appointed a group to consider that report and related matters in the light of recent experience, and to make such recommendations as they think fit to the Commissioners.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Technologies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to his Russian and Chinese counterparts, in regard to the recently announced sale of missile guidance technology, rocket engines and nuclear technologies from Russia and China, in the context of the permanent five's commitment to control proliferation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We regularly raise our concerns about missile and nuclear non-proliferation matters with the Russians and Chinese, in the context of the permanent five process, bilaterally and with our EC partners.

Middle East

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what decisions were taken on the application of the International Atomic Energy Agency's safeguards in the middle east during the 36th annual general conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency in September.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Resolution GC (XXXVI)/1045 on application of International Atomic Energy Agency's safeguards in the middle east was adopted by consensus at this meeting. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Languages

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will grant funding from his Department to the European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have no intention of doing so at the present time.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to make representations to the Council of Ministers to enable the European charter on regional or minority languages adopted by the Standing Conference of European Regional and Local Authorities to become adopted as a European convention.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Committee of Ministers has already taken the decision to adopt the European charter on regional or minority languages as a convention. It will be open for signature from 5 November 1992.

Romania

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current state of the United Kingdom's relationships with Romania; and if he has any plans to carry them forward.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom enjoys satisfactory relations with Romania. We look forward to developing these with a new Romanian Government which will carry forward reform in that country. As presidency of the European Community, we are working for the early signature of an association agreement between Romania and the Community.

UN Peacekeeping Reserve Force

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to support proposals by the United States of America for the establishment of a permanent United Nations peacekeeping reserve force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is our view that the appropriateness of UN forces to a country or a conflict and the size and shape of those forces are best addressed on a case-by-case basis. We do not therefore support the establishment of a permanent UN peacekeeping reserve force, although it should be noted that, by completion of our deployment to UNPROFOR in Bosnia, some 3,500 British troops will be on UN service making us the third-largest troop contributor to UN operations.

Mordechai Vanunu

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Israel over the continued imprisonment in solitary confinement of Mordechai Vanunu in Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no formal locus to raise Mr. Vanunu's case with the Government of Israel. He has been treated in accordance with normal Israeli judicial process. We are in touch with the Israelis privately about some aspects of his imprisonment.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has had from (a) Belarus, (b) Ukraine and (c) Kazakhstan to his recommendations on accession to the NPT.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 14 July 1992, at column 587. The three states in question have since given further assurances that they will accede to the NPT as non-nuclear weapons states, and we continue to press them to do so rapidly. We welcome the recent accessions of Azerbaijan and Uzbekistan.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for the purposes of article 3b of the Maastricht treaty, which areas of responsibility fall within the exclusive competence of the European Community.

Mr. Garel-Jones I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 23 October, at column 409.

The European Community has exclusive competence where that is conferred upon it by treaty provision or measures taken under the treaty. It is not possible to draw up an exhaustive theoretical list. Current examples include the common agricultural policy, the common commercial policy and the external tariff.

Poland

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in respect of Polish citizens refused entry to the United Kingdom, how many such refusals there were in the last available year; and how many of those refusals were subject to appeal proceedings.

Mr. Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

In the 12 months to the end of August 1992, 445 nationals of Poland were refused leave to enter and removed at United Kingdom posts. Information on the number who exercised their right of appeal is not available centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Rents

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the actual rent levels set, and the percentage increase on previous registrations, where applicable, for (a) housing association tenancies and (b) other tenancies, (i) where the rent was subject to appeal to the rent assessment committee and (ii) where the rent offices' registration was not subject to appeal, in each region of England over the period 1988 to 1992; and if he will publish figures on the retail prices index and the index of house prices over the same period.

Mr. Baldry: Information is given in the table on means registered rents and those which were determined after appeal to the rent assessment committee.

Figures for 1992 refer to the first half year.

Figures for Rent Assessment Committee appeals for 1988 are not available separately for housing associations.

Rents are registered for a period of two years. The percentage changes on previous rent quoted in the answer refer to the change over the two year period.

The percentage changes to registered rent refer to the change arising from the rent assessment committee's decision.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his Department's latest estimate of the total sum set aside by local authorities in England derived from capital receipts not available for reinvestment.

Mr. Robin Squire: About £5 billion of the total of £5½ billion set aside by local authorities as provision to meet credit liabilities at 31 March 1991 is likely to have originated from set aside capital receipts.

Thames House

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements the London Docklands development corporation is making to replace Thames house as a training centre in the royal docks.

Mr. Robin Squire: The London Docklands development corporation is asking consultants to evaluate the training requirements of the area, as a first step to securing permanent accommodation for Newham community college, which currently uses this building.

EC Life Programme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make representations to the European Community to increase available funding under the European Community's Life programme for land management work and monitoring.

Mr. Maclean: The priorities agreed by the management committee for Life funding in 1993 include actions relating to land use planning and management, and to environmental monitoring networks.

The indicative allocation of resources for each of the five "fields of action" is given in the Life Regulation—Council regulation (EEC) No. 1973/92. The precise level of resources allocated to land management or monitoring projects will reflect the number and quality of applications.

Poop Scoops

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to speed up local poop-scoop byelaws by allowing all local authorities to designate areas en bloc at the time of contract service planning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Whilst we are keen to speed up the byelaw-making process, designation in the manner suggested is not possible under the present enabling legislation.

Environmental Protection Agency

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress being made in setting up a national environmental protection agency.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones), at columns 857-58.

Improvement Grants

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to make changes to the improvement grant system to spread the available cash to more applicants and to take account by disregard in calculating income of mortgage payments and all disability benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The changes to the house renovation grant system announced on 16 July—Official Report, column 1047—are designed to enable help to be given to more low income grant applicants by, among other things, making higher allowance in the means test for the general costs, including housing costs, they face. It would complicate an already necessarily complex system to make specific allowance for mortgage costs in the means test. The test already disregards disability benefits on the same basis as housing benefit.

Municipal Mutual Insurance Company

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will include in the calculation of local authority standard spending assessments increased insurance premiums as a result of the collapse of the Municipal Mutual Insurance Company.

Mr. Robin Squire: There is no separate provision for insurance premiums within standard spending assessments. In setting total standard spending for local authorities for 1993-94 proper account will be taken of all authorities' spending needs.

Urban Land

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many hectares of land in Britain have become urbanised so far this year; what were comparable figures for 1989, 1990 and 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is not available.

The Government recognise the need for information on land use change to inform planning policy and to contribute to the wider debate on national land use policy issues. In 1985 the Department of the Environment established a new series of land use change statistics—LUCS—which are collected by Ordnance Survey as part of its map revision process. Recent research has confirmed the value of these data, especially for monitoring land changing to urban uses. The LUCS data show that in England during the period 1985-87 there was an average net transfer of 6,000 hectares a year from rural uses to urban uses, as defined for LUCS purposes. At present, the Ordnance Survey is testing new procedures with the objective of providing consistent information for all urban areas across the country within one year of any change occurring.

Recent research on rates of urbanisation has concluded that the overall area of land likely to change to urban use between 1981 and 2001 in England is in the order of 105,000 hectares, representing 0·8 per cent. of England's area. By 2001 it is forecast that around 11 per cent. of England is likely to be in urban use. The Department has also recently carried out research to investigate ways of improving information on land use stock and is proceeding to develop the methodology and carry out pilot work for a land use stock system.

Opencast Coal

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those sites where British Coal is (a) prospecting for opencast coal and (b) actively applying for permission to opencast coal; and what assessment he has made of the damage to wildlife should opencast coal mining proceed on each of these sites.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally. MPG 3 advises mineral planning authorities to consider in detail the environmental and other effects of every proposal for opencast coal mining. It also makes clear that environmental assessment is required in appropriate cases.

Air Monitoring

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evaluation he has made of the effectiveness of air monitoring conducted by local authorities under the requirements of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Maclean: Local authorities are not specifically required to undertake air monitoring by the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Normally the operator of a process prescribed for local authority air pollution control under part I of the Act will be required to carry out any monitoring needed to demonstrate compliance with the conditions of the plant's authorisation. Local authorities may, exceptionally, decide to carry out such monitoring themselves.

Recycling

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further encouragements he intends to announce to get industry more involved in recycling and especially the down-stream line of recycling; and how his targets are being met.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's policy is that manufacturers, distributors and retailers should take their share of responsibility for what ultimately happens to products which they place on the market. I therefore welcome the recent initiative announced by the vehicle manufacturers in this area. A full statement of Government policy on recycling and an account of progress against targets is set out in "This Common Inheritance: the Second Year Report" (Cm 2068).

Environmental Protection Act 1990

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what study his Department has done on the cost implications for local authorities of enforcing and administering the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Discussions between my Department and the local authority associations about the local government finance settlement have covered the cost implications of administering the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The Act provides in some cases for local authorities to charge to recover their costs.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to establish a centralised data bank of successful prosecutions conducted under the duty of care provisions in section 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office keeps records of the numbers of prosecutions in England and Wales and the number resulting in convictions, as notified to it by the courts. Statistics to be kept for offences under the Environmental Protection Act will include separate figures for offences under section 34 of the Act.

I understand that waste regulation authorities, through the co-ordinated local authority database of registered waste carriers (CLADWAC), have set up a system for the exchange of information about convictions for offences prescribed under the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989, for the purposes of waste carrier registration. These prescribed offences include offences under section 34 of the 1990 Act.

Wildlife Habitat

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take during the United Kingdom presidency to ensure that the United Kingdom complies with assurances already given on the protection of wildlife habitat.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom has an excellent record in Nature Conservation. We have built steadily on the framework for conservation provided by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to implement our declared policies and meet our international commitments. The Government are considering what additional measures are necessary to fulfil its obligations under the recently agreed Habitats Directive. Members are required to introduce the necessary legal measures by June 1994.

European Economic Area

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the criteria to be adopted to judge whether environmental difficulties arising from the economic area agreement are persistent; and how intervention will be judged as appropriate, in regard to the safeguard measures set out in article 112 of the "Agreement on the European Economic Area", Cm. 2073.

Mr. Maclean: Decisions on environmental difficulties which might arise under the agreement would need to be addressed in the light of the circumstances at the time.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he intends to take as President of the European Environment Council to achieve the objectives set out in article 73 of the "Agreement on the European Economic Area", Cm. 2073.

Mr. Maclean: The Government strongly support the objectives set out in article 73, which reflects paragraph 1 of article 130R of the treaty of Rome. However, since the agreement on the european economic area has not yet entered into force, and will not do so during the United Kingdom presidency, there is no role for my right hon. and learned Friend under the agreement in his capacity as President of the Environment Council.

Waste Brokers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies of the departmental consultation paper on the draft registration of waste brokers scheme, pursuant to EC directive 91/156/EEC, have been issued; and what responses have been received to date.

Mr. Maclean: In England and Wales approximately 1,850 copies of the consultation paper on the draft registration of waste brokers scheme have been issued and 68 responses have been received to date.

EC Environment Report

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response has been made by Her Majesty's Government to the report by the president of the Court of Auditors of the European Communities concerning the environment—Fin 249—dated 21 September.

Mr. Maclean: The Government attach importance to such reports and will ensure that it is followed up effectively. It was raised at the Environment Council on 20 October and will be taken into account in our approach to the review of the structural funds. We shall be issuing an explanatory memorandum shortly.

Environment Research Programme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response has been made to the report of the environment research programme by the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology issued in May.

Mr. Maclean: The Government today published their response to the Advisory Council of Science and Technology (ACOST) advice on environmental research programmes.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has, on behalf of the Government, welcomed the report as a very helpful contribution to the Government's developing policy on science and technology research.

The Government's response to the ACOST report is published by the Office of Science and Technology (Office of Public Service and Science).

Newt Colony, Barnfield Pond

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 14 July, Official Report, column 649, what proposals he now has for protection of the newt colony at Barnfield pond.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have been asked to reply.

The consultant's assessment requested by English Nature indicated that realignment of the new road in the vicinity of the Barnfield pond would significantly increase the cost of the scheme and delay progress. Following further discussions with English Nature and Dr. Cummins a suitable new habitat for the newt colony was identified close to the existing site. The Department will be working closely with them on the detail of the revised habitat area.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Fraud

35. Mr. Hain: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement about prosecutions in serious fraud cases.

The Attorney-General: The current caseload of the Serious Fraud Office is 53 cases. Of these, 25 are being tried or are awaiting trial in the Crown court, 14 are awaiting committal or transfer to the Crown court and 14 cases are under investigation.

Crown Prosecution Service

36. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement about the staffing of the Crown prosecution service.

The Solicitor-General: In the last 12 months the Crown prosecution service has recruited 194 lawyers, bringing the total complement of lawyers in post to 2,068. The number of administrative staff in post is 4,094.

Criminal Justice

37. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General what action the Director of Public Prosecutions is taking to speed up criminal justice.

The Attorney-General: The Crown prosecution service has taken a leading role in the working group on pre-trial issues whose report is now being implemented. Its recommendations cover all stages of cases and offer benefits in efficiency and effectiveness for the entire criminal justice system.

Court Cases

39. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Attorney-General what steps his Department is taking to speed up the progress of cases coming to court.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett). The Serious Fraud Office and the Crown prosecution service have also been participating in a working group on long criminal trials and ways to reduce their length. I expect a consultation paper to be published shortly.

Serious Fraud Squad

38. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General how many times in the past year officers of the Serious Fraud Squad have visited Switzerland and Liechtenstein.

The Solicitor-General: Since 1 January 1992 staff employed by or seconded to the Serious Fraud Office have made four separate visits to Switzerland or Liechtenstein in the course of inquiries. In addition, a number of visits to these countries have been made by police officers working in conjunction with the Serious Fraud Office.

British National Party

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 13 July, Official Report, column 399, if he will institute an independent review into the level of evidence required for a realistic prospect of conviction for offences contrary to part III of the Public Order Act 1986.

The Attorney-General: No. I am satisfied that the correct criteria are being properly applied by the Crown prosecution service to cases involving allegations of such offences.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Kurds

46. Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for further helping the Kurds in Iraq.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have spent £52·4 million since April 1991 on aid for Iraqi civilians. Further relief assistance is urgently needed before the onset of winter. We are therefore making available today a further £2·75 million, of which £2·5 million will be provided to the World Food Programme for urgently needed edible oil and pulses, and £0·25 million to British non-governmental organisations for relief activities in northern Iraq.

Southern Africa

47. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Department is taking in relation to the drought in southern Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend, the Minister for Overseas Development, has so far committed more than £51 million of bilateral aid in response to the drought in southern Africa. Taking into account our share of the EC special food aid programme, estimated at £11·3 million, this brings our overall response to around £63 million.

Malawi

48. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what pressure the Overseas Development Administration is bringing to bear on the Government of Malawi to encourage progress towards democracy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: At the Paris consultative group meeting in May, bilateral donors and the EC imposed restrictions on new aid. The United Kingdom has withheld balance of payments support, suspended new training awards and restricted certain other kinds of assistance. Humanitarian aid is not affected by these conditions and has continued to be provided both for Malawians and for Mozambican refugees in Malawi. At a political level, and in concert with our EC partners and others, we continue to stress to the Malawi authorities the need for a material and permanent improvement in human rights.

Earth Summit

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been achieved towards the developmental goals discussed at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The sustainable development commission will be established at the current United Nations General Assembly session. We expect the global environment facility replenishment discussion to start early next year. Sustainable development is the central aim of our aid programme; we shall focus further on Agenda 21 priorities, to reflect the important agreements reached at Rio.

Caribbean

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on Britain's bilateral aid programme to the countries of the Caribbean.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: For the financial year 1991-92 expenditure on the bilateral country programmes for the Commonwealth Caribbean exceeded £40 million. In addition, the Commonwealth Development Corporation —CDC—maintains a substantial investment programme; new CDC investment there in 1991 totalled £33·5 million. This year bilateral country aid is expected to remain at approximately the same level.

Bananas

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the availability of aid for Caribbean producers during periods of low market prices for primary produce like bananas.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We contribute to the EC scheme for the stabilisation of export earnings—Stabex—under Lomé IV, through which 1·5 billion ecu—£1·2 billion—is available during the period 1990-95 towards offsetting any shortfalls for a number of commodities including bananas.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to support economic diversification as a replacement for the banana market in Caribbean ACP nations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our bilateral aid programmes in the Commonwealth Caribbean, as elsewhere, aim to assist long-term economic and social development. In deciding country aid allocations and how funds are used, we take into account all aspects of the individual country's economic development. In the Caribbean our aid has been used to improve the physical infrastructure and human skills needed to help the economies to diversify. We have given particular support to agricultural diversification in these countries in the past and expect to continue to do so. The Commission proposal on the common organisation of the market in bananas is under discussion in the Community. It reflects the commitments to Caribbean and other African, Caribbean, Pacific—ACP—producers contained in Lomé IV.

South Africa

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in the past 10 years the Government have made formal or informal representations to the South African Government about illegal activity by their employees or agents in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since 1984 there have been six incidents involving South African diplomats on which we have made representations. These incidents involved drinking and driving and public order offences. Representations were also made over a break in at the African National Congress offices in 1982 and an attempt in 1989 to obtain the design for the Blowpipe missile and the arrest in April this year of two South African intelligence agents.

UNCED Agenda 21

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place in the European Council meetings since June on the implementation in Europe of Agenda 21 agreed at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The implementation of Agenda 21 was discussed at the informal Environment Council at Gleneagles on 19 September and the Environment Council in Luxembourg on 20 October. Discussion focused on the establishment of the sustainable development commission —SDC—which will have a central role in ensuring effective implementation of Agenda 21. As agreed at the Lisbon Council in June, the Community has taken the lead on this. The SDC will be established by the UN General Assembly this autumn.

Humanitarian Services

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how much money the Overseas Development Administration has paid the Ministry of Defence as a cost of providing humanitarian services in each of the last five years;

(2) on what occasions and for what purposes the Overseas Development Administration has paid the Ministry of Defence for providing humanitarian services in each of the past five years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 23 October 1992]: The following amounts have been paid:

1988: Total £891,536
Treatment of victims of a Pakistan explosion in a United Kingdom military hospital	£154,054
Army medical teams and supplies—earthquake relief in Nepal	£621,467
RAF airlift, HMS Active, RFA Oakleaf and Royal Engineers —Hurricane Gilbert in Jamaica	£116,015
1989: Total £181,092
RAF airlift and Royal Engineers—Hurricane Hugo in the Caribbean	£181,092
1990: Total £79,443
Royal Engineers and RAF aircraft—Cyclone in Western Samoa	£79,443
1991: Total £7,294,040
Provision of army ration packs for UN in Liberia	£11,145
RAF aircraft to deliver relief goods for landslide victims in Chile	£12,897
Use of RFA Fort Grange, helicopters and boats for cyclone relief in Bangladesh	£616,000
Operation "Safe Haven" (Army) and air supply (RAF) for Kurdish refugees from Iraq	£6,653,998
1992 (to date): Total £134,708
Royal Engineers and RAF transport for cyclone relief in Western Samoa	£127,583
RAF flights in Turkey for Erzincan earthquake	£7,125

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the formula used for calculating the cost of humanitarian services charged to the Overseas Development Administration by the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 23 October 1992]: The Ministry of Defence raises charges on an extra cost basis. This comprises those costs which would not have otherwise been incurred as a result of undertaking a task.

Iraq

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on humanitarian conditions in northern Iraq; and what representations he has made to the United Nations to alleviate the conditions of the Iraqi Kurds.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 23 October 1992]: The situation in northern Iraq gives cause for the gravest concern. The continuing blockade of Kurdish areas by the Government of Iraq has resulted in serious shortages of food, fuel and other essential supplies. A major international relief operation, led by the United Nations, is needed to ensure that stocks of relief supplies are moved into these areas before the onset of winter.

We provided two members of a joint EC/US needs assessment mission which has just returned from northern Iraq. We await their full report.

We have pressed the United Nations to hasten its relief operation, to which we are ready to contribute. We therefore welcome the recent announcement of the signing of the latest memorandum of understanding between the United Nations and the Government of Iraq, which will form a basis for further United Nations action.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the impact of flooding in south-eastern Zimbabwe; and what action the Overseas Development Administration has taken in the area.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 23 October 1992]: Localised flooding occurred over the weekend of 17-18 October due to violent thunderstorms in part of Zaka and Bikita Districts of Masvingo Province. According to reports received so far, one person was killed by lightning and severe structural and other damage sustained to a number of buildings, including schools. The Zimbabwean authorities have advised us that they are to await detailed damage reports before considering whether any external assistance is needed. The area is one which has been particularly affected by the drought in the region and where we have been assisting with emergency drought relief. As a result of the storms, a number of dams are now filled to capacity.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Probate Service

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will take steps to ensure that the quality and level of service provided by the Probate service in England and Wales will continue to be maintained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In his report of February 1992 "Probate—Service to the Public" the Comptroller and Auditor General commented favourably on the standard of service provided. The report indicated a number of areas where the service could be further improved and these are being pursued within the Department.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report column 5, which consultants have been appointed to carry out research on behalf of his Department and advise on aspects of the national lottery; and when they are due to provide their report.

Mr. Brooke: The GAH Group of 4-6 Arne street, London WC2E 9NB are the consultants appointed to advise the Department on aspects of the national lottery. Their final report was submitted on 7 October.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the names and addresses of the professional advisers he has engaged in connection with the planning, operation and marketing of the proposed national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: In August the Department appointed the GAH Group of 4-6 Arne street, London WC2E 9NB to advise on aspects of the proposed national lottery. Further advice will be sought as necessary.

Control of the Press

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what plans he has to introduce legislation giving greater effective sanctions, including fines, to the Press Complaints Commission against newspapers found to have violated Press Complaints Commission regulations concerning decency in the press;

(2) what plans he has to establish a statutory independent press authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I shall consider what, if any, action needs to be taken when I have received and studied Sir David Calcutt's report on press self-regulation. Meanwhile, I have no plans for legislation.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the progress of the Calcutt commission concerning privacy and the press.

Mr. Brooke: I understand from Sir David Calcutt that he hopes to present his report to me early in 1993.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial provisions, and how much, he has made within his Department in order to look at the potential for deregulation of each of the regulatory measures for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Atkins: There has been no financial provision made in respect of programme expenditure for deregulation in Northern Ireland. The Department of Economic Development has however allocated approximately £20,000 in staff time and resources to the deregulation initiative in 1992-93.

Examiner of Statutory Instruments

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who now holds the post of Examiner of Statutory Instruments in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mates: Mr. P. L. Oakey.

General Election

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the general election to public funds in each of the Northern Ireland constituencies ranking them from lowest to highest.

Mr. Hanley: The chief electoral officer is required to submit accounts to the Secretary of State within 12 months of the election. The figures set out in the table are based on an initial examination of those accounts.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when United Kingdom and Republic of Ireland Ministers last met within the framework of the Anglo-Irish Agreement; and when they will next meet.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The last meeting of the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental conference was held on 27 April 1992 and the next will be held on 16 November.

Planning Applications

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many planning applications have been (a) approved and (b) refused in each year since 1980 in areas of outstanding natural beauty in the constituency of South Down;

(2) how many planning applications have been (a) approved and (b) refused in each year since 1980, in areas of special scientific interest in the constituency of South Down.

Mr. Atkins: The information in the form requested is available only from January 1987 and is as follows:

Electricity

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the standard costs of electricity installation in each year in respect of domestic properties since 1 April 1980 to 31 March 1992 in the constituency of South Down.

Mr. Atkins: NIE's standard charges for electricity installation for housing developments of 12 houses-flats or more in the period from 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1992 were:

	Connection charge £ per house	per flat
1987	150	113
1988	160	120
1989	170	130
1990	184	140
1991	245	184
1992	257	193

Reliable figures for earlier years are not available. Supplies to smaller developments or individual properties are charged at 60 per cent. of the estimated cost of providing supply.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the current standard costs of electricity installation in respect of domestic properties in the constituency of South Down.

Mr. Atkins: NIE's standard charges for electricity installation for housing developments of 12 houses-flats or more are £257 and £193 per unit respectively. Supplies to smaller developments or individual properties are charged at 60 per cent. of the estimated cost of providing supply.

Lords Lieutenant

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (a) the names and (b) the occupations of each lord lieutenant and deputy lord lieutenant currently in post; who is responsible for their nomination; and what (i) salary and (ii) honoraria, allowance or expenses each receives.

Mr. Mates: In Northern Ireland lord lieutenants are appointed by Her Majesty under article 2 of the Northern Ireland (Lieutenancy) Order 1975, on the advice of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Deputy lieutenants are nominated by the lord lieutenants and subject to Her Majesty's non-disapproval which is signified by the Secretary of State, are appointed under article 3 of the same order. There are currently some 147 deputy lieutenants. A list of their names is set out in the table. Details relating to the occupation of each are not known and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Lord lieutenants and deputy lieutenants are unsalaried. Lord lieutenants—but not deputy lieutenants—may claim from central funds reimbursement of travel, postage, telephone calls and other non-entertainment expenses incurred in the course of their official duties.

Newtownbreda Forensic Laboratory

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the level of security at the forensic laboratory, Newtownbreda, on Wednesday 23 September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: For obvious reasons, it is not the practice to disclose security arrangements.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the latest estimates by the Registrar General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency, together in each case with the equivalent year's electoral registration figures.

Mr. Hanley: Electoral registration figures for 1992 were given in my reply to the hon. Gentleman on 12 May 1992 Official Report, columns 75-76. Population estimates based on district council areas will not be available until the results of the 1991 census in respect of Northern Ireland become available shortly. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Local Government Staff Commission

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the expenditure of the Local Government Staff Commission for Northern Ireland for the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and the budget for 1992-93.

Mr. Atkins: The expenditure of the Local Government Staff Commission during 1990-91 was £88,977 and during the year 1991-92 was £122,431. The estimated expenditure for 1992-93 is £326,700.

PRIME MINISTER

Environment Policy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Prime Minister if he will establish an interdepartmental co-ordinating committee to monitor the environmental impact of EC policies.

The Prime Minister: The Government have already taken steps to ensure that in the United Kingdom the environmental consequences of their policies, wherever they arise, are properly considered through, inter alia, the setting up of a ministerial committee on the environment and the appointment of Ministers with responsibility for green issues in each Department. The United Kingdom also works for the integration of environmental needs into other policies in the EC.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he is taking to satisfy himself that the working of the social security system with regard to applications for mobility allowance, attendance allowance and disability living allowance fall within the guidelines laid down by him for his citizens charter; and if he will clarify departmental responsibilities on this matter.

The Prime Minister: The chief executive of the Benefits Agency is responsible for the administration of social security benefits and is accountable to the Secretary of State for Social Security for his performance.

The Benefits Agency has taken vigorous action through the summer to accelerate the processing of claims and to reduce significantly the amount of work outstanding in relation to mobility allowance, attendance allowance and disability living allowance. The chief executive wrote to all hon. Members on 6 July and again on 19 October setting out progress.

Pit Closures

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list, by county, the number of people who have so far telephoned his response number at 10 Downing street in respect of the proposed pit closures; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received a substantial number of representations on this issue.

EC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will put to the Heads of Government a plan for a common coal policy on the lines of the common agricultural policy to be financed out of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the EC budget.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 October 1992]: There is already an agreed Community policy on coal. The United Kingdom looks to the Commission, in its scrutiny of state aids for coal, to see that this policy is followed in all member states.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Conference

Mr. Cash: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans there are to hold a conference of Parliaments of EC member states during the United Kingdom presidency of the EC.

Mr. Newton: Heads of State and Government reaffirmed at the special European Council in Birmingham the importance they attach to the conference of Parliaments. Preparatory discussions are taking place under the United Kingdom presidency to do the groundwork for a conference, which may take place in 1993. Detailed arrangements are being discussed through the usual channels.

Questions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to reply to the third report of the Select Committee on Procedure, Session 1990-91, on parliamentary questions, HC-178.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on Thursday 22 October, at column 363.

EDUCATION

European Computer Networks

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his reply of 13 July to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith), Official Report, column 443, if he will make a statement on the current provision of pan-European computer networks, and the progress of Super Janet.

Mr. Forman: The information systems committee—ISC—of the Universities Funding Council is participating in a European multi-protocol project to connect European countries via high bandwidth computer networks. This project went live earlier this month. The United Kingdom and Germany were the first two countries to be connected. The ISC is continuing to promote a single pan-European infrastructure for networking.

A formal invitation to tender has been issued to several companies for Super Janet, which will provide an advanced optical fibre network for the academic community. A pilot network is expected to be established in 1993 to enable early demonstration of applications over the network.

A-level Teachers

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the different scales of pay between A-level teachers in schools, A-level teachers in sixth-form colleges and A-level teachers in further education colleges.

Mr. Forman: Teachers in secondary schools and sixth form colleges can be paid an incentive allowance, at the discretion of the governing body, for taking on extra responsibilities. In further education colleges lecturers are paid on one of two scales or on a management spine. In neither case are there separate scales or allowances for teaching A-levels. On 1 April 1993, further education corporations, including the former sixth form colleges, will have responsibility for determining the pay and conditions of their staff.

Further Education (Funding)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what transitional funding was available and under what formula for polytechnics leaving the local education authority sector; and what are the equivalent figures and formulae for further education colleges.

Mr. Forman: Transitional funding of some £6 million was allocated in 1988-89 to polytechnics and colleges entering the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council sector. Each polytechnic and college transferring out of local authority control received a fixed sum of £40,000, plus a variable component relating to full-time equivalent student numbers.

The Further Education Funding Council has announced allocations for transitional funding in 1992-93 totalling some £15 million for institutions joining the new further education sector. The allocation for each college transferring out of local authority control comprises a fixed sum of £25,000, plus a variable component relating to student numbers at the institution, calculated half by full-time equivalent numbers and half by enrolments.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if it remains his policy that the Further Education Funding Council should give priority equally to full-time 16 to 19 years courses and courses which provide for part-time students.

Mr. Forman: The Government's aim is that there should be an increase in both full and part-time participation. My right hon. Friend has told the Further Education Funding Council that, in particular, the Government attach importance to the achievement of an increase in the participation of 17-year-olds in full-time education and training.

Prison Education Service

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the status of staff from further education colleges working for local education authorities in the prison education service where redundancy following compulsory competitive tendering is concerned.

Mr. Forman: The employment beyond 1 April 1993 of staff engaged in prison education depends on the terms of each individual's contract of employment. Both LEAs and colleges will have the opportunity to tender to the Home Office for the provision of education to the prison service after that date. Those who are successful will want to consider making use of staff previously engaged in prison education. We cannot know whether any staff will be made redundant until this process has been completed.

Further Education (Buildings and Equipment)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he has now received the Further Education Funding Council's surveys of buildings and capital equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: My right hon. Friend has received and is considering both surveys. Allocations to the Further Education Funding Council for 1993-94 and the following two years will be determined in the course of the present public expenditure survey.

Transport Budgets

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance he has issued to local education authorities to ensure a fair distribution of transport budgets between pupils and students attending maintained schools and colleges in the further education sector.

Mr. Forman: Local education authorities will have a duty from 1 April 1993 to treat full-time students who attend colleges in the further education sector no less favourably as regards transport than pupils of the same age who attend schools maintained by an LEA. Guidance on this new duty will be given to LEAs in a circular on the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, a draft of which was issued for consultation on 27 July.

Japanese

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teachers qualified to teach the Japanese language are currently employed by local education authorities and teaching in (a) secondary schools to GCSE and (b) in sixth forms teaching to A-level; and if he will make a statement on the teaching of Japanese in English schools.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not collected centrally. All secondary school pupils will be required to study a modern foreign language as part of the national curriculum. Japanese is one of the 19 languages eligible to be a national curriculum foundation subject.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those schools which have applied for grant-maintained status from April 1993 and had their application approved but the commencement date deferred until September 1993.

Mr. Forth: There are no schools that fall into this category.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools have to date (i) applied for and (ii) received approval for grant-maintained status from his Department in each of the London boroughs.

Mr. Forth: There have been 13 applications for grant-maintained status from primary schools in the London boroughs, of which 10 have been approved and two are under consideration. There have been 57 applications from secondary schools in the London boroughs, of which 44 have been approved and 13 are under consideration. Details are given in the table.

Parents Charters

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consultations were undertaken with service users in the course of the production of the parents charter, the Welsh Office parents charter and the Scottish Office parents charter.

Mr. Forth: A number of surveys of parents' knowledge of the education system have been commissioned by the Government in recent years. These have showed that some parents were unaware of even their most basic rights in relation to their children's education and that most would welcome more information about schools. The parents charter for parents in England was designed to meet these needs. The charters produced for parents in Wales and Scotland are the responsibilities of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the current pupil-teacher ratio in England and Wales; and what was the ratio in 1982.

Mr. Forth: Provisional figures for January 1992 show an overall pupil-teacher ratio in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England of 17·45:1. In January 1982 the figure was 18·46:1. Information on schools in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education by how much teachers' pay has increased since 1979.

Mr. Forth: We estimate that average teachers' pay at 1 April 1992 was £20,630. This represents an increase of 273 per cent. in cash terms since 1979 or a real-terms increase over that period of 46 per cent.

Education Spending

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the percentage of gross domestic product spent by the United Kingdom on education; what are the comparable figures for (a) Germany, (b) the United States and (c) Japan; and what account is taken of private education in those figures.

Mr. Forman: The readily available information is as follows:

Total Public Expenditure[1] as a Percentage of Gross National Product (Calendar Year)

	1988
United Kingdom	4·6
USA[2]	5·3
Germany	4·2
Japan[2]	4·3

Sources: UNESCO Statistical Yearbook 1991.
Education Statistics for the United Kingdom 1991.

[1] Public subsidies to the private sector are included.

[2] Estimated. Includes some private funds, but excludes fees.

Torquay Boys Grammar School

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has for expediting the application made for grant-maintained status by Torquay boys grammar school in July.

Mr. Forth: The governing body of the school published proposals on 17 July 1992. My right hon. Friend will reach a decision on the proposals as quickly as possible, compatible with full and careful consideration of the educational issues involved.

Teachers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teachers were in post in 1987 and at the most recent available date.

Mr. Forth: The number of school teachers in post in LEA-maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England in January 1987—full-time equivalents—is 402,300. The corresponding figure for 1992, which includes grant-maintained schools, is 394,900.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will specify the number of teachers in each local education authority who (a) are disabled, whether registered or not as disabled and (b) not disabled who have retired early on medical grounds in the last five years of which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: The information requested at (a) is not held by the Department. Again, the information requested at (b) is not held in relation to disabled teachers who have retired on medical grounds or on a local education authority basis, but the total number of teachers in England and Wales who have retired on those grounds, for whatever reason, over the last five years is as follows:

	Number
1987-88	2,528
1988-89	3,406
1989-90	4,041
1990-91	4,934
1991-92	4,545

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give (a) the total number of teachers and (b) and the proportion of the total number of teachers who become disabled after appointment in each local education authority who left the profession in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not held in the Department in relation to disabled teachers. However, the proportion of teachers in England and Wales who have retired on medical grounds during the last five years, for whatever reason, against the total number of teachers is as follows:

	Number of teachers	Percentage retired due to ill-health
1987-88	647,619	0·39
1988-89	607,279	0·56
1989-90	605,815	0·67
1990-91	594,494	0·83
1991-92	581,424	0·78

Food Skills

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to ensure that food preparation skills, in relation to diet and nutrition, remain part of the national curriculum.

Mr. Forth: Aspects of food and nutrition are covered in national curriculum science and technology. My right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Education and for Wales, will give careful consideration to the recommendations of the national curriculum technology review group when its report is submitted at the end of October and its subsequent proposals for curriculum change will be the subject of extensive consultation. There are no changes planned to the national curriculum science order.

Young Children

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on his Department's response to the emergency resolution from the National British Association for Early Childhood Education on the provision of publicly funded education and care for all young children, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Forth: The BAECE has not yet submitted its resolutions to my right hon. Friend. When it does so they will be carefully considered.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what number and proportion of cautioned juvenile offenders in the latest available year had been cautioned on (a) one previous occasion, (b) two previous occasions, and (c) more than two previous occasions respectively;

(2) what number and proportion of cautioned juvenile offenders in the latest available year in (a) the Metropolitan police district, (b) south Wales, (c) Greater Manchester, (d) Merseyside, (e) the west midlands, (f)

West Yorkshire, and (g) Northumbria had been cautioned on (i) one previous occasion, (ii) on two previous occasions, and (iii) on more than two previous occasions respectively.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is in the tables. This information has been produced from a study of persons cautioned during the week of 25 to 29 November 1991 which will be analysed via the Offenders' Index for conviction history. Table 1 gives the number of juveniles by their cautioning history and table 2 gives the percentage of juveniles with their cautioning history for each relevant police force. Care should be taken with the percentages in table 2, where the actual number of persons in the category is small, as these are liable to some sampling error.

Table 1

Asylum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the meeting on the Asylum Bill between Dr. Max Perutz, FRS and senior officials of his Department.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I wrote to the hon. Member on 14 October inviting Dr. Perutz to contact officials in the immigration department if he wished to arrange a meeting. To date he has not done so.

Theft

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest estimate of the percentage of annual retail turnover lost through unauthorised entry to premises by retailers in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on the percentage lost through similar crime by retailers in other EC countries.

Mr. Jack: It is estimated that retailers lose around two per cent of turnover annually through the disappearance of stock. This loss includes thefts of all descriptions; the proportion attributable to unauthorised entry is not known and cannot be ascertained. Information about losses elsewhere in the EC is not available.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's contribution to the European centre for the validation of alternative methods in animal research.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government supported the establishment of the European centre for the validation of alternative methods at Ispra in Italy, and we shall, along with our partners, endeavour to ensure that the centre is a success.

The United Kingdom has not been asked to make a specific financial contribution towards the work of the centre. Were Community-wide funding to be sought for the centre, any agreed United Kingdom contribution would be made as part of the United Kingdom's overall contribution to the Community's budget.

Mid Glamorgan Regional Crime Squad

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to retain a regional crime squad based on South Glamorgan, Mid Glamorgan, West Glamorgan, Dyfed, Powys and Gwent, currently known as No. 8 regional crime squad.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. I believe that the region would be better served by amalgamating No. 7 and No. 8 regional crime squads.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the number of notifiable offences committed in each of the cities or areas covered by a safer city project in the 12 months ended (a) March 1990, (b) March 1991 and (c) March 1992;

(2) if he will list the number of notifiable offences committed in each of the cities or areas now covered by a safer city project (a) in 1989, (b) in 1990 and (c) in 1991.

Mr. Jack: Figures available centrally are for calendar years only, and are contained in the table.

Safer city areas—Notifiable offences[1]

Prison Service

Mr. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on introducing the private sector into the running of prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Private sector involvement in the prison service is being introduced through the contracting-out and market-testing of both entire establishments and individual services within prisons. The aim is to raise standards and improve value for money.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what have been the costs of privatising catering services in Her Majesty's prison service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The value of the contracts awarded to commercial companies for inmate catering services in Her Majesty's prison service is £1,940,263. The costs of letting and administering the contracts were met from a number of separate budgets and are not readily available.

Railway Stations (Fire Inspections)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, as part of his quality service objectives, he will require the publication of the results of all fire brigade inspections at British Rail stations commissioned since 1985 using public money.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: British Rail stations require a fire certificate in accordance with an order under the Fire Precautions Act 1971. The issue of such certificates is the responsibility of fire authorities, which are specifically forbidden under section 21 of the Act from disclosing, except in clearly defined circumstances, any information obtained by their employees during an inspection.

Arson

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of arson were reported in Wales in 1990, 1991 and 1992; what was the estimated total property damage resulting from these fires; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: There were 1,123 notifiable offences of arson recorded by the police in Wales in 1991 compared with 904 offences in 1990. Information for 1992 is not yet available. Information is not collected centrally on total property damage resulting from these fires. I do not intend to make a statement.

Metropolitan Police Commissioner

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to appoint a serving police officer as the next Commissioner of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 23 October that the Queen has appointed Mr. Paul Condon, at present chief constable of Kent, to succeed Sir Peter Imbert as Commissioner.

M25

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will detail the funding arrangements and level of service agreed between the Government and the forces policing the M25.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no special funding arrangements between the Government and those police forces responsible for policing the M25. The level of service provided is an operational decision for the individual chief officers of the six police forces through which the motorway travels. Policing decisions are co-ordinated by the M25 chief constables committee.

Fire Brigades (Fleet Maintenance)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the fire brigade authorities which have put their fleet maintenance tenders out to external companies indicating which tenders have resulted in split contracts.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Only Hertfordshire fire brigade has contracted out its vehicle fleet maintenance; there is one contractor.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what research has been conducted by his Department on the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering of fleet maintenance of fire brigade vehicles upon brigades who currently utilise mechanics who also act as part-time fire fighters;

(2) what steps are being taken to ensure that external companies granted fleet maintenance tenders for fire brigade vehicles offer a 24-hour service in a permanent site which grants around-the-clock access;

(3) if he will make it his policy to ensure that all persons involved in fleet maintenance of fire brigade vehicles are directly accountable both operationally and financially to their local chief fire officer;

(4) what account has been taken by his Department on the effect of the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering of fire brigade fleet maintenance upon (a) the flexible use of vehicles in the course of an emergency and (b) the ability of each fire brigade to reach the required incident response standards.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Provision of services and equipment is a matter for fire authorities. All the representative bodies and the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council have been widely consulted on the question of compulsory competitive tendering. My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to announce his conclusion on the issue in relation to fire brigades before long.

Hostels

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the percentage of site purchase and refurbishment costs which his Department grants for (a) probation hostel beds and (b) for bail hostel beds.

Mr. Jack: Site purchase and construction or refurbishment costs for both probation and bail hostels are met initially by a 100 per cent. capital grant from the Home Office. Over a period of time 20 per cent. of this cost is recovered from local authorities.

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the percentage of operating costs which his Department pays for (a) probation hostel beds and (b) bail hostel beds.

Mr. Jack: Eighty per cent. of the operating or revenue costs of probation and bail hostels are met by Home Office grant. The remaining 20 per cent. is provided by payments from local authorities.

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions are currently placed on hostels taking in residents when those persons are not domiciled in the county where the hostel is sited.

Mr. Jack: None.

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what audit checks take place in respect of probation hostels and bail hostels.

Mr. Jack: All claims submitted by probation and bail hostels are subject to audit by independent auditors approved by, and acting in accordance with instructions issued by, the Audit Commission.

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rules govern salary levels, expenses levels and perks such as vehicles and promotion in respect of probation and bail hostels.

Mr. Jack: Probation officer grades working as wardens and deputy wardens at probation and bail hostels are employed under terms and conditions set by the joint negotiating committee for the probation service. Their pay is determined by the Secretary of State. Other wardens and deputy wardens, and all assistant wardens, are employed in accordance with terms and conditions set by the residential and allied staffs committee of the National Joint Council for the Local Authorities Administrative, Professional, Technical and Clerical Services. All other staff are either employed in accordance with terms and conditions set by the National Joint Council for Local Authority Services (Manual Workers), or are recruited on the basis of locally negotiated agreements.

Michael Sams

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the route taken on 29 September when remand prisoner Michael Sams held at HMP Winson Green travelled to Skipton, Yorkshire; how many prison officers accompanied him; what form of transport was used; and what additional security cover was used.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not the practice to disclose the detailed security arrangements which are applied to the escort of category A prisoners outside a prison service establishment, or details of routes taken. In the instance referred to, the prisoner and a prison service staff escort travelled in a secure prison vehicle and additional security measures were taken by the police.

HMP Bullwood Hall

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement in respect of the hunger strike held by inmates at HMP Bullwood Hall in October.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Between 25 September and 1 October a number of prisoners at Bullwood Hall intermittently refused prison meals as a protest against the small amount of evening association provided. Plans which were already in hand to increase evening association were in fact implemented on 24 September.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance as working holidaymakers have been (a) received, (b) granted, and (c) refused in (i) India, (ii) Bangladesh, (iii) Pakistan, (iv) Australia, (v) Canada, (vi) Ghana and (vii) Nigeria during 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available centrally.

Racial Harassment

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of local housing authorities in which racial harassment by one council tenant of another is currently a ground for eviction.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

Information on the content of tenancy agreements is not collected centrally. However, a survey in 1991 established that 88 local housing authorities experienced a problem with racial violence and harassment in council housing. Of these, about half—46—stated that they would try to deal with perpetrators of racial violence and harassment by use of notice of seeking possession, the initial step in legal proceedings which can ultimately lead to eviction if the case is proved in court.

Motor Projects

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department has allocated to motor projects for young people convicted of the offence of taking away a vehicle without the owner's consent in the current financial year.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 23 October 1992]: The Home Office has so far this financial year approved grants supporting motor projects totalling £263,375 through the probation supervision grant scheme, the aims of which include providing demanding programmes of supervision for dealing with offenders in the community. This brings the total allocation of grants to motor projects under this scheme since 1990, when such funding began, to almost £500,000. The main focus of motor projects funded through this scheme will be young offenders convicted of motor-related offences.

The Home Office has also allocated about £59,000 to motor projects in this financial year through the safer cities programme.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many projects aimed at diverting young people from involvement in vehicle-related crime have been (a) wholly funded and (b) partly funded by his Department in England and Wales in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 23 October 1992]: Home Office funding of projects for diverting young people from crime, including vehicle-related crime, is provided under the safer cities programme which was set up in 1988, and the probation supervision grant scheme—formerly the young adult offender grant scheme—which was introduced in 1989.

The information is as follows:

Diversionary projects for young people funded or partly funded by the Home Office

	Vehicle-related projects		Other projects
Year	Wholly funded	Partly funded	Wholly funded	Partly funded
1988-89	—	—	5	1
1989-90	7	—	93	—
1990-91	9	3	273	13
1991-92	13	9	300	12

Though final figures for 1992-93 are not yet available, between April and October of this year there were 22 partly or wholly funded vehicle-related projects and 312 partly or wholly funded other projects.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times per annum meetings take place of the full committee of the Standing Conference on Crime Prevention; when the last meeting took place; and when he expects the next meeting will be called.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 23 October 1992]: The last meeting of the Home Office Standing Conference on Crime Prevention took place on 18 December 1990. Previously the conference had taken place on an annual basis. A conference has not been planned for this year because, as part of our focused approach to crime prevention, the resources normally devoted to it have been channelled to support the national effort against car crime, through car crime prevention year and its national publicity campaign. Car crime currently accounts for nearly one-third of all recorded crime. Consideration is currently being given to future meetings of standing conference.

By the end of this year as part of our crime prevention strategy Home Office Ministers will have supported and contributed to many local and national crime prevention conferences and meetings including the car crime prevention year launch and review conferences, Crime Concern's conference on "Young People and Community Safety", a conference organised by Crime Concern and the Community Development Foundation entitled "Towards Safer Communities" and the national neighbourhood watch co-ordinators conference planned for November.

Suicide

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of suicides of young people (a) aged under 21 years and (b) aged between 21 and 30 years in 1991 and the two preceding years; and if he will express these figures as a percentage of the total number of deaths by suicide in those three years.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply. The information is shown in the table.

The number of reported suicides (ICD* E950-E959) of young people (a) aged under 21 years; (b) aged 21-29 years; and (c) these numbers expressed as a percentage of the total number of deaths by suicides in each of those years. England and Wales 1989, 1990 and 1991.

ICD* International Classification of Diseases; ninth revision.

Year	Age-group all ages	(a) Under 21 years	(c) per cent.	(b) 21 years-29 years (inc)	(c) per cent.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Currency Speculation

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to curb the activities of speculators in the currency market.

Mr. Nelson: I have no plans to introduce controls aimed at curbing the activities of speculators in the currency market.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's policy in regard to the inclusion by banks in their ethical policies of an undertaking not to speculate against the pound.

Mr. Nelson: This is a matter for the banks not the Government. But as a practical matter it would be impossible to distinguish so-called speculation from transactions driven by the genuine needs of customers such as fund managers and corporate treasurers who are taking investment decisions or hedging in the foreign exchange market to protect themselves from currency fluctuations. Moreover it would not be realistic to impose restraints on UK-based banks when sterling is traded worldwide.

Currency Intervention

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will invite the National Audit Office to examine the question of the intervention in the currency market on 14 to 18 September.

Mr. Nelson: It is not for me to direct the Comptroller and Auditor General.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration has been given to sterling's institutional relationship with the single currency if the United Kingdom does not accept stage three of economic and monetary union.

Mr. Nelson: If the United Kingdom does not move to stage 3 of economic and monetary union as set out in the Maastricht treaty, the relationship of the pound sterling to the single currency would be a matter for decision at the time. The treaty does not prescribe the relationship between the currencies of those member states participating in stage 3 and those of non-participants.

Exchange Rates

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present exchange rate of the pound sterling with (a) the United States dollar and (b) the German mark; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lamont: The approximate sterling exchange rates at close of business on Friday, 23 October were US dollars 1·6145 and deutschemark 2·4702 respectively.

World Bank

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the annual World bank meeting held in Washington in September, and on any decisions made at that meeting about additional environmental expenditure.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

Finance Ministers reviewed the world economic scene, resource flows to developing countries and other issues including progress with the debt strategy and trade policy. On the environment, they welcomed the wide-ranging consensus reached at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. They noted that UNCED had called for additional funding to be channelled through existing institutions, including the global environment facility. They also agreed that continuing consideration should be given to an "earth increment" for environmental purposes in the negotiations for the 10th replenishment of the International Development Association.

International Development Association

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards increasing United Kingdom funding for the International Development Association.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom is playing a constructive role in the negotiations on the 10th replenishment of the International Development Association. The overall size of the replenishment and burden-sharing among donors are among the issues still to be resolved.

Currency Trading

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total volume of currency traded from London in the last year for which figures are available; and what percentage is for (a) international trading requirements and (b) speculative currency deals, respectively.

Mr. Nelson: Total volumes of foreign currency traded in London are not monitored on a regular month-by-month basis. The Bank of England does, however, conduct a wide-ranging survey of foreign exchange business in London every three years. The latest survey, conducted by the bank during April of this year, indicated average gross daily turnover of about $300 billion—around £190 billion at current exchange rates—in London. Within this total, it is impossible to distinguish so-called speculative deals from transactions carried out to finance flows of trade or for fund-management or hedging purposes.

EC Economies

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the economies of the EC currently measure up to the convergence criteria of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 20 October at column 245.

Financial Reserves

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the levels of financial reserves on 10 April; and what they are at present.

Mr. Nelson: The levels of the United Kingdom foreign exchange reserves at the end of April and September 1992 were respectively $45,775 million and $42,677 million. The level of the reserves is not published on an intra-mensal basis.

Cohesion Fund

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the United Kingdom qualifies for contributions from the EEC cohesion fund on 1991 and 1992 gross domestic product figures.

Mr. Nelson: The cohesion fund envisaged in the Maastricht treaty will be a structural fund; and the usual method of calculating relative wealth for these funds is to use purchasing power parities. On that basis, the United Kingdom would not qualify on 1991 gross domestic product figures, the latest year for which outturn data are available, or forecasts for 1992.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider the division of balance of payments figures into different categories so as to show the imports and exports of food, oil, manufactured products, goods for retail sale, cars and aircraft and also into categories which show import and export figures for European and non-European countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The Central Statistical Office already publishes separate figures for the following categories of overseas trade in a monthly press notice and monthly "Review of External Trade Statistics":

Food, beverages and tobacco;
Oil;
Manufactures;
Consumer goods (as opposed to capital and intermediate goods within manufacturers);
Passenger motor cars;
Trade with European countries (distinguishing between the European Community, the rest of Western Europe and Eastern Europe including the former Soviet Union);
Trade with non-European countries (distinguishing between various area groupings).

Consolidated figures are not published for aircraft as the amount of trade in them is relatively small and highly erratic, but monthly data on exports and imports of individual types of aircraft are published by the CSO in a business monitor—MM20—"Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom".

Agriculture

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce a scheme to provide tax relief for companies and businesses providing services to agriculture to enable them to retain employees who would otherwise be made redundant.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. Friend has no plans for new tax relief for agricultural service businesses.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce a scheme to provide increased tax relief on capital assets held by companies and businesses providing services to agriculture to enable them to retain employees who would otherwise be made redundant.

Mr. Dorrell: I have no plans to do so.

Bloodstock Industry

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assistance will be provided under the distance selling scheme and the flat rate scheme to vendors of horses selling for less than £15,000.

Sir John Cope: Bloodstock industry representatives have indicated that both schemes could be of some assistance when selling horses with a value of £15,000 or less. It is for individual vendors to assess the advantages of the new arrangements which will be able from 1 January 1993.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce regulations to enable race horse owners to be registered for VAT.

Sir John Cope: Eligibility for VAT registration is governed by both European Community law and United Kingdom law. Under the present rules of racing, race horse owners in the United Kingdom do not qualify for VAT registration because it is not a business activity making taxable supplies. This opinion has been upheld in individual cases by the independent VAT tribunals.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate has been made of the financial effect on the domestic bloodstock industry of the new VAT required to be imposed as part of the EC single market changes on 1 January 1993.

Sir John Cope: It is not possible to make any reliable estimate of the financial effects future changes to the VAT regime will have on the United Kingdom bloodstock industry. VAT is only one of several factors which determine its finances, but, as long as the industry ensures that its members fully understand the new rules for the single market, they should not be significantly disadvantaged by them.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement outlining the ways in which the changes to be introduced on 1 January 1993 to the VAT regime affecting the bloodstock industry achieves parity of treatment between British breeders and their overseas counterparts.

Sir John Cope: The present VAT arrangements will in large part remain after 1992, although in some cases in a different form. British breeders should therefore maintain broadly the same position in relation to their overseas counterparts as now. The introduction of an agricultural flat-rate scheme in the United Kingdom in 1993 will be an extra scheme, not currently available, which will allow those breeders who opt to become flat-rate farmers to sell horses and nominations free of VAT, in exactly the same way as their European counterparts.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reconsider introducing regulations to enable a low VAT rate to be applied to the United Kingdom bloodstock industry; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The Government's policy is to maintain a simple VAT structure with a single positive rate. Any concession for racehorses would inevitably bring pressure for a similar concession on a wide range of goods and services, where it was felt that the case was just as strong as that for bloodstock.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of public expenditure by region in each year since 1979-80 (a) in overall terms and (b) in per capita terms at current and 1979-80 prices.

Mr. Portillo: Information on the level of general Government expenditure by region in England was published in the "Statistical Supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement", Cm 1520, for 1987-88 and in the "Statistical Supplement to the 1991 Autumn Statement", Cm 1920, for years 1988-89 and 1989-90. Information on the level of public expenditure by region in England on a consistent basis is not available prior to 1987-88.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to conduct an annual regional analysis of general Government expenditure within England.

Mr. Portillo: In response to a request from the Treasury and Civil Service Committee—fifth report for 1991, HC 290—a regional analysis of general Government expenditure within England is conducted annually. The results of the 1990 exercise were published in the "Statistical Supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement", Cm 1520, and the results of the 1991 exercise were published in the "Statistical Supplement to the 1991 Autumn Statement", Cm 1521. The results of the 1992 exercise will be published in the "Statistical Supplement to the 1992 Autumn Statement".

Financial Statistics

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, for each of the years 1974-75 to 1992-93 (planned), (a) in market price and (b) in constant prices (i) gross domestic product and (ii) public sector borrowing requirement, (1) including privatisation receipts and (2) excluding privatisation receipts, (iii) general Government expenditure, as defined in United Kingdom accounts, (iv) general Government receipts, as defined in United Kingdom accounts, (v) general Government expenditure, as defined in the European system of integrated accounts, (vi) general Government receipts, as defined in the European system of integrated accounts, (vii) borrowing as defined in the European system of integrated accounts, (viii) (ii) (1) and (2) as a percentage of (i) and (ix) (vii) as a percentage of (i).

Mr. Portillo: Most of the figures requested are available from the CSO database, which can be accessed through the House of Commons Library. The identifiers are as follows:

	Identifier
(a) GDP at current prices	CAOB
(b) GDP at constant market prices	CAOQ
(c) PSBR including privatisation receipts	ABEN
(d) PSBR excluding privatisation receipts	ABII
(e) General government expenditure United Kingdom definition	ABAB
(f) General government expenditure, ESA definition	see table
(g) General government receipts, ESA definition	see table
(h) General government borrowing, ESA definition	CSNK

Items (c) to (h) are not available at constant prices. Items (f), (g) and (h) are available only for calendar years.

General Government total receipts and expenditure on ESA definitions are not available on the database and are shown in the table.

Forecasts for 1992-93 for gross domestic product, the public sector borrowing requirement, and general Government expenditure as defined in United Kingdom accounts were published in the 1992-93 Financial Statement and Budget Report in March. A revised forecast will be published in the autumn statement. There are no forecasts made on ESA definitions.

Debt in Africa

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions on alleviating debt in Africa were held at the annual International Monetary Fund and World bank meetings in Washington in September.

Mr. Nelson: Discussions at the annual International Monetary Fund and World bank meetings in September covered the international debt strategy. Ministers welcomed the enhanced debt relief extended to the poorest and most heavily indebted countries by the Paris club, including to date the African countries of Benin, Equatorial Guinea, Tanzania, Togo, Uganda and Zambia, and urged the Paris club to recognise the special situation of some highly indebted lower-middle income countries on a case by case basis. The Paris club was also invited to maintain its continuing review of the debt strategy.

Correspondence

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the target times within which Treasury Ministers aim to reply to letters sent to them by hon. Members on behalf of their constituents.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has set the following targets for replies to ministerial correspondence:

Letters for ministerial reply on matters concerning Her Majesty's Treasury: Reply to be posted within 15 working days.

Letters for ministerial reply on matters concerning other Chancellor's Departments, including Inland Revenue and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise: Reply to be posted within 18 working days.

Letters for ministerial reply on matters requiring a report from a local Inland Revenue tax office: Reply to be posted within 23 working days.

These targets come into operation from Monday, 2 November. The targets will be kept under review. Details of the extent to which they have been met will be published in the Chancellor's Department's departmental report.

BCCI

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total number of claims made to the deposit protection board by former depositors of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International by (a) number and (b) value; and how many are still to be processed.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 22 October 1992]: I understand that at 19 October 1992 some 16,500 claims had been lodged with the board. Of these some 5,500 claims are with the liquidators awaiting proof of debt forms to be lodged, and some 1,500 claims are in course of payment or awaiting responses to inquiries. No details are maintained of the total value of claims.

WALES

Dentists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Danish dentists he proposes to allow to complete their training in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is not a matter in which the Secretary of State has any specific remit. The General Dental Council is responsible for determining the eligibility of EC qualified dental practitioners for employment in the United Kingdom, whether in training grades or as independent practitioners.

Promotional World Tour

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list each private or voluntary body or association or private individual from Wales or elsewhere in the United Kingdom associated by arrangement with either his Department, the Welsh Development Agency or the Wales tourist board with the current Wales promotional world tour; and if he will specify to which event on which leg of the tour the arrangement has been made.

Mr. David Hunt: My recent inward investment mission involved representatives of the Welsh Office, the Welsh Development Agency and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, as well as many individuals in the companies concerned.

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has regarding the breaches of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 by Xidex (UK) Ltd. of Brynmawr, Gwent.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the provisions of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution—HMIP—is responsible for deciding in which cases prosecution action may be appropriate. My right hon. Friend and I were informed of legal action planned by the inspectorate against Xidex (UK) Ltd. and the reasons for it.

"Think Globally, Act Locally"

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies of the Government booklet "Think Globally, Act Locally" issued in September, have been distributed in Wales; and what criteria have been adopted in drawing up the distribution list.

Mr. David Hunt: This Department of the Environment booklet is being given a wide circulation throughout the United Kingdom. It is expected to be of general interest and DOE's initial circulation has included some 300 copies to local government, libraries, environmental groups, Members of Parliament and others in Wales.

Environmental Research

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish his Department's study of environmental research priorities in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: As is made clear in the Welsh chapter of "This Common Inheritance—The Second Year Report", this is an internal review of the Welsh Office's environmental research programme. I will be considering whether and in what form the review, when completed, might be published.

Panteg

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department has spent to date funding the survey of polychlorinated biphenol contamination in Panteg, to which reference is made in chapter 18, paragraph 13.21 of Britain's Environmental Strategy, Cm 2068.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A total of £159,000.

Nuclear Plants

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will invite European Commission safety inspectors to evaluate the radiation protection arrangements in place at the Wylfa and Trawsfyndd nuclear plants under the provisions of article 35 of the Euratom treaty.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The United Kingdom Government have agreed with the European Commission the procedures to be followed in carrying out, under article 35 of the Euratom treaty, verifications of the operation and efficiency of environmental monitoring facilities in the United Kingdom. It is for the Commission in the first instance to indicate which monitoring facilities it would wish to visit under these arrangements; it has not yet made any formal requests to so so.

RECHAR

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in resolving the dispute over the allocation of EC RECHAR funds in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: There is no dispute. The RECHAR programme for south Wales was adopted by the European Commission in February. A package of projects to take up most of the available funds has been agreed in principle by the programme co-ordinating committee. Full applications are now being assessed, and I anticipate that the first formal approvals will take place well before the end of the year.

Electricity Interconnector

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if plans by the National Grid Company and the Irish Electricity Supply Board to develop an interconnector link between Ynys Môn and north Dublin are subject to European environmental impact directives.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Proposals for the transmission of electrical energy, other than by overhead cable, are not subject to directive 85/337/EEC which covers the assessment of the effects of certain public and private projects on the environment.

Environmental Education

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made to date with his departmental commitment to promote environmental education in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Environmental education has been given a place in the curriculum of all primary and secondary schools as a result of the introduction of the national curriculum. It is an integral element in a number of subjects including science, geography, history and technology. The Curriculum Council for Wales is currently producing guidance for schools on environmental education as a cross-curricular theme and this will be circulated to schools shortly.

The Curriculum Council for Wales and the Countryside Council for Wales have held a joint conference on practical ways of teaching environmental education in schools and a successful environmental competition has been held for schools in Wales.

An expert committee on environmental education in further and higher education has been set up to look at the provision of environmental education and will be reporting to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and my right hon. Friend shortly.

Coal

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what calculations he has made of the effect upon the Welsh economy and communities of coal mine closures since 1984.

Mr. David Hunt: While I appreciate the immediate difficulties for individuals and communities that the closure of coal mines presents, over the past decade we have been able to diversify the Welsh economy to a point where it is much stronger and more resilient rather than being over-dependent on a small number of sectors as was the case in the past.

Contaminated Land Register

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the impact on land values of the implementation of the contaminated land register in Wales under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In drawing up its revised proposals for contaminated land registers, the Government have sought to take account of the possible consequences for land values in England and Wales. This aspect will be considered further however, along with other relevant issues, in the light of the responses to the recent consultation exercise.

NHS Trust Unit

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many civil servants of which grade work (a) full-time and (b) part of their time within the NHS trust unit within his Department, and what is its estimated total establishment cost in the current financial year and next financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: The complement of the Department's NHS trust unit consists of four full-time civil servants:

	Number
Grade 7	1
Higher Executive Officer	1
Executive Officer	1
Administrative Officer	1

Estimated total establishment cost for the current financial year amounts to £127,191. Figures for the next financial year are not available.

Household Waste

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales(1) what tonnage of household waste is produced in each local authority area in Wales;

(2) how many household waste landfill sites there are in each local authority area in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is available only from district councils which have responsibilities for investigations of controlled waste arising in their areas and for the licensing of disposal sites.

Baglon Hospital Site, Port Talbot

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what effects have been undertaken by his Department to (a) research the quality of soil for heavy metal contamination, (b) consider the level of legal waste disposal and illegal tipping in the vicinity and (c) research the effect of toxic deposits in water-courses and emission levels into the air prior to the development of the Baglon hospital site in Port Talbot.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The interdepartmental committee on the redevelopment of contaminated land has published guidance on the assessment and remedial measures for these types of site. West Glamorgan health authority which has full responsibility for the new hospital scheme, are expected to follow these guidelines. There is also a statutory responsibility on the local planning authority under the planning and building regulation procedures to satisfy itself before approval to proceed is given that the proposal takes proper account of any contamination that may exist.

Development of Contaminated Land

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are taken by his Department prior to the building of new hospitals in Wales, to (a) research the quality of the soil for possible contamination, (b) monitor the level of toxic emissions into the locality, (c) measure toxic deposits into the watercourse of the locality and (d) research the level of risk from localised waste disposal and tipping, both illegal and legal.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Welsh Office circular 22/87 provides guidance about the development of contaminated land. Responsibility for assessing whether land is suitable for hospital building, including whether it is contaminated, rests primarily with the health authority concerned. The local planning authority also has a statutory duty under the planning and building regulations to satisfy itself before approval to proceed with any scheme is given that the proposal takes proper account of any contamination that may exist.

Acid Rain

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites of special scientific interest in Wales have been damaged by (a) acid rain and (b) other agricultural damage in 1991; what are the names and locations of these sites and the total number of hectares; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are now 845 sites of special scientific interest in Wales. In 1991, 42 sites were subject to some damage from agricultural practices. Between 1988 and 1992, 41 freshwater sites were subject to some damage from acidification. Of these 83 sites, six have been subject to some damage from agriculture and acidification. Data on acidification to dry land sites should be available next year. I have placed copies containing details of these sites in the Library of the House.

Exam papers (Welsh Language)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of students who submitted exam papers in Welsh in 1991; what was the cost of having these papers translated into English; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The latest available statistics from the Welsh Joint Education Committee show that in 1991 a total of 1,093 candidates submitted Welsh medium papers for A/AS level and 9,679 for GCSE examinations. There are no costs to students associated with translation as schools choose to enter candidates through either the medium of Welsh or English.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to review the system whereby students submitting certain exam papers in Welsh in the coming school year will have to pay to have them translated into English; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The principal examining body for GCSE and A-level examinations in Wales is the Welsh Joint Education Committee—WJEC. There are no translation costs, as examination papers submitted by pupils in the medium of Welsh are marked by the WJEC's Welsh-speaking examiners and are not translated into English.

Urbanised Land

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hectares of land in Wales have become urbanised so far this year; if he will give comparable figures for 1989, 1990 and 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: A limited amount of information on land-use change is provided by statistics derived from records compiled by Ordnance Survey during the course of its map revision work. A large proportion of changes of use are not collected until some time after the year of change, resulting in substantial time lags before there are adequate data to estimate total change occurring during a particular year. The latest available data suggest that between 1985-87, the average recorded net change of land from rural to urban use in Wales was 560 hectares per year. Information for later years is not available.

Fishguard

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received to his consultative paper on assisted areas advocating the creation of development area status for the Fishguard travel-to-work area.

Mr. David Hunt: Five.

Japanese

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many teachers qualified to teach the Japanese language are currently employed by local education authorities and teaching in (a) secondary schools to GCSE level and (b) in sixth forms to A-level; and if he will make a statement on the teaching of Japanese in Welsh schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on teachers qualified to teach Japanese is not available.

We have continued to promote the teaching of Japanese in schools in Wales through the Japanese in schools initiative launched in 1989. The initiative has established a sixth-form course of study and assessment scheme accredited by the Welsh Joint Education Committee and has supported teaching of Japanese in 14 schools participating in the initiative.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received in total to his consultation paper on assisted areas; and how many of these representations advocated (a) the creation of further development areas, (b) the creation of further intermediate areas, (c) the maintenance of the status quo, (d) the reduction of development areas and (e) the reduction of intermediate areas.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received 76 representations. Of these, 35 argue for the creation of further development areas; four advocate creation of further intermediate areas; and 37 are in favour of the status quo. I have received no requests for a reduction in assisted areas of either status.

The division of representations does not correspond to the overall number received because a proportion of the submissions make a case for more than one travel-to-work area; others do not argue for or against any particular area, but confine their comments to the review itself.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in his review of assisted area status, how many submissions from within each Welsh constituency he has received; if he will extend the period for receiving submissions in relation to the current review of assisted area status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received 76 representations on the assisted areas review, the majority of which are from local authorities. In most cases, the areas covered by these local authorities overlap constituency boundaries and it is not possible, therefore, to provide the information in the form requested.

The deadline for receipt of representations from the various interested bodies was 30 September. This gave consultees nearly four months in which to respond. A few organisations gave us advance notice that they might over reach the deadline by a few days and we have, therefore, made allowances. In view of the number of representations already received, I do not believe it is necessary to extend the deadline.

The information contained in the representations is currently being considered and we hope to be able to make a decision on the review by the end of the year.

Power Station, Trawsfynydd

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of the magnox power station at Trawsfynydd.

Mr. David Hunt: The nuclear installations inspectorate is currently examining Nuclear Electric's revised safety case for a resumption of electricity generation. The station will resume operations only if the nuclear installations inspectorate is entirely satisfied that it is safe to do so.

Town and Community Councils

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to review the working of German communes—community councils—as part of his study into the role and function of town and community councils in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: No, but I would be happy to receive any observations on such matters which the hon. Gentleman might wish to make.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many responses he has received to his Department's consultation paper on town and community councils; and how many of these advocate an enhanced representational rôle for the councils.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received 353 responses to the consultation paper. The detailed analysis of these responses is continuing, but, of those which have been examined, most support an enhanced representational role for local councils.

Less-favoured Areas

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of Welsh farmers are included in the less-favoured area scheme; what is the average income of Welsh farmers included under this scheme; what is the average income of farmers under this scheme in the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: A total of 69 per cent. of Welsh farmers farm in the less-favoured area. They benefit from a wide range of support measures including hill livestock compensatory allowance, sheep and suckler cow premia and capital grants which together are worth over £123 million annually.

The net income of Welsh farmers included under these schemes—averaged over the three years 1988-89 to 1990-91—is £10,200. Comparable income figures are not available for the EC.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average income of Welsh farmers under the less favoured area scheme in 1990, 1991; and what is expected in 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: Net farm income figures of LFA livestock farms for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91 were £10,100 and £7,600 respectively—Welsh Office press notice of 16 January 1992. Provisional results for 1991-92 suggest that incomes on these holdings have risen to around £11,600.

Pit Closures

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is (a) the number of coalminers in Wales who will be made redundant under recent closure plans, (b) the average number of tons per month produced by Welsh collieries and (c) the average comparable number in English collieries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: (a) Both Taff Merthyr and Betws collieries are due to close at the end of the 90-day statutory consultation period. This will result in the loss of approximately 500 jobs.

(b) Based on the actual saleable outputs for the six months to the end of September 1992, the four Welsh collieries mined in total an average of 156,785 tonnes per month giving an average output per colliery of 39,196 tonnes.

(c) During the same period the 45 English collieries mined in total an average of 4,636,149 tonnes per month giving an average output per colliery of 103,026 tonnes.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the freedom from closure of Tower colliery at Hirwaun, Mid Glamorgan over the next two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have been told by the chairman of British Coal that there are no plans to close this colliery.

Dairy Farms

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of sampling visits to dairy farms in Wales by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, in 1990, 1991 and 1992; what is the projected charge for 1993; and what is the criteria for any change of the charge.

Mr. David Hunt: On the basis of the latest information available, the cost in 1992 will be about £30,000. Separate figures for Wales are not available for 1990 and 1991. Charges are based on financial years and the proposed charge for 1992-93 is £63. The charge for 1993-94 will be decided prior to 1 April 1993. The objective of the charge is to recover the full cost of sampling and testing work; thus, any change to the level would be to reflect the effectiveness of meeting that objective.

Valleys Programme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the annual spending totals for each year on the valleys programme since its inception.

Mr. David Hunt: The annual spending totals on the relevant central Government programmes for each year of the valleys programme since its inception are:

Financial year	£ million
1988-89	139·330
1989-90	137·440
1990-91	148·810
1991-92	[1]171·033

[1] Estimated outturn.

Economic Council

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish full details of the composition and structure of the Economic Council for Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: As I announced to the House on 19 October, I issued on that day a consultation paper on the proposed Welsh economic council. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Orimulsion

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from National Power regarding the proposal to burn orimulsion at Pembroke power plant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. In order to proceed with its plans to burn orimulsion at Pembroke power station, National Power requires permission from the Department of Trade and Industry and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution—HMIP—under the Electricity Act 1989 and the Environmental Protection Act 1990 respectively. No decisions have been taken; but I understand that HMIP has recently indicated to the company that it does not consider that orimulsion could be burnt at Pembroke without further measures to protect the environment.

Point of Ayr Colliery

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make an early visit to the Point of Ayr colliery to meet management and unions.

Mr. David Hunt: I had several meetings on the subject of the Point of Ayr colliery on 23 October 1992, but I have no immediate plans to visit the colliery again.

HEALTH

Central Health Monitoring Unit

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers she has to ensure that trusts and other providers of health care share information with the central health monitoring unit, regardless of commercial confidentiality; and what examples there have been of providers refusing to co-operate in statistical surveys initiated by the central health monitoring unit.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Secretary of State has particular powers under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 to require trusts to provide whatever information she requires to discharge her responsibilities. Information from the national health service is agreed through a joint Department of Health/national health service consultative committee and there is accountability through the management chain for the provision of that information from providers and purchasers of health care in the national health service. There have been no problems with the exchange of information.

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what kind of data the central health monitoring unit is collecting; and what use it is currently making of such information;

(2) what level of resources, including staffing, is being allocated to the central health monitoring unit;

(3) if she intends to publish regularly the data collected by the central health monitoring unit;

(4) if she will outline the role of the central health monitoring unit; and if she will make a statement detailing its current workload and its plans for future projects.

Dr. Mawhinney: The central health monitoring unit was set up in March 1989 to provide the Department with epidemiological data to underpin its strategic, managerial and policy work. The unit, which is headed by a medical epidemiologist, comprises 12 posts including epidemiological, statistical and administrative support.

A major function of the unit is to collate published statistics on health from a wide range of sources and to assess and present health trends in, for example, mortality, morbidity and risk factors. The health survey for England, a survey being taken forward by the unit, involves the collection of information from individual households and the results will be published annually.

The unit is currently engaged in producing a series of epidemiological overviews on various aspects of the health of the population; in developing a health survey programme; and, in contributing to the development and monitoring of the health strategy. The series of overviews is being published. The first, on the elderly, was published in September 1992. Other assessments of health trends by the unit are published in the chief medical officer's annual reports.

Glaucoma

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to provide for free eye tests for people under the age of 40 years where (a) there is a family history of glaucoma and (b) they are from communities at greater risk from glaucoma than others.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no current plans to alter the present categories of those eligible for free sight tests.

Needles (Diabetics)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) of 13 July, Official Report, column 513, if she has now decided to make Novopen needles for diabetics available by prescription from general practitioners.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are continuing to consider the case for authorising general practitioners to prescribe both insulin injection pens and needles but, in reaching a final decision, we shall need to take into account current public expenditure constraints.

Food Hygiene

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the timing and scope of her proposed new regulations covering food handlers and food hygiene qualifications.

Mr. Sackville: We expect to issue a consultation document, as announced in July, before the end of the year on draft regulations which would require food businesses to train, instruct and supervise their staff in food hygiene commensurate with their task in the preparation or handling of food.

Interleukin-6

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether she will set out the role of Mr. Stuart Ingham, then the district general manager of Leeds Western health authority, in the investigation into the alleged fraud at the Leeds general infirmary in 1989 in relation to the research project on Interleukin-6; and if she will make a statement;

(2) whether she will set out the role of Coopers and Lybrand in the investigation into the alleged fraud at the Leeds general infirmary in 1989 in relation to the research project on Interleukin-6; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The 1989 inquiry considered Dr. Chapman's allegations concerning a consultancy arrangement between a Belgian pharmaceutical company and the head of the bio-chemistry department at Leeds general infirmary. A separate inquiry into Dr. Chapman's allegations concerning research into Interleukin-6 was conducted by the university of Leeds earlier this year and further inquiries are currently under way.

Mr. Stuart Ingham, as district general manager of the then Leeds Western health authority, was responsible for the day-to-day running of the authority. Mr. Ingham had no direct role in the 1989 investigation which was carried out by a Member of Coopers and Lybrand staff and, with their agreement, a professionally qualified auditor of the then Leeds Western health authority who was responsible to the authority's director of finance.

The 1989 investigation did not substantiate the allegations made by Dr. Chapman. This investigation has recently been reviewed by a partner in Coopers and Lybrand, who had not been previously involved. He concluded that the findings of the 1989 report were justified and that there would be little merit in reopening the investigation.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate has been made as to the financial loss to the national health service of the fraud in 1988-89 with the Interleukin-6 research project at the Leeds general infirmary; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Interleukin-6 research project is currently the subject of further inquiries by the university of Leeds. Until that inquiry is concluded there are no grounds for supposing that there has been an avoidable loss of funds to the national health service. Research cannot be expected always to result in a usable product or testing process.

Ethical Standards

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to write again on ethical standards in medical research, as promised in her letter of 15 July to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State wrote to the hon. Member on 20 October 1992 following my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's letter of 15 July 1992.

Smoking

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the health education authority's estimate of the number of premature deaths caused by smoking in the past year in the Stoke-on-Trent, North constituency; and what action she will take to reduce the number of such premature deaths in the future.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Health Education Authority estimates that, in the Stoke-on-Trent, North constituency, 225 people die each year because of smoking. The White Paper "Health of the Nation" commits us to ambitious targets to reduce smoking and sets out a detailed strategy to achieve them including action on price, health education and ensuring effective controls on advertising. It also sets out the key role of health authorities in leading action to improve the health of local people including action to reduce smoking.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the latest estimates by the Registrar-General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency in England and Wales, together in each case with the equivalent year's electoral registration figures.

Mr. Sackville: The information has been placed in the Library. The Registrar-General's provisional mid-1991 estimates of residents aged 17 years and over plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years in each local authority area of England and Wales are compared with roughly corresponding 1992 electorate figures. These population estimates are the first to be based upon information collected in the 1991 census. They include an allowance for census under-enumeration. There are no similar population estimates for parliamentary constituencies.

Residential Homes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will review her policy towards small residential and nursing homes to make it easier for bona fide private sector owners to register and operate homes with four or fewer beds;

(2) if she will consider allowing discretion to local officers to register small residential and nursing homes with four or fewer beds in rural areas where inadequate numbers of beds are available in the public sector;

(3) if she will make a statement outlining the reasons for refusing to register residential and nursing homes in the private sector with four or fewer beds.

Mr. Yeo: All independent nursing homes, whatever their size, are required to register with the health authority in whose area they fall.

At present private and voluntary residential care homes with fewer than four residents in need of care—small homes—are exempt from the registration requirement of the Registered Homes Act 1984. This exemption will be removed when the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 comes into force on 1 April 1993.

The only ground on which a local authority will be able to refuse to register someone liable to register in respect of a small home will be that that person or someone else involved in running the home is unfit to do so. This lighter regulatory approach is further reflected in the Residential Care Homes (Amendment) (No. 2) Regulations 1992 which were laid on 21 September 1992.

Neither the Registered Homes Act nor the Department's guidance to local authorities differentiates between homes in rural and other areas. But they do provide scope for account to be taken of the particular circumstances of each home and the needs of its residents.

Nutrient-based Products

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many product licence applications have been (a) received and (b) refused for nutrient-based products since 1 January 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Royal Orthopaedic Hospital, Birmingham

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding plans by South Birmingham health authority to close the Broad street site of the Royal orthopaedic hospital in Birmingham in advance of the completion of the formal consultation period; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for the West Midlands regional health authority and we have not received any such representations.

Community Services, Birmingham

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the budget of the East Birmingham district health authority was spent on community services during 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: Details of health authority budgets are not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Nigel Thompson, chairman of East Birmingham health authority, for details.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of preparing NHS trust applications (a) nationally, (b) by region and (c) by district for the whole NHS trust programme to date.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of employing management consultants and private agencies to assist in the preparation of self-governing trust applications (a) nationally, (b) by region and (c) by district for the whole programme to date.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, West, Official Report, 18 May, column 63, if she will break down the details for expenditure on NHS trusts by (a) region and (b) district.

Dr. Mawhinney: Expenditure on trusts is made centrally; to regional health authorities; and to trusts themselves through district health authorities. The information is shown in the table:

Total expenditure on national health service trusts by region

Child Care Schemes

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many children were on holiday child care schemes in each year since 1979; and, of those, which were provided by local authorities and the voluntary sector, respectively; (2) how many children were receiving out-of-school child care in each year since 1979; and, of those, which were provided by local authorities and voluntary agencies, respectively.

Mr. Yeo: The inspection and registration of day care services for young children under the Children Act 1989, is a matter for the Department of Health. Information about the number of children under five provided with day care by local authorities and the numbers of local authority registered and exempt day care places is published in "Children's Day Care Facilities at 31 March . . ., England". The most recent publication is for 1991. A copy is available in the Library.

New information on the number of children on the register of local authority out of school clubs and the numbers of local authority, registered and exempt places in out-of-school clubs and on holiday play schemes will be issued during 1993.

The Department is currently funding an initiative to encourage the development of out-of-school care and I understand that work is well under way in the Department of Employment towards its new initiative to promote additional out-of-school schemes.

TRANSPORT

Rail Passengers Charter

12. Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what effect the rail passengers charter has had on British Rail's performance to date.

Mr. Roger Freeman: Published performance figures show that many of British Rail's lines have shown improvements in punctuality and reliability since the passengers charter was published on 4 March. The latest results show that 13 out of 15 network SouthEast route groups are now achieving or exceeding their 1992 charter standards for punctuality.

Crossrail

13. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about progress on the crossrail link in London.

Mr. Norris: A Bill for the construction of crossrail was deposited in Parliament in November 1991 and is currently awaiting its Second Reading.

Cyclists' Touring Club

14. Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of the Cyclists' Touring Club to discuss road safety.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Officials and Ministers at the Department have regular contact with the Cyclists Touring Club through meetings and correspondence covering a broad range of issues. I last met with the CTC in July this year.

Traffic Speeds

15. Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what financial assistance he plans for 1992 to assist local authorities to reduce traffic speeds in residential streets.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: For 1992-93 over £42 million has been earmarked for local safety schemes, an increase of 38 per cent. over last year. Schemes to save road casualties by reducing traffic speeds in residential areas are eligible for transport supplementary grant.

International Flights

16. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to liberalise transatlantic air services and encourage more international flights from regional airports.

Mr. Norris: In the past seven years, we have seen a 40 per cent. increase in the number of international routes served from regional airports. British Airways has recently proposed new routes from Manchester and Birmingham to the States. Both my right hon. Friend the Secretary of state and the US Secretary for Transportation are taking a close interest in the progress of liberalisation talks. Difficult issues remain but work on them has been accelerated.

Red Routes

17. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on the effect of red routes on community life in London.

Mr. Norris: Communities along the pilot red route corridor have benefited from a 17 per cent. reduction in accidents, 11 new or improved crossing places for pedestrians and three for cyclists, 107 side road entries made safer, traffic calming measures in the surrounding area, 620 new free short term parking spaces, and faster and more reliable bus services including a new express service.

Aviation Package

18. Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has made further progress in the matters arising from the third aviation package.

Mr. Norris: The third air transport liberalisation package will come into effect on 1 January 1993. Work is now in hand to make the necessary changes to existing United Kingdom legislation.

Under the United Kingdom presidency, work is going forward on other aviation issues including airport slot allocation and state aids.

Channel Tunnel

19. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the new channel tunnel Waterloo terminal to be completed.

Mr. Freeman: The new international terminal at Waterloo should be completed by the summer of 1993.

27. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made to finalise plans for the second London channel tunnel station.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail plans to develop King's Cross as the second London Channel tunnel terminal. The King's Cross Railways Bill is currently before Parliament.

29. Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for the channel tunnel high-speed rail link.

Mr. Freeman: Currently Union Railways—British Rail's subsidiary—is refining the easterly approach route to London selected by the Government last October. It will report at the end of the year on a reference case route and local options. The Government will then decide on a preferred route for full public consultation.

Roadbuilding (Conservation)

21. Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration is given to conservation during the building of roads.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We shall continue to ensure that environmental considerations are given full weight in the development of trunk roads.

We take account of the possible environmental impact of proposals even before they enter the roads programme, and we maintain that high degree of consideration throughout their development. A recent example is our delaying the construction of the A20 at Dover so that the Bronze age boat could be rescued.

British Rail

23. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on his plans for the future of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Mr. Hawkins) earlier today.

Second Severn Crossing

24. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the consortium constructing the second Severn crossing.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department is in frequent discussion with the concessionaire, Severn River Crossing plc, on a range of issues connected with the existing Severn bridge and the new bridge now under construction by the company.

London Docklands

25. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on Government support for (a) underground and (b) riverbus services to London docklands.

Mr. Norris: (a) the Government have supported London Underground Ltd. in developing the Jubilee line extension, which would greatly improve access to London docklands. We have not authorised the start of construction of the JLE which would take total expenditure to over £1·8 billion, while talks continue on the promised £400 million contribution from the private sector.

(b) We have consistently maintained that Riverbus is, and should remain, a private sector project.

Bournemouth Central Station

26. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the restoration of Bournemouth Central station to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that British Rail hopes work on the restoration of Bournemouth station can begin in 1994, and should take about 15 months to complete.

Class 158 Rolling Stock

28. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the current performance of the Regional Railway class 158 rolling stock.

Mr. Freeman: Any such assessment would be a matter for British Rail. I understand that the teething problems experienced on introduction of this stock have now largely been overcome.

Pedestrian Crossings

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve pedestrian safety at pelican and zebra crossings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Although existing types of crossings have a generally good safety record, the progressive introduction of a new type, the Puffin, is intended to improve both safety and pedestrian amenity.

A1

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve the safety standards of the A1 between Newcastle and Edinburgh.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A large programme of safety improvement schemes has been instigated for this section of the A1. Some of the works are complete, and others are currently under construction or in planning.

International Transport

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has made to the European Commissioner for transport concerning the designation of key international road and rail routes by the Commission; and if he will make a statement on the implications of such designation on road and rail infrastructure funding in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: Department of Transport officials take part in Commission working groups developing guidelines for road and rail networks of Community interest. In the light of this work the Commission is putting a number of proposals to the Council of Ministers for eventual decision. Projects contributing to the networks may be eligible for EC funding under the current transport infrastructure programme or a future trans-European networks programme under the Maastricht treaty.

Under Maastricht it is in any event agreed that it will be for each member state to approve the guidelines and projects of common interest relating to its own territory.

Motorways

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reduce the length of time taken by contractors to complete road works on motorways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Under the citizens charter my Department is committed to using the lane rental form of contract on all suitable major maintenance schemes from next April. Under this scheme the contractor receives a bonus for finishing early, and incurs a charge if he is late completing the works. At present about half of all major maintenance schemes are let on a lane rental basis. These contracts are completed approximately 30 per cent. faster than works under conventional contracts. Night time and 24 hour working are used wherever it is practicable and safe to do so.

Bypass Demonstration Project

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to draw conclusions from the bypass demonstration project.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The conclusions will be available in the form of guidance for local authorities after the project is completed in 1994. Interim progress reports will be published at six-monthly intervals. The first is due to be published in November this year.

InterCity

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requirements he has placed on InterCity regarding the need for InterCity trains to have back-up air conditioning when the main power unit fails.

Mr. Freeman: The exact specification of new rolling stock is a matter for British Rail's judgment.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the recent Central Transport Consultative Committee's findings on punctuality of the West Coast main line InterCity service.

Mr. Freeman: The Central Transport Consultative Committee commented on the performance of West Coast main line InterCity services in its 1991-92 annual report. A copy of this report has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what notice was given to Her Majesty's Government by InterCity of the changes to plans to introduce InterCity 250 trains on the West Coast main line railway, the termination of direct WCML InterCity services to Blackpool and the withdrawal of services to Shrewsbury.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail advised the Government of its plans not to proceed with the InterCity 250 project for the West Coast main line, and to withdraw InterCity through trains to Blackpool and Shrewsbury, in advance of their official public announcements.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the reliability of the East Coast main line services provided by InterCity since the electrification of the route; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I know that BR is disappointed with the reliability of services on the East Coast main line—for the year to date, 98·9 per cent. of scheduled trains have run. BR has been experiencing initial problems with the new InterCity 225 trains but these are now being overcome. The line has also been beset by vandalism and the theft of lineside cabling, but action taken by BR and the police has been effective and the incidence of vandalism has now been reduced.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance he has given to InterCity regarding the safety implications of train vestibules blocked by luggage in crowded trains.

Mr. Freeman: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate has not given any specific guidance about the storage of luggage on InterCity trains. It is for British Rail to safeguard the safety of all its passengers and it would certainly expect its staff to respond to any situation which they considered dangerous.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with InterCity about future plans for the West Coast main line railway.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is currently re-assessing all options for replacement rolling stock on the West Coast main line. However, it hopes to start work on re-equipping the infrastructure of the line shortly.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he proposes to have with InterCity regarding the provision of European night services via the channel tunnel operating from Edinburgh and stations south of Edinburgh when the tunnel comes into operation in 1995; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for European Passenger Services and its continental partners, whose current plans include only a daytime through service on the East Coast main line from Edinburgh. A night-time service is planned from Glasgow on the West Coast main line. Levels of service will be reviewed in response to demand.

Foreign Drivers

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will commission a study to see whether any reduction in accidents was achieved by the experiment conducted in Northumberland to provide stickers for foreign drivers to remind them to drive on the left; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have no knowledge of any such experiment in Northumberland, although I understand that such stickers have been distributed by the police to foreign drivers in Scotland.

Rail Fares

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the criteria by which fares are adjusted or increased by British Rail; and what input his Department has.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail take account of many factors in setting fares. These include the level of investment required to maintain and improve services, market conditions and the quality of service. Ministers are consulted in view of their role in setting the financial framework and objectives for BR.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to increase efficiency on the London to Tilbury and Southend line; and how much fares will increase on this line on average in the new year.

Mr. Freeman: Work on the resignalling project for the line is progressing. British Rail believes this project to be the key to improving the reliability of the line.

Fares on the LT&S line—other than Travelcard—will rise by 5 per cent. compared with an average of 7·5 per cent. on Network SouthEast as a whole.

Plutonium (Air Transport)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the current safety arrangements for the air transport of plutonium following the El-Al cargo plane crash in Amsterdam.

Mr. Norris: The transport of radioactive materials is governed by International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) regulations. The standards are stringent. They require containers to remain secure after severe impact and severe fire.

The IAEA keeps its standards under review, and is undertaking a study of air transport aspects. Any resulting recommendations for changes to present regulations will be considered during the next major review of IAEA transport regulations.

Bus Fares

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce regulations to entitle all children between the ages of five and 16 years to half price bus fares.

Mr. Freeman: Local authorities already have powers to include children under 16 years in a concessionary fares scheme, and decisions on whether to do so are for them. In addition, bus companies are free to offer cheap fares on a commercial basis to children of any age.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effects of bus deregulation on the price of children's bus fares.

Mr. Freeman: No separate assessment has been made of the effects of deregulation on children's bus fares. But a recent survey by my Department showed that the proportion of districts in England and Wales in which local authorities operate concessionary fares schemes for children is broadly unchanged since deregulation.

Rail Travel

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the cost of mainline travel from London to South Wales since 1989.

Mr. Freeman: The level of fares on InterCity services is a matter for the commercial judgment of British Rail.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the potential private operators who have expressed an interest in operating private rail freight services over British Rail tracks.

Mr. Freeman: There has been a number of expressions of interest in the operation of private rail freight services.

Discussions with individual companies have been on a commercially confidential basis.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the potential private operators who have expressed an interest in bidding for private railway franchises.

Mr. Freeman: Before the issue of the consultation document on 12 October we have received expressions of interest about running franchised passenger railway services from around 50 companies. I am sure that the consultation document will engender further interest. All approaches are being treated on a confidential basis and it would be inappropriate for me to name the companies or indicate their specific interests at this stage.

Baggage Security

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to issue a directive to all airports and airlines to implement the mandatory ICAO annex 17 (4.3.1.) baggage security standard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We are satisfied that the standard is already being met.

Bromford Viaduct, Birmingham

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the work on the parapet rail on Bromford viaduct in Birmingham will be completed.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Bromford viaduct parapet rail refurbishment contract on the M6 between junction 5 (Castle Bromwich) and junction 6 (Gravelly Hill) is due for completion towards the end of February 1993.

Kidderminster-Blakedown-Hagley Bypass

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many objections to the line of the Kidderminster-Blakedown-Hagley bypass have been received by his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Some 2,700 of which 2,500 are pre-printed postcards completed by individuals in response to a campaign launched by Friends of the Earth.

Search and Rescue Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to involve the helicopter service from Belgium in providing a search and rescue service over part of the Dover straits, following his announcement about the future reorganisation of the search and rescue service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: There are no plans to change the current well proven liaison arrangements between Dover coastguard and the Belgian authorities.

Under normal circumstances, the United Kingdom's air and sea search and rescue (SAR) resources will adequately meet the requirements of marine emergencies in United Kingdom waters.

In the event of a major incident in the Dover strait, under existing arrangements, the co-ordinating authorities of whatever nationality may call for the assistance of SAR assets from across national boundaries.

Train Safety

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of trains are equipped with (a) black box cab data recorders, (b) train radios and (c) automatic train protection devices.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not readily available in the format requested. Information is available as follows:

(a) Data recorders

All trains of type 319, 321, 322 and 456 had data recorders operational by April 1992. Class 442 trains are being equipped under a retro-fit programme due for completion in 1992-93. New trains are being delivered with data recorders, including class 159, 165 and 465 vehicles.

(b) Train Radios

Driver to base radio is fitted on 85 per cent. of locomotives (including all HST power units) and 56 per cent. of Pacer and Sprinter units. All electric multiple units working in the Strathclyde PTE area are fitted. NSE is reviewing how best to meet the BR board's requirements.

(c) ATP

20 per cent. of HST power units have been fitted with ATP. 33 per cent. of the class 165 trains to be used on the Chiltern lines have fully commissioned ATP, and work is underway on the remainder of these trains. The two pilot schemes are still being evaluated.

British Rail

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the oral answer by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 22 June, Official Report, column 12, what work British Rail has been awaiting from the European Commission prior to revising its conditions of carriage; and when he now expects them to be published.

Mr. Freeman: In revising its condition of carriage, British Rail needed to take account of the emerging proposals from the EC Commission for a directive on unfair terms in consumer contracts. Work on revising the conditions is, however, now nearing completion, and BR hopes to publish them in December.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Children

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the latest figures showing (a) the number of children living in families with an unemployed head and (b) the number of children living in families with a long-term unemployed head.

Mr. Burt: At the time of the May 1991 annual statistical inquiry, there were 638,000 children living in families headed by people registered as unemployed and claiming income support.

Figures for the number of children living in families with a long-term unemployed head are not available. The number of long-term cases of people registered as unemployed and claiming income support for themselves and for a child or children are given in the table.

May 1991 annual statistical inquiry
Registered unemployed income support claims involving children

Length of claim	Number of cases
1–2 years	175,900
2–3 years	63,300
Over 3 years	162,500

Note:

(a) The number of children in families headed by people claiming Unemployment Benefit (UB) is not available as UB does not pay an addition for a child dependent.

(b) The figures given are for children up to the age of 15.

Household Incomes

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, based on the households below average income statistics, he will publish figures which show the rise in real income for the top decile between 1979 and the latest available year, both before and after housing costs.

Mr. Burt: The real increase in income for the top decile, between 1979 and 1988-89 combined, was 44 per cent. before housing costs and 46 per cent. after housing costs. These figures relate to the United Kingdom and are based on income equivalised for household size and composition.

Mining Industry

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the range of likely liability on the expenditure of Her Majesty's Government for unemployment and social security payments for the numbers of coal miners to be made redundant under the recent proposals, on the assumption that the median period of unemployment for those concerned is six months and a year, respectively, or on other assumptions; and what formula he adopts for calculations of liability for redundancies in similar productive occupations.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 21 October, at column 331. For the same reasons, it is not possible to make estimates of redundancies in other occupations.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) families with children, (b) pensioner households and (c) other households are currently receiving housing benefit in Great Britain, identifying separately those also receiving income support, and those respectively occupying (i) council tenancies, (ii) housing association tenancies and (iii) other tenancies.

Mr. Burt: The available information, for May 1991, is set out in the table.

Thousands

	Housing benefit with income support	Housing benefit only	Total
Local Authority Tenants
Families with children	657	147	804
Elderly householders	660	922	1,582
Others	347	212	559
Total	1,664	1,281	2,945

	Housing benefit with income support	Housing benefit only	Total
Private Tenants
Families with children	179	40	218
Elderly householders	194	23	428
Others	301	137	438
Total	674	411	1,085

Notes:

(a) Families with children are defined as couples (both aged less than 60), with at least one dependant child; and single persons, aged less than 60, with at least one dependant child.

(b) Pensioner householders are defined as couples where claimant or partner is aged 60 or over; and single persons aged 60 or over. These have been termed "elderly".

(c) Other households are defined as couples (both aged less than 60), without children; and single persons aged less than 60, without children.

(d) Housing Association tenancies are included in the figures for private tenants.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend current severe disablement allowance regulations to permit young people on youth training programmes to requalify for SDA following the completion of the placement, if the individual is deemed to be unable to enter employment either due to his/her condition or experience of disability.

Mr. Scott: Special linking rules already exist to help young people who are incapable of work when their youth training programme finishes. Severe disablement allowance can be reinstated providing a fresh claim is made within eight weeks of the end of the course.

School Ancillary Staff

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take the necessary steps to change existing regulations to allow school ancillary staff to claim unemployment benefit automatically as soon as they start the long summer period during which they are unable to work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to do so. To revise the existing regulations on "recognised and customary" holidays would be contrary to the main purpose of insurance against unemployment which is to insure against a risk, rather than a certainty, of unemployment.

Age Addition

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement outlining the Government's plans for the future of the age addition paid to retired people over the age of 80 years;

(2) what purpose the age addition paid to retired people over the age of 80 years is supposed to serve;

(3) if he will estimate the cost involved in administrating the age addition payment to retired people over the age of 80 years;

(4) if he will estimate the value of the 25p age addition payment at 1992 prices assuming it had increased in line with the RPI since it was introduced;

(5) what plans he has to increase the value of the age addition payment paid to retired people over the age of 80 years.

Miss Widdecombe: The 25p age addition paid to people who are over 80 was introduced in 1971, when the single person's pension was £6 a week, as a means of special help to the very elderly. No Government have increased the age addition since its introduction. Instead we have chosen to target resources on those pensioners with low incomes and have given extra help to poorer pensioners on income-related benefits in the sum of £700 million over and above normal upratings since 1989. There are no plans to increase the value of the 25p age addition.

Some 2·2 million people receive the age addition at an annual cost of £28·6 million. If it had been increased annually in line with prices since its introduction, it would now be worth £1·45 at an additional cost of £137 million. The 25p is added automatically to the pension on the first pay day after the pensioner's 80th birthday. There are, therefore no additional administration costs involved.

Maxwell Pensions Unit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to increase the level of funds available to the Maxwell pensions unit;

(2) how many applications for assistance have been received by the Maxwell pensions unit at the DSS; how many pensioners have received assistance from the unit to date; and how many have been refused;

(3) how much of the £2·5 million allocated to the Maxwell pensions unit remains undistributed; and what estimate can be made of the funds required to meet the pensions of existing pensioners and deferred pensioners in future.

Miss Widdecombe: Just over £1 million has been allocated by the Department's Maxwell pensions unit in grants to the eight Maxwell-linked pension schemes who have applied for assistance. These grants have enabled pensions to be paid to some 5,500 pensioners, deferred pensioners and ill health early retirers whose payments were at risk. Grants are made to pension scheme trustees and not to individual pensioners. It is not possible to project accurately future funding requirements as these are dependent on continuing work to rebuild pension schemes. We have no plans to increase the £1·5 million which remains in the emergency fund, and we are keeping the question of its further use under review.

Residential Homes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will estimate the number and proportion of residents in residential homes who are denied pocket money for personal needs because it is subsumed in the cost of the weekly fees charged; and what plans he has to discuss these matters with the representatives of local authorities and bodies representing private owners of residential homes;

(2) if he will review the circumstances in which residents of homes are provided with pocket money for personal needs to ensure disposable income is available to them; and what plans he has to make future provision for pocket money for residents in homes;

(3) if he will set up a departmental inquiry into the extent to which residents of rest homes and nursing homes are being deprived of pocket money to meet basic care costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Personal allowances are intended to be used by residents for their needs as they see best. Some residents contract for charges higher than the income support limits and may use the personal expenses allowance to meet the shortfall. The numbers using their allowance in this way is not known.

Such matters are regularly discussed with representative bodies and we have no plans to set up an inquiry.

From April 1993, all residents placed in residential care or nursing homes by local authorities will retain an amount for personal expenses.

Maintenance Payments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will consider waiving voluntary maintenance payments paid by parents who exercise long periods of access to but do not have custody of their children, while they are looking after the children for whom the maintenance payments are made.

Mr. Burt: A voluntary payment negotiated by the Department with the absent parent can be re-negotiated if the absent parent's circumstances change. If the absent parent feels that the amount of voluntary payment is too high because he has contact with the children for significant periods of time, he can tell the child support unit and it will consider this in negotiating a payment level with him.

The new child support system which comes into effect on 5 April 1993 has a clear rule to provide for cases of shared care. The maintenance payable will be reduced pro rata if the absent parent satisfies the condition that the child lives with him for a total of at least 104 nights a year.

Smoking

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the amount paid in national insurance and means-tested benefits to those rendered chronically sick, temporarily off work or long-term unemployed as a result of illness induced by smoking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available.

Income Support

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review the financial position of parents on income support who have long periods of access to their children as laid down in custodial orders, but who are unable to secure any support from the parent with custody during periods of access.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to review the current entitlement conditions in these circumstances. After three weeks, child benefit can be transferred from the parent who normally has custody of the child to the other parent and income support is payable as appropriate.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce an extra cost allowance for blind or partially sighted people.

Mr. Scott: Disability living allowance, introduced this April, provides help with the extra costs of disability. The benefit is awarded on the basis of the level of help needed, rather than the medical condition giving rise to that need. The new lower rates in particular provide benefit that was not available previously under mobility allowance or attendance allowance. We expect people with impaired sight to be amongst the chief beneficiaries of the new rates.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to change the criteria for eligibility for disability living allowance and disability working allowance to give blind and partially sighted people access to the higher rates of the new benefits.

Mr. Scott: Blind and partially sighted people who have care or mobility needs have equal access to disability living allowance as other disabled people, based on the level of help they need. Disability working allowance is paid according to the person's resources rather than at a set rate. We have no plans to change the eligibility criteria for either benefit.

Standing Charges

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the current cost of abolition of all standing charges for telephones, domestic electricity and gas bills for people over the state pension age for retirement and eligible for income support; and how the estimate was arrived at.

Mr. Burt: It is estimated that the total cost of abolishing gas and electricity standing charges for households where at least one person is over 60 and on income support, at 1992 levels of prices and incomes, would be approximately £150 million. The total cost of abolishing telephone rental charges for these households would be about £110 million at 1991-92 levels of prices.

Notes:

1. The information provided is based upon imprecise data and a series of assumptions about the level of standing charges and the numbers of households with gas, electricity and telephones.
2. The estimate also takes no account of behaviourial and disincentive effects.

Blind People (Benefits)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to improve levels of means-tested benefits available to blind or partially sighted people.

Mr. Burt: The income-related benefits currently have a number of features which raise the levels available to blind people. Registered blind people automatically qualify for the disability premium or higher pensioner premium in income support, housing benefit or community charge benefit on the basis of their blindness alone. A blind person who has the disability premium is able to earn up to £15 a week before their benefit is affected. In addition, where a blind person or their partner is responsible for rent or other housing costs no deductions are made in respect of any non-dependents living with them, as would otherwise be the case. These special rules do not apply to partially sighted people. They can, however, benefit from the help available to disabled people generally if they meet the standard conditions. We have no plans to change this policy.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will now conduct a survey to investigate whether new benefits replacing attendance allowance and invalidity allowance for blind people are succeeding in meeting the mobility needs of blind or partially sighted people of all ages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We continue to monitor carefully awards of disability living allowance-attendance allowance for people over 65 following the introduction of the new benefits in April.

Unemployment Benefit (Disqualification)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will review the maximum duration of unemployment benefit disqualification.

Mr. Burt: While the duration of unemployment benefit disqualification is kept under review, we have no plans to change the current maximum period of 26 weeks.

Income Support

Mrs. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the numbers of people dependent on supplementary benefit/income support in each region of the United Kingdom; and what proportion of each region's population they made up in 1979, 1987, 1988 and the latest available period.

Mr. Burt: The latest available information for England, Scotland and Wales is in the table.

Number of supplementary benefit/income support claimants partners and dependants as a percentage of the population

	Number of claimants	Number of partners	Number of dependants	Percentage of population receiving supplementary benefit
1979
England	2,396,000	472,000	784,000	8

2. Percentage cannot be derived because population figures have not yet been published by the Office of Population and Census Survey.
3. All figures rounded to the nearest thousand.
4. Population statistics for DSS regions are not available. Social Security information based on other definitions of United Kingdom regions also not available. The tables therefore focus on England, Scotland and Wales.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish a table showing by county the levels of unemployment in April and on 15 October.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

The latest available claimant unemployment data, released on 15 October, relate to the unemployment count date of 10 September.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list by parliamentary constituency the number of people in employment, both as a total number and as a percentage of those registered as available for work broken down by gender and whether employment is part time or full time.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest available information about employment in parliamentary constituencies is from the September 1989 census of employment and relates to employees in employment only, by gender and whether part or full time. Figures for the claimant unemployed by gender are available for the same date. This information can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women were unemployed on 10 April; and what is the current figure.

Mr. McLoughlin: The April 1992 claimant unemployment figure relates to the position on the 9th of the month. On that date, on the consistent seasonally adjusted basis, there were 2,065,900 male and 629,400 female unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom. This compares with 2,175,200 and 668,100 respectively in September 1992.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the changes made since 1979 in calculating the number of people officially unemployed, including the date and estimated effect of each change.

Mr. McLoughlin: In October 1982, when registration at jobcentres became voluntary and could therefore no longer provide a meaningful measure of unemployment, the monthly unemployment statistics changed from a count of jobcentre registrants to a count of claimants at Employment Service local offices. Both counts, in common with all statistics based on administrative systems, have inevitably been subject to changes in coverage whenever there have been changes to the administrative procedures on which they are based. However, these changes have been taken into account in the consistent, seasonally adjusted series published by the Employment Department.

A list of the changes since 1979 affecting the coverage of both the former registrant series and the claimant count, together with an estimate of the numerical effect was published in an article in the December 1990 issue of Employment Gazette. A copy of this article is in the Library.

Multiple Unemployment

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information she has on the number of families who experience multiple unemployment.

Mr. McLoughlin: The labour force survey shows that, in spring 1992, the estimated number of families in Great Britain in which two or more people were unemployed (on the ILO definition) was 210,000. This represented 1·4 per cent. of all families in which there were at least two people aged 16 or over.

Wages

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give the average hourly wage of male manual workers adjusted for inflation, for (a) 1974, (b) 1979, (c) 1983, (d) 1987 and (e) 1990 and 1991, respectively.

Mr. McLoughlin: The average gross hourly earnings of full-time male manual workers, for each year requested, can be found in table 1 of part A of the "New Earnings Survey" report for that year. The data necessary to adjust these figures for inflation—that is retail prices index, all items—can be found in table 6.4 of the Employment Gazette for April 1992 and in table 26 of the annual supplement to Economic Trends for April of earlier years. Copies of all these publications are available in the Library.

Unemployment (Counselling)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed received counselling through arrangements provided or paid for by her Department in the most recent 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A. G. Johnson to Mr. Frank Dobson, dated 26 October 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer Parliamentary Questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Employment about counselling for Unemployed people.

Through our network of local offices we now provide a structured and coherent information and advisory service which intensifies as the duration of unemployment increases. We try to ensure that all unemployed people know about, and get access to, the employment and training opportunities that are available. This process begins with an interview with one of our client advisers when a person first becomes unemployed. A review takes place at thirteen weeks for those who have not found work. If people remain unemployed, interviews are provided at six months and regular intervals thereafter under the Restart programme. In addition clients can arrange to see an adviser at any time to discuss ways of getting back to work.

In the twelve month period ending 25 September 1992, our advisers conducted 8,170,691 counselling interviews. Of these 4,481,298 were with people making new claims to benefit, 646,540 were with people who had not found jobs after thirteen weeks out of work and 2,192,760 were under the Restart programme. The remaining 850,903 interviews were to follow up clients who were judged to need further advice to help them get back into work and with people who asked to discuss their employment prospects with an adviser.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Job Interview Committees

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people placed in work through the job interview committee scheme are no longer in work.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A. G. Johnson to Mr. Frank Dobson, dated 26 October 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mr. Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer Parliamentary Question about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Employment about the Job Interview Guarantee (JIG) initiative.

You asked how many people placed in work through the job interview committee scheme are no longer in work. I assume the scheme that you are referring to is the Job Interview Guarantee (JIG) initiative.

We do not collect statistics to provide the information that you ask for. To do so would require expensive tracking mechanisms as a disproportionate cost. However, we did undertake a small scale survey of JIG participants towards the end of 1991. This showed that 64 per cent. of people placed in permanent employment were still in work at the time of the survey. The majority of these would have been in employment for at least 6 months.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mining Areas

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many extra staff are to be taken on by the Employment Service in mining areas (a) before Christmas 1992 and (b) before 31 March 1993.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A. G. Johnson to Mr. Frank Dobson, dated 26 October 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer parliamentary questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Employment about how many extra staff are to be taken on by the Employment Service in mining areas.

The Employment Service will of course play its part in assisting to alleviate the problems of the newly unemployed in the mining districts by offering a full range of services. These include help in finding new employment, counselling, guiding people to training courses, and ensuring that all due benefits are paid promptly and correctly.

However until such time as more positive information is available on where and when all the redundancies will fall I am unable to say how many extra staff will be deployed in the mining areas. I can nevertheless assure you that our regional Directors will make sufficient staff available to meet the immediate needs of the newly redundant miners.

As decided by the Administrative Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether the additional sum promised to training and enterprise councils in mining areas comes from the overall training and enterprise councils budget;

(2) what is the total additional sum promised to training and enterprise councils in areas affected by the recently announced pit closures.

Mr. McLoughlin: An additional £75 million has been made available in areas affected by potential colliery closures. The TECs concerned have been asked to co-ordinate action plans for new measures to alleviate the effects of closures. The net effect on TEC expenditure of this extra provision will depend on what is proposed in the action plans.

London Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response she has made to the report prepared by Coopers and Lybrand for the London TECs on the degree of their underfunding.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has considered the case put forward in the report "London—a Capital Deficiency". Her conclusion is that this report is flawed in a number of important respects and fails to understand the basis of budget allocation for the TECs.

Specifically, the report gives a figure of £43·3 million as the 1992-93 youth training budget whereas the budget is in fact £61·3 million. London has 8·4 per cent. of the YT budget for England and Wales, not the 5·7 per cent. which the report puts forward.

Similarly, London has 14·4 per cent. of the total employment training budget, not the 13·3 per cent. claimed by the report.

Nonetheless, my right hon. Friend has asked her officials to meet TEC representatives to discuss how best they can tackle some of the labour market issues raised in this report.

Trades Union Congress

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State or Employment if she will list the occasions she has met representatives of the TUC, through British and European institutions, respectively.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met the general secretary and deputy general secretary of the Trades Union Congress (TUC) on 9 June 1992.

As President of the Council of Social Affairs Ministers, she met representatives from the European Trades Union Confederation (ETUC) on 27 July 1992 to discuss the United Kingdom presidency of the European Community. The president and general secretary of the ETUC were also present at the opening session of the informal meeting of the EC Employment and Social Affairs Ministers on 12 October 1992.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and I also met representatives of the ETUC on 15 September to discuss priorities for the United Kingdom presidency.

I also met the General Secretary of the TUC at the International Labour Organisation Conference in June 1992, and I have also had meetings with individual trade union leaders over recent months.

Union Subscriptions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment is she will list the cases known to her Department of employers who deducted union subscriptions from the wages of their employees without their prior consent.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not keep records on this matter. However, as the Green Paper "Industrial Relations in the 1990s" (Cm 1602) pointed out, at present the payment of union subscriptions through the check-off may become part of an employee's contract of employment simply by virtue of an agreement made between the union and the employer; and there have been allegations that some employees who are not union members have nonetheless had union subscriptions deducted from their pay by check-off.

My right hon. and learned Friend the previous Secretary of State announced in January of this year that legislation would be introduced to ensure that the deduction of union subscriptions from an employee's pay would be unlawful without the written authority of the employee.

Public Holidays

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the public holidays in each country in the European Community including the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no standard definition of a public holiday for European Community countries. The table following gives United Kingdom bank holidays for 1992.

Bank holidays in the United Kingdom 1992

	Date
New Year's Day	1 January
Bank Holiday (Scotland)	2 January
St. Patrick's Day (Northern Ireland)	17 March
Good Friday	17 April
Easter Monday (except Scotland)	20 April
May Day Bank Holiday	4 May
Spring Bank Holiday	25 May
Battle of the Boyne (Northern Ireland)	13 July
Summer Bank Holiday (Scotland)	3 August
Summer Bank Holiday (except Scotland)	31 August
Christmas Day	25 December
Boxing Day	26 December
Bank Holiday	28 December

Labour Statistics

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the current number of job vacancies in the travel-to-work areas which include the coal mines which British Coal has announced will close; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Pursuant to my answer of 20 October 1992, columns 280-81, the chief executive of the Employment Service has written further to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Max Madden, dated 26 October 1992.

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the number of current job vacancies within the travel to work areas for the coal mines which British Coal has announced will close. This is something which falls within the responsibilities she has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Unfortunately, my reply of 20 October contained an error in the table. The Cotgrave and Claverton collieries in the Nottingham travel to work area should have read 1,174 unfilled vacancies on 2nd October. The following reply now contains the correct information.

I attach a table showing the number of vacancies unfilled at Jobcentres on 2nd October 1992, the last statistical count date, for each of the relevant travel to work areas. All of the travel to work areas are included as requested although following the statement by the President of the Board of Trade on 19th October only 8 of these areas have a colliery now designated for closure after the statutory consultation period has been completed.

It is not possible to provide information on the total number of job vacancies available in the labour market but it is estimated that about one third of all vacancies are notified to Jobcentres.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Livestock Auctioneers

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the implication of the administrative and financial practice of livestock auctioneers to hold in trust any moneys from livestock sales for the farmers whose animals had been sold in markets, and the effect of the insolvency of livestock auctioneers upon this practice.

Mr. Curry: No.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to compensate farmers whose money for livestock sales at market had been taken in trust by livestock auctioneers facing insolvency and invested in bank accounts which were overdrawn prior to the completion of the transaction at auction.

Mr. Curry: No.

Potatoes

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps in the EC to ensure that the new potato régime will not adversely affect current area controls and direct intervention systems utilised in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: There is as yet no Commission proposal for a potato régime. We wish to see what the Commission proposes before taking any decisions about the future of the potato marketing scheme in Great Britain. The Government's objective under any régime will be to ensure that our growers can supply what the market needs and operate on equal terms with growers elsewhere, and in particular that the processing sector should be able to find adequate sources of potatoes in Britain.

Rabies

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the holding period powers of local authorities in relation to dogs and the minimum incubation period of rabies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Under the Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and other Mammals) Order 1974 local authorities are given the power to seize dogs where there is reason to suspect that the dog may have been landed in contravention of the order. Animals seized may be immediately exported or detained in quarantine for six months. However, if exportation is chosen and there has been a biting or scratching incident the local authority must detain the animal for 15 days observation: an animal may become infective shortly before the disease manifests itself clinically, and it is important to establish whether there is any possibility that the rabies virus may have been introduced into Great Britain.

Inspection Services

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department will carry out a study of the cost and staffing implications of the timing of his proposals for red and poultry meat inspection services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: In March this year the Government announced their intention to transfer the responsibility for meat hygiene inspection and enforcement from local authorities to a new national meat hygiene service, following a detailed independent study which looked at the financial, management, staffing and other aspects of various options. The Government will work closely with the local authorities to ensure that the new arrangements, which will be dependent on the availability of parliamentary time for the necessary primary legislation, are introduced as smoothly and cost-effectively as possible.

Agricultural Employment

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has of the number of people working in industries allied to agriculture for the most recent five-year period for which figures are available.

Mr. Curry: I regret that the information requested is not available. Details of the number of persons employed in each primary industrial group are published monthly in the Employment Gazette.

Set-aside

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has of the number of on-farm jobs that will be lost from agriculture as a result of the introduction of the 15 per cent. EC set-aside scheme.

Mr. Curry: The impact on farm labour of the new set-aside arrangements will depend on a range of factors, including the extent to which set-aside land is used to produce crops for non-food purposes.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of jobs in industries allied to agriculture that will be lost as a result of the introduction of the 15 per cent. EC set-aside rule.

Mr. Curry: It is not possible at this stage to make any realistic assessment of the likely impact of the new set-aside arrangements on industries allied to agriculture. However, we shall keep the position under careful review.

Farm Support

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the representatives of companies and businesses allied to agriculture about the prospects for those businesses following reduction in farm support via the CAP; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Department is in regular contact with the representatives of companies and businesses allied to agriculture to discuss issues of interest to the industry including CAP reform.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for the last three years for which figures are available the total amount of subsidy paid by EC or United Kingdom budgets for each category of livestock and arable crop eligible for subsidy within the United Kingdom, showing the actual amount in cash paid to producers in each case.

Mr. Curry: Table 9·1 of "Agriculture in the United Kingdom: 1991", a copy of which is available in the Library, gives details of public expenditure under the CAP and on national grants and subsidies. The main livestock and arable aid payments are in section I and IV of the table. A breakdown of payments between producers and other recipients is not available.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the total cost of the administration, monitoring and enforcement costs of the United Kingdom and EC departments responsible for paying farm subsidies over the last three years, showing each figure as a percentage of the total subsidies and a percentage of the subsidies actually received by producers.

Mr. Curry: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Energy-producing Crops

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to provide schemes to grow crops that can produce energy.

Mr. Curry: Under the new EC arable area payments scheme which comes into operation this year, growers will be able to claim area or set-aside payments on land used to produce eligible crops for a range of non-food uses, including biofuels and crops for direct combustion.

Short rotation coppice is eligible for establishment grants under the woodland grant scheme, which is operated by the forestry authority. Grants are also available under the farm and conservation grant scheme to help farmers meet the cost of straw and coppiced wood burning boilers and furnaces for their farms.

Animal Exports

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates have been made of the financial cost to the livestock producing industry of reducing the maximum permitted transport time to eight hours.

Mr. Soames: I am not aware of any such estimates. British legislation requires livestock in transport to be offered food and water at intervals not exceeding 15 hours. These arrangements have served us well. In EC discussions we shall be seeking to persuade the Community to adopt rules which reflect our own high standards.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he is having with the groups involved in the consequences of transportation of live animals.

Mr. Soames: We have regular discussions with a wide range of interested bodies about the transportation of live animals.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what steps he is taking to ensure adequate inspection, lairage and rest for animals in transit;

(2) if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's position on the transportation of live animals within the EC, indicating where the United Kingdom Government's position is different from the current EC directive.

Mr. Soames: The Export of Animals (Protection) Order 1981 provides for inspection and rest, at an approved portal lairage, for food animals exported from Britain. This order also implements the current EC directive on the protection of animals during international transport. These arrangements are due to be superseded by a new directive which needs to be supplemented by additional rules on which Commission proposals are awaited.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the number of live animals exported from the United Kingdom to the EC over the last five years for each type of livestock transported.

Mr. Soames: The number of live animals that have been exported from the United Kingdom to other member states of the EC over the last five years can be found in the annual volumes of the "Overseas Trade Statistics for the United Kingdom", copies of which are in the House of Commons Library. Details of their classification within SITC 00 can be found in the "Guide to the Classification for Overseas Trade Statistics", which is also in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will estimate how long it would take to make the necessary changes to allow all livestock for slaughter to be slaughtered within the United Kingdom to prevent any animals being exported for slaughter from the United Kingdom to fellow EC countries;

(2) what steps he is taking to increase the proportion of animals slaughtered within the United Kingdom prior to export as opposed to being transported live to other EC countries for slaughter.

Mr. Soames: It would not be possible, under the treaty of Rome, to impose a general prohibition on the export of livestock.

The capacity of the United Kingdom slaughtering industry is a matter for commercial judgment.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department takes to ensure that health, hygiene and veterinary standards are being maintained on an equal basis throughout the EC.

Mr. Soames: It is already standard practice for EC animal health and welfare legislation to provide for on-the-spot inspections by Commission veterinary experts to ensure the uniform application of Community rules. The United Kingdom Government welcome the continued development of the Commission inspection role to promote this objective.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the number of live animals exported from Scotland to the EC over the last five years for each type of livestock.

Mr. Soames: There are no official statistics dealing with purely Scottish trade of live animals. The overseas trade statistics from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are available only on a United Kingdom basis.

DEFENCE

Air Crash, Chivenor

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement in respect of the incident to an RAF Hawk jet trainer which crashed at RAF Chivenor in September; and if he will send to the hon. Member a copy of his Department's military aircraft accident summary relating to this incident when it is published.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The accident in question took place on 30 September. The Hawk aircraft, carrying two qualified pilots, crashed on the runway at RAF Chivenor while the aircrew were conducting a simulated engine failure after take-off. Tragically, one of the pilots was injured and later died in hospital. The other ejected safely. An RAF board of inquiry has been convened. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will forward a copy of the military aircraft accident summary to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

Z-Berths

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost to his Department for the upkeep of Z-berths for emergency use by nuclear powered submarines at United Kingdom ports.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Z-berths may be established within particular ports, at mooring buoys or anchorages which have been assessed as suitable for short operations or recreational visits by nuclear powered submarines. The berths in question are not exclusively for the use of nuclear powered submarines. The cost of their maintenance as z-berths relates mainly to periodic surveys and liaison with the relevant local authorities to ensure the continuing suitability of the berths; cost figures are not held centrally.

European Union

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what contribution his Department made to the declaration on Western European Union included in the annexes on the treaty of European Union (Cm. 1934);

(2) what contribution his Department made to the drafting of the title V, articles JI to JII of the treaty of European Union, (Cm. 1934).

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department was fully consulted in the preparation of both.

Low Flying

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent complaints his Department has received from British Nuclear Fuels plc over breaches of the low-flying exclusion zones around their nuclear plants.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since January 1991 my Department has received four such complaints, one of which was subsequently withdrawn.

WE177 Warheads

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the expected timetable for dismantling of WE177 warheads now declared to be surplus to requirements.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The weapons in question will be dismantled as quickly as possible, consistent with the demands of security and safety.

Vulcan XH558

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have been the most recent annual running costs to his Department of the RAF Vulcan XH558; on how many occasions it has been flown on public display in the last full year; what estimate he has made of the cost of servicing the aircraft to enable it to continue flying; if he has any plans to facilitate the transfer of the RAF Vulcan XH558 aircraft to a public collection; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the state of sale of the Vulcan XH558.

Mr. Aitken: Annual running costs for Vulcan XH558 will amount to some £250,000 in financial year 1992-93. The servicing and modification required for the aircraft to continue for a further display season after 1992 would cost at least £2·5 million. The Vulcan performed 30 displays and five flypasts during the 1992 display season. A number of expressions of interest have been received from potential buyers with a view to preserving the aircraft for the future, and I hope that these might result in the aircraft being transferred to a public collection.

Recruitment

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the costs of recruitment in each of the armed forces in each of the last five years; how savings have been made in the costs of recruitment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Armed Forces (Reviews)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the reviews of various aspects of the role of the armed forces which are (a) being reviewed and (b) have had their reviews completed in the last three years giving the dates by which they are more likely to be completed in each case.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Our plans for a major restructuring of the armed forces were set out in detail in both the 1991 Statement on the Defence Estimates, "Britain's Defence for the 90s" (Cm. 1559-I) and "Britain's Army for the 90s" (Cm. 1595). These were updated in the 1992 Statement (Cm. 1981). We will continue to keep these plans under constant review.

Agricultural Produce

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the agricultural produce which is grown on land owned or leased by his department giving the amounts produced in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Records are not maintained of the agricultural produce grown on land owned or leased by my Department.

Munitions (Disposal)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement about the alternative methods and locations that he will introduce for the disposal of munitions;

(2) if he will list the regulations that control the dumping of munitions (a) on land and (b) in the sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence does not deposit redundant munitions, explosive waste or residues in land. Land based disposal methods such as detonation and open burning are conducted in accordance with departmental regulations which reflect the requirement of both the Explosives Act 1875 and the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974. The provisions of the London dumping convention apply to the dumping of waste at sea world wide and those of the Oslo convention regulate this activity in the north east Atlantic. The Ministry of defence has undertaken its sea dumping programmes in a manner consistent with the requirements of both these conventions but has no further plans to dispose of redundant munitions or explosives in this way. In the future, such material will be disposed of on land at suitable MOD sites where this is safe and environmentally acceptable and under contract by industry. The Ministry of Defence plans, also, to construct a purpose-built ammunition disposal facility.

Surplus Land and Buildings

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the procedure adopted by his Ministry for the sale of surplus land and buildings including the method of binding potential purchasers, and any targets that might be set as an annual basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The MOD's general policy is to sell surplus land and buildings for the highest return for the taxpayer and the usual procedure is to sell by competitive tender. Agents are engaged to place advertisements seeking tenders and purchasers are normally expected to provide a non-returnable 10 per cent. deposit when a sale is agreed.

Special provisions apply however to the sale of housing, namely, the discounted sale of surplus married quarters and civilian houses to service personnel and sitting tenants respectively and also the bulk sale of surplus married quarters to housing associations at a discount in return for nomination rights for service personnel leaving the services over the next few years.

No formal targets are set for disposals though assumptions have, of course, to be made for the purpose of the public expenditure survey, and the long-term costings process.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give (a) the amount of money realised to his Ministry from the sale of surplus land and (b) the valuation of that land in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In each of the last five financial years the following receipts have been realised from the sale of surplus land and buildings:

Year	£ million
1987-88	76·6
1988-89	15·0
1989-90	71·2
1990-91	80·6
1991-92	102·3

The amount of money realised represents the market value of the property sold, with the exception that some service married quarters and civilian houses have been sold at a discount in line with departmental policy.

Privatisation and Agencies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the parts of his Ministry that have been (a) made into executive agencies, (b) privatised, giving the dates in each case, and (c) the parts of his Ministry he intends to privatise or make into executive agencies, giving the estimated dates in each case.

Mr. Aitken: Four executive agencies have been established:

Meteorological Office—1 April 1990
Defence Research Agency—1 April 1991
Duke of York's Royal Military School—1 April 1992
Queen Victoria School—1 April 1992

We have also created 10 defence support agencies:

Hydrographic Office—1 April 1990
Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment—1 April 1991
Defence Accounts—1 April 1991
RAF Maintenance Group—1 April 1991
Military Survey—1 April 1991
Service Children's Schools (North West Europe)—1 April 1991
Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation—1 April 1992
Defence Analytical Services Agency—1 July 1992
Defence Postal and Courier Service—1 July 1992
Defence Operational Analysis Centre—1 July 1992

Both executive agencies and defence support agencies are run wholly on next steps lines.

The only parts of the Ministry which have been privatised are the Royal Ordnance factories on 2 January 1985.

There are no other parts of the Ministry which it is currently intended to privatise, although industry is being invited to express interest in purchasing the Royal Navy dockyards at Rosyth and Devonport.

Current candidates for agency status within MOD include the Ministry of Defence police, central services, the test and evaluation organisation, human factors research, some communications systems and elements of the logistic support and training organisations of the services. Looking ahead, we aim to identify all potential agency candidates by the end of next year. Areas under study include the balance of service logistics and training functions and the wider defence support area.

D Notices

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his review of the D notice system including the scope of his review, the period of time it will take and the organisations that will be consulted.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The management of the D notice system is the responsibility of the defence press and broadcasting committee. I understand that the committee, which is composed of representatives of Government Departments and of the press and broadcasting media, decided at a recent meeting to enlarge its annual review of the 'D' notices. It will consider the purpose, scope and operation of the system in the light of the changed international scene and of the Government's commitment to greater openness. The committee intends to complete this work by the spring of 1993 and is inviting those who wish to do so to contribute to its secretary by the end of the year.

Army Board of Inquiry

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the rules covering the Army Board of Inquiry's reports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Service boards of inquiry are internal inquiries held in private, to establish the facts of the matter under investigation and where appropriate to make recommendations to avoid a recurrence. The rules governing Army boards of inquiry and their reports are set out in the Board of Inquiry (Army) Rules 1956 (SI 630/1956). Related administrative instructions are included in annex A to chapter 5 of the Queen's Regulations for the Army. Both publications are available in the Library of the House.

The distribution of the reports of service boards of inquiry is normally limited to those service or Ministry authorities whose function and responsibilities require them to see the findings of the inquiry. My Department has discretion to release to others on an exceptional basis.

Helicopters

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the number of (a) EH101, (b) Lynx, (c) Sea King and (d) NH90 helicopters that have been ordered since 9 April 1987, giving the date the order was placed and the delivery or expected delivery date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Fourty-four EH101 anti-submarine warfare helicopters were ordered in 1991 for delivery phased over 1996-2001. Sixteen Lynx helicopters were ordered in 1988 and were delivered between 1990 and 1992. Seven Sea King helicopters were ordered in 1987 and delivered between 1989 and 1990. Negotiations for the procurement of six Sea King helicopters announced by my predecessor on 19 February this year (Official Report, column 332) are almost complete. No NH90 helicopters have been ordered. The former Secretary of State for Defence explained on 9 April 1987 (Official Report, col. 470) that we were no longer participating in the NH90 programme.

Search and Rescue

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his announcement about the future of the search and rescue forces on 21 October, what steps he is taking to ensure that the standards for rescue at sea as set by the United Kingdom search and rescue committee will not be breached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The future RAF search and rescue (SAR) helicopter force will make virtually the same contribution as now to meeting the helicopter coverage group criteria for SAR helicopter coverage around the United Kingdom for civil marine and aviation purposes. The rationale for and implications of the changes in the force are set out in the open Government document "The Future Provision of Royal Air Force Search and Rescue Helicopters", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the bases where he expects to deploy the six Sea King HAR 3 helicopters for the search and rescue service, which were ordered in 1991-92 with the in-service date of 1996; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the open government document "The Future Provision of Royal Air Force Search and Rescue Helicopters", a copy of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the organisations with whom he consulted about the review of the search and rescue service and the subsequent decisions announced by him on 21 October.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The organisations consulted were the Government Departments with a functional or regional interest in search and rescue matters: the Department of Transport and Home Office, the Welsh, Scottish, Northern Ireland and Foreign and Commonwealth Offices, and the Treasury.

European Fighter Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place a copy of the industrial study for the European fighter aircraft, commissioned by Eurofighter, in the Library.

Mr. Aitken: I regret that this is not possible. The report the hon. Member requests is a NATO classified document. I have however placed in the Library a copy of an unclassified synopsis produced by British Aerospace.

Dismounted Public Duties

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who were the members of the working party who advised him on the future of dismounted public duties in London.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Membership of the interdepartmental public duties working group was drawn from the Ministry of Defence, the Home Office, the Department of the Environment, the Royal Household, the Metropolitan police, the Ministry of Defence Police, the Historic Royal Palaces Agency and the Tower of London.

Household Cavalry

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes he proposes to mounted ceremonial duties by the Household Cavalry.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Energy Policy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's energy policy.

Mr. Eggar: It is the Government's energy policy to achieve, through promoting competition and developing competitive markets, secure energy supplies at the lowest possible prices, diversity of supply and in decision making; meeting the customers' needs with maximum efficiency; and maximising the economic exploitation of the United Kingdom's energy resources, while at the same time meeting the growing requirements of environmental policy.

EC Competition Commissioner

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he has had with the European Commissioner for competition on (a) energy pricing policy in the United Kingdom and (b) the United Kingdom semi-conductor manufacturing industry.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend has had no recent discussions with the European Commissioner for competition on either United Kingdom energy pricing policy or the United Kingdom semi-conductor manufacturing industry.

Mining Industry

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what circumstances Her Majesty's Government have the right to pay subsidies to British Coal without first seeking the approval of the European Commission.

Mr. Eggar: Under decision 2064/86/ECSC, all state aids by member states to their coal industries must be approved by the European Commission.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice has been given by the European Commission on its policy relating to future requests from the member states of the EC on subsidies to coal mining; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The agreed policy under which the Commission may give authorisation for state aids to member states' coal industries is set out in current decision —2064/86/ECSC. This decision stipulates that such aid must help to achieve one or more of the following objectives:

Improvement of competitivity of the coal industry, which contributes to assure a better security of supply.

Creating new capacities provided that they are economically viable.

Solving the social and regional problems related to developments in the coal industry.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what public expenditure will be involved in the measures required to safely seal and to protect against future aquifer contamination the 31 coal mines the closure of which has been recently announced.

Mr. Eggar: The total level of expenditure involved will depend on the decisions eventually taken on the future of these pits. The expenditure at any particular pit that is closed depends on the geological circumstances.

Fuel Cells

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will institute a study of legislation in the state of California relating to zero pollution emissions, and the use of fuel cells in hydrogen.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has already undertaken a number of studies on fuel cells and I refer the hon. Member to my answers to his other questions on 13 July at column 508. On the matter of Californian state emissions regulations, these are well documented in technical publications and are available to the public.

Property Misdescriptions

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress which has been made in implementing the Specified Offences Order under the terms of the Property Misdescriptions Act 1991.

Mr. Leigh: My Department circulated a draft Specified Offences (No. 2) (Amendment) Order, to be made under the Estate Agents Act 1979, for consultation last December. We intend that implementation should coincide with that of the proposed Property Misdescriptions (Specified Matters) Order, which my hon. and noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms intends to lay before Parliament as soon as possible.

Electricity

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what action is currently being taken by the European Commission in order to ensure a free and fair market in electricity throughout the European Community;

(2) what action he is taking to ensure that other European Community electricity generating companies do not benefit from state subsidies or cross subsidies.

Mr. Eggar: The European Commission has brought forward proposals designed to open up markets in electricity and natural gas throughout the Community. Discussion on the proposals is continuing. They provide for greater transparency in the operation of EC electricity utilities and should eliminate any state subsidies or cross subsidies from which such utilities or their customers may currently benefit.

Parcelforce

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress he has made since his statement to the House on the future of Parcelforce.

Mr. Heseltine: Since my announcement to the House on 15 July 1992, my Department has been working with the Post Office and our advisers to consider a range of issues, including the timing and method of sale. I have received several expressions of interest in Parcelforce and look forward to its transfer to that private sector as soon as possible.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish the outcome of his review of the assisted areas map; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The public consultation paper on the assisted areas map review issued in June stated that the Government's aim was to implement a revised map early in 1993, following the necessary clearance with the European Commission. This remains our intention.

Uranium Mining, Namibia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has received on the findings of the special safety monitoring commission sent to inspect the Rio Tinto Zinc Rossing uranium mine in Namibia in September to evaluate the health effects of mining uranium exported to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The Government of Namibia has made a report in the form of a press report on this International Atomic Energy Agency mission. A copy of the press release has been placed in the Library of the House.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will publish the sixth annual plutonium production and storage figures.

Mr. Eggar: The annual plutonium figures are being compiled and the information will be published shortly.

Commonwealth of Independent States

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his recent visit to the Commonwealth of Independent States.

Mr. Heseltine: I visited Azerbaijan and Russia from 27 to 30 September, leading a team of 13 senior business men. In Azerbaijan I had high-level meetings with President Elchibey and his Government, supported BP's recent success in securing exclusive negotiating rights for the exploration and development of two potentially very large oilfields under the South Caspian sea, signed a joint declaration on economic co-operation and helped to pave the way for other companies to win further business.

In Russia, I met Vice-President Rutskoi, acting Prime Minister Gaidar and a number of other Ministers, particularly deputy Prime Minister Shokhin with whom I held the first meeting of a new steering committee on trade and investment. I signed the terms of reference of this committee and a joint declaration on economic co-operation. I discussed the question of appropriate guarantees and priorities for the Export Credit Guarantees Department cover which the Prime Minister recently announced that we would be making available to Russia.

Nuclear energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the annual United Kingdom contribution since 1979 to (a) the International Atomic Energy Agency, (b) the nuclear energy agency of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, (c) the European Atomic Energy Community and (d) the joint research centres of the European Community's nuclear research programme, respectively; and if he will make a statement on the benefits that have accrued from these respective contributions.

Mr. Eggar: Details of the United Kingdom's contributions to the International Atomic Energy Agency and the nuclear energy agency of the OECD are published annually in the supply estimates, currently at class V, vote 2, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. For contributions prior to 1987-88 reference should be made to written answer of 16 May 1988 at column 300.

The Community budget is published annually in the Official Journal of the European Communities, also held in the Library of the House. The United Kingdom's contributions to the European Atomic Energy Community and to the nuclear programmes of the joint research centres of the European Communities form part of the single United Kingdom contribution to the European community's budget made under article 207 of the treaty of Rome. National contributions to individual programmes are not identified separately.

These contributions have been obligatory since the United Kingdom's accession to the respective organisations. Over the years there have been many benefits from them, not least the worldwide effort in the field of non-proliferation and nuclear safeguards, and work on radiation protection and public health.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the annual United Kingdom contribution to the European fusion nuclear energy research programme since its inception; and what contribution Her Majesty's Government intend to make to future fusion programmes including (a) the Joint European TORUS and (b) the next European TORUS.

Mr. Eggar: 80 per cent. of funding for the joint European TORUS—JET—project is provided by the European Atomic Energy Community—Euratom—through the Community budget. Member states contribute to the Community budget as a whole, not individual elements. The United Kingdom's gross contribution before abatement is around 16 per cent. of the total. Information on the Community's annual expenditure on fusion research, including its contribution to JET, is contained in chapter B6-55 of the "General Budget of the European Communities', published in the Official Journal of the European Communities—OJ L 26 of 3-2-92—a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

A further 10 per cent. of the funding is shared out between the members of the JET joint undertaking, including the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, whose share of this component is around 1 per cent. of the total. In addition, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority meets the remaining 10 per cent. of the funding, in recognition of the United Kingdom's status as host nation.

In 1991-92 the United Kingdom's total contribution in respect of these two elements was around £8 million.

The United Kingdom contributes directly to the Euratom fusion programme via the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's "Contract of Association" with Euratom. This amalgamates the fusion R and D programme undertaken at Culham laboratory with the wider programme undertaken by Euratom fusion research laboratories as a whole. The annual cost of this work is also around £8 million.

Decisions on future funding of the Community's fusion programme, and hence on the funding of JET and the next European TORUS, are a matter for the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Llewellyn Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table of annual investment made in each year since 1979 by his Department and the Department of Energy in (a) nuclear reactor research, (b) nuclear waste research, (c) nuclear decommissioning research, (d) nuclear fuel research, (e) radiation protection research, (f) gas gathering and distribution research, (g) gas fired power plant research, (h) clean coal burn research, (i) renewable energy research and (j) energy efficiency and conservation research.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is given in the table, to the extent that it is readily available within the DTI. Prior to 1986, nuclear programmes were funded by a block grant to the Atomic Energy Authority, which was responsible for their detailed content; a breakdown along the lines requested is thus not available in the Department. Energy efficiency and conservation R and D is now a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Year	Nuclear Reactor Research	Nuclear Waste Research	Nuclear Decommissioning Research	Radiation Protection Research	Clean Coal Burn Research	Renewable Energy Research

1991-92	60·3	—	7·2	0·5	4·7	24·6

All figures are in £M in money terms.
Nuclear fuel research is not separately identified.
Nuclear Waste Management programme is subsumed within decommissioning research after 1990.
There was no expenditure on gas gathering and distribution research or on gas fired power plant research during the period.

1981-82 to 1988-89 non-nuclear figures are taken from the "Annual Review of Government-funded R & D", and relate essentially to Frascati R 2 D, without including technology transfer and dissemination expenditure.

Figures from 1989-90 to date are final outturn, and do include technology transfer and dissemination expenditure.

Trentham Colliery

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of all existing and proposed development plans at other collieries which it is intended will be classified under expenditure at Trentham colliery.

Mr. Eggar: The issues which the hon. Member raises are matters for British Coal.

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 221, if he will give details of the profits lost to the Trentham complex arising from the decision made by British Coal to cancel development work from September 1992; in respect of which coal faces orders have been given to stop production; and if he will give details of the subsequent profit loss in each case;

(2) pursuant to his statement of 19 October, if he will give details of all coal reserves left at Trentham colliery, north Staffordshire;

(3) pursuant to his statement of 19 October, what was British Coal's estimate of the anticipated tonnage for 1992-93 at the Trentham complex; and what is his estimate of the effect on this original target of the postponement of committed developments;

(4) pursuant to his statement of 19 October, if he will give details of the development costs of introducing future workings at Trentham colliery including the two major roadway drivages into new seams;

(5) pursuant to his statement of 19 October, if he will give details for 1990-91 and 1991-92 of capital investment at Trentham colliery designed to incorporate management administration costs incurred as a result of pit closures elsewhere;

(6) pursuant to his statement of 19 October, if he will give details of the profits earned by Trentham colliery for 1990-91 and the projected loss budgeted for the period 1 April to 20 September in the current year;

(7) what information he has on British Coal's plans for future developments to introduce pillar and stall work at Trentham colliery.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 22 October 1992]: In my statement on 19 October, I said that we had concluded that, for the time being, British Coal should be allowed to proceed with the closure of only 10 pits—including Trentham—which it had told me were currently making a loss and had no prospect of viability in the foreseeable future.

The issues which the hon. Member raises are matters for British Coal.

The hon. Member may wish to pursue this issue in the context of the statutory consultation procedure.

ITER Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the three engineering design teams, and their location, which have been agreed under the future ITER programme; and if he will list the number of staff, and the total project cost of the JET at Culham, projected for 1992-93, and established for the three preceding years.

Mr. Eggar: The plasma vessel work for ITER—international thermonuclear experimental reactor—will be undertaken by the engineering design team in Garching, in Germany. Other plant engineering work will be undertaken by the team in Naka, in Japan. The design integration team will be based in San Diego, USA.

JET—joint European torus—is a Community project. Information on its staffing and funding is available from the annual reports of the JET joint undertaking, which are held in the House of Commons Library.

Euratom

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made since 28 November 1991 in implementing European Community Directive 89/618/Euratom in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

Following public consultation by the Health and Safety Commission which ended on 28 February 1992, final proposals for regulations implementing European Community directive 89/618/Euratom were approved by the HSC on 7 July. These proposals were then communicated to the European Commission, as required by article 33 of the Euratom treaty. The European Commission recommendations on these proposals have now been received and arrangements are in hand for making the implementing regulations and laying them before Parliament.

Electricity Costs

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the average cost of electricity delivered to (a) industrial consumers, (b) service sector consumers and (c) domestic consumers in each of the member states of the European Community calculated in (i) ecus, (ii) pounds and (iii) currencies of each respective country.

Mr. Eggar: The average prices of electricity in 1991 to industrial consumers combined, in the member states of the European Community are set out in the tables. Prices of electricity to the domestic and commercial sectors are not available separately. 1991 prices for electricity in Greece, Luxembourg, Netherlands and Spain are not available. All prices in the tables include taxes, where applicable, including VAT to the domestic/commercial market where it is not refundable.

Gas Prices

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last discussed gas prices with the director of the Office of Gas Regulation; and what decisions were taken.

Mr. Eggar: I meet the Director General of Gas Supply from time to time. Decisions on gas tariffs are a matter for him.

Perfume Companies

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will refer to the Director of the Office of Fair Trading the actions of perfume companies in relation to discounting by Superdrug.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Director General of Fair Trading is already investigating complaints about restrictions on the distribution of perfumes.

Nuclear Plant

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what would be the saving to the Exchequer of mothballing every nuclear power station.

Mr. Eggar: There would in fact be significant net costs to the Exchequer if Nuclear Electric's stations were closed or mothballed. The substantial loss of revenue from electricity sales and, in the case of closure, the bringing forward of expenditure on decommissioning, reprocessing and waste disposal, together with redundancy costs, would far outweigh any savings in operating costs.

Coal Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the addition to the landed cost, in terms of pounds per tonne of transporting imported coal to power stations compared to the cost of transporting British coal.

Mr. Eggar: This is a commercial matter for the companies involved.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish figures showing the percentage of electricity which is produced from renewable sources in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The electricity produced from renewable sources of energy in the United Kingdom in 1991 was equivalent to 2 per cent. of total electricity generated in that year.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will, at 1992 or other price datum, give the comparable capital cost and full fuel costs, respectively, for production of one kilowatt hour of electricity from the most efficient power stations now available, using atomic, coal and gas fuel, respectively.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish his latest comparative list of the range of costs per kilowatt of generating electricity from (a) coal, (b) nuclear, (c) hydroelectric and (d) gas sources.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The comparable capital and full fuel costs per kilowatt hour of power stations using different fuels depends significantly upon the contractual terms of fuel purchase, and the contractual terms under which the power station is to be constructed and operated. These are commercial matters for the companies concerned. As far as electricity is concerned, it is up to the Director General of Electricity Supply to ensure that the regional electricity companies comply with their economic purchasing obligations. My Department will be assessing the evidence available on comparative costs as part of the Government's review.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much subsidy was given to support nuclear power in Britain in 1981 and 1991; and what were the comparable figures for the coal industry.

Mr. Eggar: No Government subsidies have been paid to Nuclear Electric plc or British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. Both these companies have since April 1990, been recipients of the fossil fuel levy paid by electricity suppliers. In 1991-92 the amount of money raised through the levy was £1,324 million, about 1 per cent. of which went to renewable generators in England and Wales. Nuclear Electric was a net lender to the Exchequer of £84 million in 1991-92.

The Government have been the customer for research and development and other programmes undertaken by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and has funded those programmes and their consequences.

Responsibility for Scottish Nuclear Limited rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

In 1981-82 and 1991-92 the Government made available to the coal industry financial assistance of £623 million and £585 million respectively. This is made up of deficit grant, operating grant—1981-82 only—social and restructuring grant and payments under the redundant mineworkers payments scheme.

Cashmere

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the negotiations being held between EC officials and the Republic of China regarding the bilateral agreement covering cashmere and fine animal hair imports into the EC; and what restitution is to be offered in compensation for recent overshipment of cashmere garments to EC markets.

Mr. Needham: The European Community has only just opened negotiations with China on renewal of the bilateral agreement on textiles and clothing. The Commission, prompted by the United Kingdom, is taking a resolute line on the future level of cashmere imports and on compensation for past overshipments. It is too early to forecast the outcome on those points.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the current state of negotiations seeking to roll over the multi-fibre arrangements terms pending a successful conclusion of the GATT Uruguay round; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: On 6 October the Foreign Affairs Council agreed a mandate for the European Commission to open negotiations with signatories to the multi-fibre arrangement with a view to extending the MFA, as an interim measure, until such time as the GATT Uruguay round agreement on trade in textiles and clothing is ready to implement. The aim is to conclude bilateral negotiations with individual supplier countries by the end of this year.

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he proposes to announce an extension of the multi-fibre arrangement, on existing terms, by the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 October 1992]: On 6 October the Foreign Affairs Council agreed a mandate for the Commission to open negotiations with certain third countries with a view to securing an agreement for an extension of the multi-fibre arrangement. Bilateral negotiations with individual supplier countries have begun and the Commission hopes to conclude these by the end of this year.

European Funding

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria will be used by the United Kingdom Government in recommending regions within the United Kingdom for consideration for directive 5(b) status within the review next year of the European regional development fund and the European social fund.

Mr. Sainsbury: Until the European Commission's proposals for the review of Community structural fund regulations are received, and the Council has considered them, it would be premature to anticipate which criteria will apply.

EC Industrial Funds

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he expects the draft regulations relating to EC industrial funds to be published; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how far he expects negotiations on reform of the EC industrial funds to proceed during the United Kingdom's EC presidency.

Mr. Sainsbury: I do not expect to receive the European Commission's proposals for revised structural funds regulations until after the Edinburgh European Council on 11 and 12 December. It is therefore unlikely that substantive negotiations on them will begin during the United Kingdom presidency.

Technical Innovation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Segal Quince Wicksteed report on technical innovation, to which he referred in his letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 29 July.

Mr. Leigh: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given on 19 October 1992, at columns 233-34.

Energy Review

Mr. Lester: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a further statement on his plans for the energy review announced on 21 October.

Mr. Heseltine: As I announced to the House on 21 October, I have put in hand a full and wide-ranging review of the prospects for the 21 pits proposed for closure by British Coal but not subject to the statutory consultation currently being undertaken by British Coal. This review will consider views and evidence on the future of each of the pits in question, in the context of the Government's energy policy, including the consequences of that policy for British Coal and the employment for the industry.

It will decide whether the case for closure at each of the pits in question has been fully made and whether it is sensible to mothball some of these pits. It will consider whether the market prospects for coal have been correctly assessed and, in consultation with the Director General of Electricity Supply, whether any company is abusing its position in the market place. It will look at the level of coal stocks, both at the pithead and the power stations, and whether plans to run them down are sensibly phased.

It will consider the consequences of the switch to gas in power generation and the relative costs of gas and coal-fired generation. It will look into the latest estimates of likely reserves of gas and draw conclusions. It will consider the present scale of gas-generated power stations in production, being built and in the planning process. In this connection, it will review the use of my consent powers under the Electricity Act 1989.

The review will consider the implications of the statutory obligation on electricity suppliers to purchase non-fossil power, including that from nuclear sources.

The review will explore the opportunities for the private sector in the production of coal. It will consider the existing and anticipated level of imports and the wider economic implications of this.

The review will give due regard to Scottish and Welsh interests and will also give consideration to the particular needs of Northern Ireland.

Consultation will take place with all the principal providers and consumers of energy, the trade unions and other interested parties. I have already announced that I have invited Boyds, an international mining consultancy to report to me on the viability of the 21 pits. I also intend to appoint consultants to report on the prospects for British Coal, including any alternative markets that may exist for coal and to comment generally on the competitiveness of British Coal as an organisation. I may wish to commission further independent studies.

My intention is to publish all evidence and the findings of the review to the fullest extent possible except where information has been provided in confidence and is commercially sensitive. I shall be discussing with the Trade and Industry Select Committee the means by which such confidential information might be made available to it.

Early in the new year, I shall publish a White Paper setting out the results of the review in the context of the government's energy policy, and making clear the consequences of that policy for British Coal, the implications for individual pits and the employment prospects for the industry. Before then the Select Committee will have a full opportunity to consider all the issues as it thinks fit. I shall present the conclusions and the Government's future decisions to the House, which will have an opportunity to debate the issues fully.

In order that I can give due weight to all the views expressed, I am asking those who wish to provide evidence to the review to do so as soon as possible and in any event not later than 1 December 1992. Evidence should be sent to Dr. J. M. Bird, Department of Trade and Industry, Room 3.4.4., 1 Palace street, London SW1E 5HE, making clear whether the evidence may be published.

Research, Development and Innovation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the European Council decision to establish a programme for the collection of Community statistics on research, development and innovation has yet been made; and what further action is proposed during the British presidency.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

No decision has yet been made. Discussions are currently proceeding in the relevant Council working party.

Point of Ayr Colliery

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will visit the Point of Ayr colliery to meet management and unions.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 23 October 1992]: I have no plans to do so.

Coal Industry

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the estimated loss in the balance of payments, and increased public expenditure consequent on the reduction in the output of, and employment directly in, the coal mining industry, and indirectly on the associated suppliers of equipment and services.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 October 1992]: The level of contraction of the coal industry and the implications for the balance of payments and public expenditure, if any, would depend upon decisions reached in the light of the review announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Industrial Strategy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the criteria by which he will evaluate the success of his industrial strategy.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 23 October 1992]: The key criterion I will use is the extent to which, over the long term, the demands of customers, both at home and abroad, for goods and services are met by United Kingdom firms.

Coal Exports

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on research undertaken by British Coal to secure markets for British coal in Europe.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 October 1992]: This is a matter for British Coal.

SCOTLAND

Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding radioactive leakage from the corroded low-level nuclear waste drums at pits numbers three and four at the nuclear power development establishment at Dounreay.

Sir Hector Monro: Routine site monitoring carried out in the vicinity of tips three and four has confirmed that the drums stored above these filled tips have not resulted in any increased levels of radioactivity either in the atmosphere or in the ground water pumped from the pits.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what report he has received from AEA Technology or Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate on the environmental pollution consequences of the fire at the intermediate-level waste silo at Dounreay in July.

Sir Hector Monro: My Department was informed by AEA Technology on 22 July 1992 that a small fire had taken place in the intermediate level waste silo at Dounreay on the evening of 21 July 1992 and that some smoke had been released to the atmosphere. Radioactive material was not released and there were therefore no environmental consequences.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the cost of decommissioning all of the radioactivity-contaminated buildings at AEA Technology's Dounreay nuclear plant; and what level of funding his Department will provide for the decommissioning work.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

I am replying in view of my responsibility for matters relating to AEA Technology.

The current estimate of the cost of decommissioning the nuclear facilities at Dounreay and dealing with the associated wastes is around £1-2 billion (in 1992 prices and in undiscounted terms). As most of the expenditure lies well in the future, actual costs will remain very uncertain until nearer the time when individual projects are developed and costed in detail.

My Department will meet the costs of all decommissioning and waste management liabilities arising from work done at the site before AEA Technology was established as a trading fund in 1986. It will also meet the costs of all such liabilities arising from its own programmes (and those of the former Department of Energy) since 1986.

Undergraduates

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new undergraduates have been enrolled at each university, other than former polytechnics, in Scotland for the academic year 1992-93; and how many of them are from Scotland, England, Northern Ireland, Wales, Republic of Ireland and other European Community countries.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Final figures for undergraduate enrolments at Scottish universities for the academic year 1992-93 will not be available until early next year. I shall reply to the hon. Member at that time.

Electoral Arrangements

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will estimate the cost of the second statutory review of electoral arrangements for the districts of Roxburghshire and Berwickshire; and to what use the fruits of the review will be put;

(2) if he will make a statement on the reasons for the decision to proceed with the second statutory review of electoral district boundaries in Roxburghshire and Berwickshire;

(3) what use is to be made of the Local Government Boundary Commission reports following the second statutory review of electoral arrangements in Roxburgh and Berwickshire in the light of the Government proposals to reform local government in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland has a statutory responsibility under section 16 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 to undertake regular reviews of electoral arrangements of local government areas in Scotland. In the case of Roxburgh district and Berwickshire district this must be completed before local government restructuring will be implemented. It is imperative that local electoral arrangements are kept up-to-date and reflect changing local circumstances. Whatever structure of local government is adopted following the Government's present review, it is likely that the district ward boundaries will be of assistance in devising the electoral divisions in the new authorities. It is therefore sensible on all counts that the reviews should proceed.

It is not possible to estimate the costs of the review in Roxburgh and Berwickshire districts separately from the reviews which are taking place simultaneously in other parts of the country.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now cancel the second statutory review of electoral arrangements for Roxburgh and Berwickshire districts.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Recycling

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance already exists to enable local authorities in Scotland to set up recycling schemes.

Sir Hector Monro: There are no schemes for Government financial assistance in Scotland specifically for local authority recycling projects. However, the Government, through exchequer grant, finance the majority of local authority revenue expenditure. Capital expenditure for local authority recycling activities is not identified separately within overall capital expenditure allocations. It is for the authorities to determine expenditure priorities within their overall allocations. Authorities planning to set up recycling schemes should identify such expenditure in their financial plans, and such projects are given priority in determining allocations.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the proportion of household waste which is currently recycled in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The percentage of household waste which is recycled in Scotland was estimated at about 2 per cent. in 1990, the latest year for which figures are available.

Beer

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints have been made to procurators fiscal or the Crown Office in the past two years in respect of allegations of short measures of beer poured by publicans.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not collected centrally.

Prisons Estate

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made with the review of the prisons estate; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Over the past three years a thorough appraisal of the prisons estate in Scotland has been undertaken, in order to establish and prioritise the range of improvements and upgrading work required to provide modern accommodation and facilities for prisoners and staff alike. A programme for implementation will be determined in the light of the outcome of the 1992 public expenditure survey.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what authorisation he has given to NHS hospitals currently directly managed by health boards in Scotland and to national health trusts in Scotland to enter into contracts or arrangements with private medical insurance companies.

Mr. Stewart: None.

Prime Health Limited

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish details of the contract and arrangements between Aberdeen Royal hospital NHS trust and Prime Health Ltd;

(2) if he will publish details of contracts and arrangements between Woodend hospital, Aberdeen and Prime Health Ltd;

(3) if he will publish details of the contracts and arrangements between Woodend hospital, Aberdeen and SAGA Services Ltd;

(4) if he will publish details of the contracts and arrangements between Aberdeen Royal hospital NHS trust and SAGA Services Ltd.

Mr. Stewart: No such contracts or arrangements exist.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the latest estimates by the Registrar-General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency, together in each case with the equivalent year's electoral registration figures.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is given in the tables. For clarity of presentation, the first table includes regions and islands areas and the whole of Scotland. The population figures in table A are the Registrar General's provisional census based 1991 mid-year estimates. Those in table B involve additionally a certain degree of approximation and should therefore be treated with caution.

Offensive Weapons

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to introduce legislation relating to the carrying and possession of knives and similar offensive weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government are committed to changing the law to make it more difficult to carry knives. We shall bring forward specific proposals as soon as we have worked up the details and secured a suitable legislative opportunity.

Consultants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the names of the consultants commissioned to inquire into (a) the privatisation of the Scottish bus group, (b) the Skye bridge and (c) options for the future of Scottish Water; and if he will give the expenditure for each.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 22 October 1992]: Expenditure incurred by the Scottish Office on consultancy work in connection with the projects in question is as follows:

	£ (excluding VAT)
Scottish Bus Group
Quayle Munro (financial advice)	408,690
Bell-Ingram (property advice) (to date)	19,403
Government Actuary (pensions advice)	6,158
Skye Crossing
JMP Consultants (engineering advice)	554,574
Quayle Munro (financial advice)	107,614
Chartered West LB (financial advice)	38,724

	£ (excluding VAT)
The Ash Partnership (environmental advice)	42,650
Scottish Water and Sewerage Services
Quayle Munro (advice on options for future structure of services)	50,000

Housing Statistics

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of starts and completions for (a) new houses, (b) private houses, (c) local authority, (d) housing associations and (e) new towns for each of the years 1979-80 to 1991-92 inclusive.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 October 1992]: The information requested is set out in the table:

New dwellings started and completed in Scotland for the period 1979-80 to 1991-92

Fife Child Care Inquiry

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the report of the Fife child care inquiry will be published.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 October 1992]: I plan to seek the approval of the House to publish sheriff Kearney's report very shortly.

Right-to-buy Scheme

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount of income received from the sale of (a) local authority houses and (b) new towns houses in each of the years since the inception of the right-to-buy scheme.

Euratom Treaty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on plans by the European Commission to inspect the radiation monitoring arrangements at Dournreay under the article 35 provisions of the Euratom treaty.

Sir Hector Monro: Agreement has been reached with the European Commission on the procedures to be followed in the United Kingdom for verifications under article 35 of the Euratom treaty of the operation and efficiency of environmental monitoring facilities for radioactivity. We have not yet received a formal request from the Commission for such a verification visit in respect of Dounreay or elsewhere.

TRANSPORT

Agricultural Vehicles

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of road traffic accidents involving agricultural vehicles between the hours of sunset and sunrise in each of the past five years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: During 1991, there were 92 reported injury road accidents during the hours of darkness involving vehicles whose body type could be identified from registration details as being an agricultural machine. During 1990, there were 100 such accidents. Comparable data for earlier years are not available.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies that were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies that submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. Norris: This information is not held centrally and could only be given at disproportionate cost.

Car Model Tests

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, as part of his quality service objectives, he will require the publication of the findings of each new car model test commissioned since 1988 using public money.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: All mass-produced new cars have to be type-approval tested against a range of standards before they can be registered. Although testing is supervised by the Vehicle Certification Agency, it is paid for by manufacturers, which are at liberty to make test results available voluntarily if they wish. Our principal concern is to confirm that type-approved vehicles meet key safety standards, rather than to record the extent by which they exceed those standards.

We are nevertheless currently considering whether basic data about exhaust and noise emissions could be made available in future. Precise figures are recorded for these aspects of type-approval testing, and it may be possible to publish information like the official list on car fuel consumption, which has been published twice a year since 1983. Such a list may have to be compiled on an EC-wide basis as much type-approval testing of United Kingdom registered cars is undertaken elsewhere in the Community.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions his Department has recently directed local planning authorities to refuse planning permission for the creation of access to side roads from trunk roads.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 23 October 1992]: Ninety-seven since 1 April 1992.

ENVIRONMENT

Toxic Waste

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will put an end to the export of toxic wastes to third world countries by ensuring a complete EC ban on the export of all forms of toxic waste;

(2) if he will ensure that the right to ban toxic waste trade is enshrined in new EC regulations;

(3) if he will set a date for an end to the import and export of toxic waste into and out of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 26 October 1992]: The EC waste shipments regulation was agreed at the meeting of the Council of Environment Ministers on 20 October, chaired by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State. I represented the United Kingdom.

The regulation will enable member states to ban imports for final disposal from other member states unless they produce hazardous waste in such a small quantity that it would be uneconomic to provide new specialised disposal facilities. Imports for disposal will also be permitted from developing countries which do not have and cannot acquire the technical capacity and necessary facilities in order to dispose of waste in an environmentally sound manner.

Exports for disposal will only be permitted to European Free Trade Association countries which are parties to the Basel convention.

Movements of waste for recovery, which provide valuable substitutes for raw materials, will continue between Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries, subject to the environmental controls set out in an OECD decision. There will be strict controls on exports of hazardous wastes for recovery outside the OECD area. Exports will have to accord with the environmental safeguards included in the Basel convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal. Exports will be prohibited where a third country refuses to accept them or if the exporting member state has reason to believe that the waste will not be managed on arrival in an environmentally sound way.

The regulation is likely to come into operation in 1994.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy at the meeting under his presidency on 20 October to (a) ensure that the clause which will allow EC member states to bar waste imports is inserted into the final regulations, (b) set a date for an end to the import and export of toxic wastes and (c) ensure that the regulation will stop the export of all toxic wastes to non-Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave earlier today.

Water Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the additional cost to the water industry in meeting European Community legislation on drinking and bathing water standards since 1980.

Mr. Maclean: There are no separate records for the whole period. However, of the £30 billion programme of improvements for the decade beginning in 1989, £12·1 billion is for water treatment and supply. This includes investment to meet our national requirements for drinking water which takes account of EC directives. The £30 billion also includes a £2 billion programme to meet EC standards for bathing waters.

Radiation Monitoring

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to invite in European Commission inspectors to evaluate radiation monitoring standards under article 35 of the Euratom treaty, at British Nuclear Fuels plants at Sellafield, Springfields, Capenhurst and Chapelcross.

Mr. Maclean: United Kingdom officials have agreed with officials of the European Commission the procedures to be followed in carrying out under article 35 of the Euratom treaty verifications of the operation and efficiency of environmental monitoring facilities in the United Kingdom. It is for the Commission to indicate in which areas it would like to undertake such a verification visit. The United Kingdom has not yet received a formal request from the Commission in respect of any specific area.

"The UK Environment"

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies of his Department's publication entitled "The UK Environment" have been published; and what steps have been taken to promote its widespread distribution.

Mr. Maclean: Her Majesty's Stationery Office published "The UK Environment" on 14 October on behalf of the Department of the Environment. The initial print run was 4,500 copies. A press notice went to all correspondents dealing with environment, water, pollution, education and the House of Commons in the national media. The report will feature in HMSO's catalogues and bibliographic listings and in a mailing to educational establishments scheduled for November. Copies are available by mail order directly from HMSO books, as well as from HMSO bookshops and HMSO agents both in the United Kingdom and overseas and the general book trade.

Pollution, Newham

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being taken by his Department to measure the extent of atmospheric pollution in the London borough of Newham; and what information is available on it.

Mr. Maclean: Continuously operated sulphur dioxide, SO_2, and smoke monitoring was carried out at 383 Stratford high street, Newham between 1963 and 1988. The data for the past eight years of operation are given. The data were discontinued thereafter because the values recorded were consistently well below the air quality limit values for SO_2 and smoke prescribed in EC directive 80/779/EEC.

	Smoke		SO_2
Year commencing	Median	98th percentile	Median	98th percentile
April 1980	20 (29 per cent.)	104 (49 per cent.)	52 (43 per cent.)	163 (47 per cent.)
April 1981	23 (34 per cent.)	86 (40 per cent.)	57 (48 per cent.)	195 (56 per cent.)
April 1982	9 (13 per cent.)	43 (20 per cent.)	65 (54 per cent.)	141 (40 per cent.)
April 1983	8 (12 per cent.)	58 (27 per cent.)	50 (42 per cent.)	180 (51 per cent.)
April 1984	15 (22 per cent.)	38 (18 per cent.)	44 (37 per cent.)	140 (40 per cent.)
April 1985	16 (24 per cent.)	57 (27 per cent.)	55 (46 per cent.)	125 (36 per cent.)
April 1986	13 (19 per cent.)	44 (21 per cent.)	50 (42 per cent.)	110 (31 per cent.)
April 1987	18 (26 per cent.)	73 (34 per cent.)	46 (38 per cent.)	94 (27 per cent.)

Note: All values are in micrograms per cubic metre and the smoke concentrations are to the British standard calibration. The percentages in brackets relate to the relevant EC directive limit value.

In 1986, diffusion tube measurements of nitrogen dioxide at the Stratford site gave an average concentration of 32·2ppb—parts per billion—for the period July to December. The average for the whole of Greater London for the same period was 27ppb. When the study was repeated in 1991, only two months of data were obtained for this site, and the average concentration for this limited period was found to be 35ppb.

The London borough of Newham has agreed to participate in a new long-term study of nitrogen dioxide, using diffusion tube samplers, currently being organised by the Department in conjunction with local authorities. Four measurement sites will be established in the borough in January 1993 as part of this survey.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of state for the Environment what recent initiatives he has taken to improve public education on energy saving and energy efficiency.

Mr. Maclean: The Government seek to promote the teaching of energy efficiency in primary and secondary schools through its involvement with CREATE—the Centre for Research, Education and Training in Energy—and is discussing with CREATE a number of new projects and improved funding arrangements.

As part of its "Helping the Earth Begins at Home" Campaign, the Government are developing an education strategy to encourage school children and teachers to understand the link between the efficient use of energy, CO_2 emissions and global warming.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent objections he has received over the environmental implications of the operation of the new thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has received a number of representations from members of the public objecting to the proposals for discharges of radioactive waste resulting from the proposals to operate the new thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield. I understand that the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will shortly be consulting on the revised draft authorisations for the discharge of radioactive waste from Sellafield.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding progress made by UK Nirex in locating a site to dispose of low and intermediate-level radioactive wastes.

Mr. Maclean: UK Nirex is continuing to carry out site investigation studies in the Sellafield area. The company announced its intention to construct a rock characterisation facility at Sellafield as part of these studies, and issued a consultation document setting out these proposals on 21 October.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department participated in the special scientific programme on radioactive waste held at the International Atomic Energy Agency's annual general conference on 22 September.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 26 October 1992]: No Department of the Environment officials attended the meeting on 22 September. However, some officials from the Health and Safety Executive did do so.

Housing Associations

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the affordability of new housing association homes to households on low incomes if current presumptions continue to prevail; and if he will make a statement on what action the Government intend to take.

Mr. Baldry: Grant rates for housing associations are proposed by the Housing Corporation and approved by the Secretary of State in the light of all relevant factors, including outturn rents on completed schemes. We are currently considering the rates of housing association grant for 1993-94. Outturn rent levels are for associations to determine. The Government do not publish the underlying factors and assumptions implicit in the grant rate model, nor any general definition of affordability, since they do not wish to imply a view as to what constitutes an affordable rent in any particular case.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what change he expects to make in housing association grant rates for housing association developments, and what will be the average housing association grant rate in 1993-94;

(2) what percentage change he expects to make in the total cost indicator levels applicable to housing association developments in 1993-94;

(3) when he expects to announce his decision on total cost indicator and grant rates for housing association development schemes in 1993-94.

Mr. Baldry: Final decisions on grant rates and total cost indicators are not yet available but will be communicated to associations as soon as they are announced.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 1044, whether his Department has received any further evidence from the Housing Corporation on the affordability of new homes provided by housing associations; and if he will place in the Library reports of the main findings and supporting research which the Housing Corporation has made available to his Department in the past six months.

Mr. Baldry: The Housing Corporation has made available to the Department some of the results of its continuous monitoring of rents set for new housing association tenants. Information on these rents, contained in the National Federation of Housing Associations' continuous recording—CORE—quarterly bulletins, is already in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the output of (a) newly built and (b) rehabilitated housing associations homes in England, over the years 1975 to 1991, and his estimates of their expected output in 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates of housebuilding completions, and of renovations of dwellings, by housing associations in England are shown in tables 6.1(a) and 7.1 respectively of the annual publication "Housing and Construction Statistics". Figures for the years 1981 to 1991 will shortly be published in the 1981 to 1991 edition, and those for earlier years are shown in previous editions: viz for 1980 in the 1980 to 1990 edition, for 1979 in the 1979 to 1989 edition, etcetera. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

The Department does not prepare forecasts of housebuilding completions, nor of conversions and renovations.

Housing Management Services

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) tenants and (b) organisations representative of tenants were consulted by (i) his Department and (ii) the consultants engaged by his Department in the course of preparing the proposals for the extension of compulsory competitive tendering by housing management services, as outlined in his Department's White Paper, "Competing for Quality".

Mr. Baldry: None. Tenants and tenants' organisations were given the opportunity to consider and respond to the consultation paper. Over 100 tenants organisations have responded.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the continuation and development of the Green House programme to promote energy conservation in local authority housing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: An announcement on this will be made shortly.

Council House Building

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of new council homes which will be (a) started and (b) completed in 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not prepare forecasts of housebuilding activity. Estimates of actual housebuilding starts and completions by local authorities are published in the annual and quarterly versions of "Housing and Construction Statistics". Copies of these publications are in the Library.

UNCED Agenda 21

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 17 June, Official Report, column 562, to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), if he will deposit two copies of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development Agenda 21 provisional document in the Library, pending the availability of official copies.

Mr. Maclean: Two copies of the provisional Agenda 21 document were deposited in the Library in July.

Water Meters

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to ensure that where a house is sold or let with a water meter installed, the purchaser or tenant is informed of this fact at the time of the purchase or letting.

Mr. Baldry: We have no intention of doing so. It is for the prospective purchaser or tenant to make the appropriate inquiries.

Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what decisions on waste reduction and packaging have been taken in recent meetings of the Environment Council.

Mr. Maclean: Waste reduction and packaging have not been on the agenda for recent meetings of the Environment Council.

Government Premises

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how long former Department of Trade and Industry premises in Victoria street have been empty; how long he expects them to remain unoccupied; what proposals he has for the future use of these premises; and what is the weekly cost of keeping the premises unoccupied, including maintenance, insurance and security liabilities.

Mr. Baldry: The property was vacated in September 1991 because it needed major works to render it suitable for continued occupation. Some time beforehand, negotiations were opened with the landlords to agree to a package whereby the property would be refurbished at their expense and the Secretary of State would enter into a new lease at a modern rent.

With the dramatic downturn in the property market, the landlords were reluctant to commit themselves to substantial capital expenditure while rents continued to fall. However, significant progress has been made and subject to finalisation of the negotiations a 24-month contract period will deliver the building fully refurbished and ready for occupation. It is intended that the building will be re-occupied by a Government Department or Departments.

We are still contractually liable, under the terms of a long lease, for rent plus costs for insurance, maintenance and security of £40,000, but this will be reduced to £12,000 when the building contract commences shortly.

Auto Emissions 2000

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department was represented at the Auto Emissions 2000 conference in Brussels organised by the European Commission on 20 and 21 September; and if he will deposit in the Library the papers prepared and presented to the conference.

Mr. Maclean: My Department was represented at this conference. I am arranging for a set of the papers to be placed in the Library.

Earth Summit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the statement for climate change at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development will be submitted for ratification within the United Kingdom Parliament.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom was party to the Munich summit communique of July 1992 which urged other countries to join the Group of Seven countries in a commitment to seek to ratify the United Nations framework convention on climate change by the end of 1993. We will continue to press for early ratification by a wide range of countries to ensure effective action to tackle this global problem.

Mining Communities

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources he intends to make available to the Rural Development Commission to support mining communities.

Mr. Maclean: The Rural Development Commission's resources for future years are currently the subject of discussion in the public expenditure round. The commission already operates a range of economic and social programmes in two rural east midlands coalfield areas and has recently increased the range of assistance available in the more southerly area. The commission is examining urgently what further assistance it might provide in coalfield areas of rural England.

Natural Resources

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to encourage the establishment of an EC-wide inventory of natural resources during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom presidency is working for the early establishment of the European environment agency which will have as one of its priorities the development of a EC-wide inventory of sources of environmental data and information.

Leasehold Enfranchisement

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will put out for consultation draft legislation on his Department's proposals for leasehold enfranchisement, before a Bill is presented to Parliament, in view of their complex and radical nature.

Mr. Baldry: No.

Coastal Zone Planning

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek the establishment of an EC directive on coastal zone planning and management during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC.

Mr. Maclean: At present, the Commission has not published a proposed directive on coastal zone planning. Therefore, the United Kingdom cannot take this forward during the presidency.

Historic London

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with English Heritage on its views on the impact of enfranchisement on historic parts of London.

Sir George Young: My officials have discussed the proposals, including in particular the arrangements for estate management schemes, with English Heritage.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to encourage the establishment of a sustainable development commission for Europe during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom presidency is taking the lead in encouraging the early establishment of the sustainable development commission which will have world-wide responsibilities.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC to secure that the implementation of subsidiarity will not lead to (a) weakening of member states' obligations on environmental policy, (b) loss of redress for EC citizens relating to environmental policy, or (c) diminution of the Commission's powers to intervene in environmental issues where member states do not meet obligations.

Mr. Maclean: Yes.

Building Regulations

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans to bring forward proposals to change building regulations in light of the construction products and workplace directives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Building Regulations 1991, which came into force on 1 June 1992, contain appropriate references to the construction products directive, which was implemented in the United Kingdom through the Construction Products Regulations 1991. We are currently considering what further changes may be needed in the Building Regulations to make them consistent with regulations made to implement the workplace directive.

Drinking Water

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to bring forward proposals ~~to bring~~ United Kingdom standards for lead pollution of drinking water into line with the World Health Organisation guideline level of 10 migrograms per litre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We are continuing urgent consideration of what more should be done by the Government and water companies in the light of the World Health Organisation's guideline, which we expect to be promulgated early next year. The World Health Organisation recognises that it will take time and money for countries to meet the new guideline.

Housing (Pregnant Women)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many pregnant women were successfully prosecuted in each of the last five years for fraudulent attempts to gain priority status on housing waiting lists in Bradford, Leeds, Sheffield, Manchester, Birmingham, Wolverhampton, Coventry, Southampton, Liverpool, Newcastle, Middlesbrough, Hull, Salford and Bristol.

Mr. Baldry: Such information is not held centrally.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority councillors were prosecuted in each of the last five years for fraudulently obtaining benefits while in receipt of council attendance allowances; and if he will give the political party which they represented.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department does not collect this information.

Home Safety

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to making the promotion of home safety a statutory responsibility of local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: None. It is for local authorities to decide whether they wish to promote home safety, taking into account local circumstances.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will help those local authorities which have established home safety committees.

Mr. Baldry: No. Local authorities who have chosen to establish such committees will no doubt first have taken into account the resource implications of doing so.

Environment Council

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 20 October.

Mr. Howard: I chaired the Environment Council which met in Luxembourg on 20 October. My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside represented the United Kingdom.

The Council agreed a common position on a new regulation on the supervision and control of shipments of waste within, into and out of the European Community. The Council has invited the European Parliament to co-operate in expediting the adoption of this regulation so that the next meeting of the Council in December can settle the date when the EC and the United Kingdom can ratify the Basel convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal. The regulation could therefore come into operation in 1994. The Government will have powers under the regulation to ban imports for final disposal from all countries including member states of the EC unless they produce hazardous waste in such a small quantity that it would be uneconomic for them to provide their own disposal facilities. The regulation also contains strict controls on the international movement of recoverable wastes and will give legal effect to an Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development decision on the movement of recoverables.

The Council agreed to press for methyl bromide to be added to the list of controlled substances covered by the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer at next month's meeting of the parties in Copenhagen, with an initial control involving a freeze at 1991 levels by 1995. My hon. Friend indicated that the United Kingdom would have been willing to go further and accept a 25 per cent. cut in methyl bromide production and consumption by the year 2000 if other member states had been willing to do likewise. The Council also exchanged views on the controls on chlorofluorocarbons and other ozone-depleting substances that the Community should press for in Copenhagen and on other issues likely to arise there.

The Council held a discussion on the fifth environmental action programme—"Towards Sustainability"—and gave initial consideration to a draft Council resolution endorsing the programme. Ministers envisaged the adoption of the resolution in December when the European Parliament's opinion has been received.

The Council held a discussion about the European Environment Agency. Ministers expressed regret at the lack of a decision on the location of the agency which continues to prevent it from beginning its work. They expressed the hope that the European Council would, as a matter of urgency, reach a decision on this issue.

The Council discussed informally climate change and follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. On the former, they agreed that the climate change convention should be ratified by the end of 1993; that member states should produce the national plans required under the convention by the same time; that member states' own plans for reducing CO_2 emissions should be submitted to the Council by the end of this year; and that the Council will consider the Commission's proposals for monitoring member states' CO_2 emissions at its next meeting. On the latter, Ministers reaffirmed the plan agreed at the Lisbon European Council for follow-up action to Rio.

The Council discussed the Commission's proposal for a regulation on eco-auditing, which would establish a voluntary scheme to encourage positive and effective environmental management of industrial operations and public reporting of the environmental impacts of their activities. Ministers endorsed the continuation of work aimed at the further refinement of the proposal to enable early agreement on it.

The Council considered for the first time the Commission's proposal for a revision of controls on the wildlife trade—the "Convention on Trade in Endangered Species regulation". Other member states joined the United Kingdom in supporting a significant strengthening of current controls, while emphasising that any extension of controls beyond those species covered by CITES must be on a scientific basis. The Council agreed that any harmonised controls within member states must be sharply focused; that the Community must avoid needless bureaucracy; and that it was important to ensure that member states retained an appropriate level of discretion in operating the controls. Ministers invited the Committee of permanent representatives to continue their work on this issue.

The Council took note of progress in preparing a directive which would extend to light-duty vehicles provisions on the control of exhaust pollutants which already apply to passenger cars and heavy commercial vehicles. Ministers hoped to reach a common position on the draft directive in December.

Highway Signs

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines his Department issues to local authorities on highway signs in areas of outstanding natural beauty.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have been asked to reply.

The visual appearance of traffic signs is required to comply with the traffic signs regulations and general directions 1981. Circular roads 7/75 gives advice on the ways of minimising the intrusion of traffic signs on highways in rural areas. Guidance on the provision of signs to tourists attractions is given in circular roads 1/91.

Copies of these circulars are in the Library.

Sludge Incinerators

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning applications for sewage sludge incinerators are currently being considered by planning authorities in England and Wales; and if he will name those which he has called in for public inquiry.

Mr. Baldry [pursuant to his reply 22 October 1922, c. 351]: The Secretaries of State are not automatically informed of all planning applications for sewage sludge incinerators. However, the Town and Country Planning (Development Plans and Consultation) Direction 1992 requires local planning authorities to notify them of development proposals which would significantly prejudice implementation of a development plan. Through this mechanism, we are aware of two applications currently before local planning authorities—Crossness in the London borough of Bexley and at Beckton in the London borough of Newham. Neither of these applications has been called in.

In addition to these current applications, Northumbrian Water and Internal Technology Europe Ltd. have appealed to the Secretary of State in respect of their incinerator proposals at East Howden in north Tyneside and at Portrack in Stockton-on-Tees; a public inquiry has been held and the Secretary of State is considering the inspector's report.

Fuel Supplies

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will relax the compulsory competitive tendering rules governing purchasing by local authorities to allow local authorities in England and Wales to identify the country of origin of fuel supplies.

Mr. Robin Squire: The purchase of supplies by local authorities is not subject to the compulsory competitive tendering legislation. The Government have no plans to repeal part II of the Local Government Act 1988 which prohibits local authorities from introducing non-commercial considerations into the purchasing of supplies.

EDUCATION

Grant-Maintained Schools

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if it is his intention to apply the same criteria to grant-maintained schools as to local education authority schools when considering the rationalisation of school places.

Mr. Forth: We are determined to reduce wasteful surplus capacity and will apply similar criteria to all proposals for the rationalisation of school places.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which grant-maintained schools were visited by Her Majesty's inspectors during the period January 1992 to July 1992 and what was the total costs of these inspections; in the case of each school, (a) how many visits have taken place, (b) what is the number of inspectors involved, (c) what is the total number of days involved and (d) what is the cost; and whether it is proposed to publish any report arising from these visits.

Mr. Forth: HMI visited 50 GM schools in the period mentioned. None of the visits was a formal inspection intended to lead to a published report. The information available is given in the table.

Assisted Places

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many assisted places remained unfilled in 1992 in each standard region.

Mr. Forth: At the end of the academic year 1991-92, the numbers of assisted places available, the numbers taken up and the numbers unfilled in each region are as shown in the table:

Region	Assisted places Available	Taken-up	Vacant
North-east	1,477	873	604

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the total number of assisted places; and how it has increased since the inception of the scheme.

Mr. Forth: The total number of assisted places available and the total number taken up since the scheme's inception in 1981 are given in the table:

Academic Year	Places Available	Places Taken Up
1981-82	5,446	4,185

Problem Schools

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out the basis for the assumption in his departmental White Paper, "Choice and Diversity: A New Framework for Schools," that problem schools will be in the local education authority sector rather than the grant maintained sector.

Mr. Forth: No such assumption has been made. Chapter 11 of the White Paper sets out the steps that will be taken to tackle failing schools in the local education authority sector. Chapter 3 includes details of the powers which my right hon. Friend will have to ensure that remedial action is taken where grant-maintained schools are failing to provide an adequate standard of education for their pupils.

Expenditure, Birmingham

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the level of education underspend for the Birmingham local education authority for each of the past three years.

Mr. Forth: It is for the Birmingham local authority to determine its spending on education in the light of local circumstances and priorities. The Government do not set targets for spending on individual services. The Government do, however, calculate for each service what an authority would need to spend to provide a standard level of service—its standard spending assessment (SAA).

The latest available figures showing the difference between Birmingham's estimated spending on education and the education component of its standard spending assessment are given in the table.

Year	Education SSA £ million (rounded)	Estimated spending on education £ million (rounded)	Difference £ million (rounded)
1990-91	399	352	48
1991-92	457	392	64
1992-93	485	428	57

Note: Information on estimated expenditure is taken from the authority's returns to the Department of the Environment on forms RA90/91-92/93 and RA(SG)90/91-92/93, repriced to outturn.

Access Funds

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will consider increasing the access funds by an amount that takes into account the increase in the number of students since the inception of the funds.

Mr. Forman: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 12 May, Official Report, column 63. The money allocated to access funds is not specifically related to the number of students overall but is intended to be targeted at those in real need.

"A Hard Act to Follow"

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consideration his Department has given to the criticisms of the Education Act 1981 made in the report, "A Hard Act to Follow", published by the Spastics Society, if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: "A Hard Act to Follow" has been given very careful consideration. I met representatives of the Spastics Society and discussed the findings of the report on 24 September 1992. I have already publicly welcomed the document as a useful piece of research, and have noted that the findings will add stimulus to the current debate on special educational needs. In many respects, the report confirmed the need for the Government's new measures, which had already been announced in chapter 9 of the White Paper, "Choice and Diversity", and elsewhere.

Expenditure, Manchester

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what study his Department has made of the city of Manchester's needs for capital expenditure for its education service in the financial year 1993-94, including basic need in schools; what help he expects to be available, in particular for the replacement of school premises which are in an unsafe condition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I discussed Manchester's capital plans briefly on a visit to the authority in July. Officials met representatives from Manchester local education authority to discuss their plans in more detail, prior ito preparation of their bid.

I am meeting a delegation of officers and members from Manchester in early November to discuss their future needs, with particular reference to basic need in primary schools and surplus place removal projects in the secondary sector.

I cannot yet say what resources will be available, but Manchester's needs will be carefully considered in accordance with the normal criteria, along with those from all other LEAs. Their capital allocation will be announced in December.

London University

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from graduates of the university of London concerning the proposed break-up of the federal status of the university.

Mr. Forman: Generally, the future development of the federal university and the constitutional position of its colleges are internal matters for the university and its constituent colleges. However, we have received some representations from the society "Graduate with Honours" about the future of the federal graduation ceremony.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies which were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies which submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. Forman: The information requested is set out. In addition to these, there have been four single-tender procurements for enhancements to existing systems—for which competitive tendering was inappropriate—with a total value of £110,250.

Tenders for hardware
None.

Tenders for software
a. Supply of a payroll system for the Further Education Funding Council.

Period of contract: supply and licence only

All values quoted exclude VAT.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees and what remuneration each currently receives.

The Attorney-General: I have not myself made any appointment to a public body, as yet.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Revenue

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list by (a) county and (b) location, the revenues received by the honours of the Duchy by year for the last five years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The ancient possessions of the duchy of Lancaster include the honour and county of Lancaster, the honours of Leicester, Tutbury, Bolingbroke, Pickering, Tickhill, Halton, Knaresborough. However, receipt of duchy revenues is not restricted to possessions within these honours and accounting records by honour are not maintained.

The hon. Member was given a list of all land holdings on 16 June 1992, Official Report, columns 360-61. To produce revenue figures for each individual holding for the past five years could only be done at disproportionate cost, and in some cases the revenue attributable would be insignificant. Duchy gross revenue—other than from investments and deposits—is analysed by county and is set out. All revenues are shown gross.

During 1988, a new accounting system was introduced and the analysis for that year could only be done at disproportionate cost.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies which were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies which submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. Robert Jackson: This information is not held centrally and can only be supplied at disproportionate cost.

ACCOMMODATION AND WORKS COMMITTEE

7 Old Palace Yard

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what has been the cost of the recent refurbishment of 7 Old Palace Yard.

Mr. Ray Powell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. and learned Member for Perth and Kinross (Sir N. Fairbairn) on 23 October, Official Report, column 399.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates have resigned or retired since 1 October; and how many magistrates have resigned or retired in October in each year since 1987.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The figures including those for the area within the responsibility of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster are:

	Number
To 23 October 1992	119
October 1991	156
October 1990	121

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Chernobyl

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance has been granted by her Department to (a) the victims of the Chernobyl disaster and (b) areas affected by the disaster; and how much money has been allocated to (a) purchase non-contaminated food and (b) purchase medical equipment for hospitals.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The know-how fund is financing two Chernobyl-related projects. We have allocated £400,000 to advise how to measure radiation concentration in foodstuffs produced in Kiev region and £220,000 to prioritise clean-up requirements and prepare follow-up project proposals.

In 1991, we provided £2 million emergency medical aid —essential drugs and equipment—to the former Soviet Union—FSU—of which Ukraine received more than a third.

The European Community has agreed a food and medical aid loan to the FSU. Ukraine's share is 130 mecu. We understand Ukraine intends to use 104 mecu on food and 26 mecu for medical products.

Know-how Funds

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the know-how fund for central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union; and if he will give details on specific projects so far approved this year for each eligible country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Further to my written answer of 29 June 1992, Official Report, column 371, the know-how fund is continuing well. The amount spent or committed has increased to £95 million to cover more than 650 projects.

An updated list of the activities has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Somalia

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further assistance has been provided to alleviate the plight of the people of Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our total humanitarian aid for Somalia in 1992 is almost £27 million, including our share of EC aid.

It includes £1·5 million in response to the appeal of the International Committee of the Red Cross on 9 July. This is for the ICRC's food programme under which hot meals are provided via some 600 communal kitchens to over half a million beneficiaries. We also provided £1 million for the British Red Cross to use for its medical/health care programme in Somalia, as a national contribution towards ICRC's operations.

On 15 September, my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development announced a further £7·5 million to support British and international non-governmental organisations and United Nations relief operations in Somalia. Priority is being given to providing seeds and tools, helping with transport and medical supplies, and rehabilitation services.

South Africa

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the deployment of observers to South Africa in accordance with the terms of United Nations Security Council resolution 772.

Mr. Hurd: The United Nations, the EC, the Commonwealth and the Organisation of African Unity are all sending groups of observers to South Africa. Their role will be to seek, by their presence in situations of potential conflict, to prevent violence, defuse tension and promote peace. They will be operating in close co-operation with each other, and with the National Peace Secretariat—as well as with the United Nations and observer teams from other international organisations.

There will be 15 EC observers drawn from throughout the Community. The majority of participants have a police background. Two of them are British. They will arrive in South Africa on 29 October.

The EC is also providing six police experts to be attached to Judge Goldstone's recently-established investigative task forces. A senior British police officer will act as the co-ordinator of the team. This officer arrived in South Africa on 7 October.

The Commonwealth has recruited 20 observers to play a similar role to that of the EC group. One of the group is a United Kingdom police officer.

The 50 United Nations observers are drawn from the staff of the United Nations secretariat. The composition of the OAU group is still under discussion.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy that there should be a level playing field for pools and a national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: The Government are considering a number of representations from the pools industry.

Public Libraries

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many books were purchased for public libraries in (a) 1981, (b) 1985 and (c) 1991; how much money was allocated in each of those years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 26 October 1992]: Public libraries in England added 10·8 million, 11·1 million and 11·0 million books to their stock in 1980-81, 1984-85 and 1990-91 respectively. These figures include donations and free publications, as well as purchases. Their actual expenditure on books for the same years was £41·0 million, £56·8 million and £84·8 million. This represents an expenditure increase in real terms of almost 13 per cent. between 1980-81 and 1990-91.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Council Library, Bandung

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money has been saved by the British Government following the closure of the British Council library in Bandung.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There was no net saving to the Government.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on whose recommendation the British Council library in Bandung was closed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British Council recommended and made this closure in order to release resources to meet new, high priority requirements elsewhere.

Bosnia

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the supply of arms or direct military support to the Serbian, Croat and Muslim forces in Bosnia in contravention of the arms embargo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are a number of unconfirmed reports of arms supplies to Bosnia. An Iranian aircraft carrying arms was seized at Zagreb airport recently. The Western European Union/North Atlantic Treaty Organisation surveillance operation in the Adriatic has reported a number of ships suspected of violating the United Nation's trade and arms embargoes. But it is not clear whether these vessels are carrying goods destined for Bosnia.

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on whether the Bosnian-Serbs are continuing to receive arms and military supplies from the rump Yugoslavia; and whether any form of monitoring is proposed of the border between Serbia and the Serbian-controlled area of Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no firm evidence of whether Serbia is continuing to supply arms to the Bosnian Serbs. The Yugoslav authorities deny this. Moreover, the Bosnian Serbs are already well-equipped; further supplies from Serbia would be unlikely to have a significant effect on their military capability. The monitoring of Serbia's and Montenegro's borders with Bosnia-Herzegovina was agreed in principle at the London conference. But these borders run through mountainous terrain, and are highly permeable. Effective monitoring would absorb much personnel and equipment. The United Nations is thus according higher priority to using the resources available to ensure that the safe and rapid delivery of emergency relief supplies to Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Sir Russell Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs prior to the full deployment of British forces to Bosnia-Herzegovina, what assessment he has made of the number of foreign mercenaries active in the field, their origin and the factions they are fighting with; how confident he is that British forces will be at no risk from attack by mercenaries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There have been repeated reports of mercenaries fighting in Bosnia-Herzegovina, and some are clearly well-founded. No reliable estimate of the numbers involved has been made. Our assessment at present is that mercenaries do not as such increase the threat posed to British troops by the various armed groups in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has now secured agreement from the Bosnian-Muslim, Bosnian-Serb and Bosnian-Croat communities to allow free passage for British forces deployed in Bosnia-Herzegovina and to guarantee their safety from attack.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All parties to the conflict in Bosnia-Herzegovina have confirmed their willingness to co-operate with United Nations Protection Forces—UNPROFOR—personnel deployed to that region in accordance with Security Council resolution 776 of 14 September.

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will seek Security Council approval to identify and name forces who attack United Nations military and humanitarian personnel in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Security Council resolution 776 of 14 September reaffirms the determination of the Council to ensure the protection and security of UNPROFOR and United Nations personnel: there is no need to seek an explicit resolution on these lines. Furthermore, United Nations personnel deployed to Bosnia-Herzegovina to facilitate and escort convoys of humanitarian aid will proceed only on the basis of negotiated safe passage.

Macedonia

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries which have given diplomatic recognition to the independence of Macedonia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Bulgaria, Croatia, Lithuania, Philippines, Russia, Slovenia and Turkey have been notified to us as having recognised the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia as an independent state.

Kosovo

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the speech by Lord Owen representing the presidency of the EC in the debate on the former Yugoslavia in the plenary session of the Council of Europe on 3 October in which he excluded any possibility of independence for Kosovo represents Government policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We share Lord Owen's views. The Serbian authorities should grant the Kosovars genuine autonomy with full human rights, and the Kosovars should accept this. A special group on Kosovo is working intensively within the international conference.

Overseas Missions

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the agreement within the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe on 18 September to send missions to Vojvodina, Kosovo and Sanjak have been implemented; how many persons are being deployed and from which countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: CSCE long-term missions have been in place since the end of September in Kosovo, Vojvodina and Sanjak under the leadership of Ambassador Bogh of Norway. Apart from Ambassador Bogh, there are eight mission participants involved from Norway, United States, Austria, Canada, France, Sweden and Switzerland.

We welcome the establishment of these missions and the valuable role they can play on behalf of the international community in monitoring developments and in helping to prevent conflict in these troubled regions.

Yugoslavia

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a list showing those countries which have contingents as part of the United Nations protection forces—UNPROFOR—in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, indicating their numbers and function and where they are based.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following countries have contributed contingents to UNPROFOR. Numbers, function and location where known are also indicated. The table is divided into two parts to reflect countries commitments to UNPROFOR—first phase—and those agreed for UNPROFOR—second phase.

UNPROFOR (1st Phase)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, columns 34-35, what information the United Kingdom authorities have received over the political responsibility for war crimes by Slobodan Milosevic and Radovan Karadzic.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Nations Security Council resolution 771 calls for the submission of substantiated information about violations of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia. We have so far received no information relating to any named individual.

Any substantiated information we receive will be submitted to the Security Council in line with UNSCR 771.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to both Wilton Park under its chief executive, Geoffrey Denton, and to the Natural Resources Institute under its chief executive, Anthony Beattie. I have asked them to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. G. Denton to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 22 October 1992:

Thank you for your question about the papers published by the Chief Executive. The reply to your question is as follows:

Geoffrey Denton; "Reconciliation and Reconstruction in South and Southern Africa", Wilton Park Papers, No. 47, HMSO, 1992.

Letter from Mr. A. Beattie, to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

Lady Chalker has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about papers published by chief executives of agencies.

In the last 12 months I have contributed the foreword to two issues of NRI's newsletter 'Resource', which we distribute in Britain and overseas. The fourth issue was published in December 1991, the fifth earlier this month.

Romania

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the impact on the Romanian economy and on the progress of change of the implementation by Romania of sanctions against Yugoslavia; if he has discussed this with his European opposite numbers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The implementation of sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro presents problems for all neighbouring states. Romania has, however, been able to pursue its programme of reform with support from the international financial institutions, including the International Monetary Fund, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the World bank, as well as with G24 balance of payments support.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is in frequent consultation with European partners and with other interested governments on all aspects of the current crisis in former Yugoslavia.

China

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the dates, programme and composition of the forthcoming delegation to visit the People's Republic of China to discuss human rights led by Lord Howe of Aberavon.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 23 October, Official Report, column 409, and to the response I made in the Adjournment debate on the same date, Official Report, columns 754-58.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies which were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies which submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The table sets out the requested information.

Tenders issued by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office since 9 April 1992 for the supply of computer hardware and software:

(i) Computer Hardware:

1. (a) LEMUR Project
   (b) For the procurement of computer hardware and software
   (c) 10 companies invited to tender
   (d) No company submitted a bid without prior invitation
   (e) Olivetti was awarded the contract
   (f) The value was approximately £500,000
   (g) The contract will run for 12 months approximately

2. (a) HESD Multi-user System Project
   (b) For UNIX system hardware and software
   (c) 3 companies invited to tender
   (d) No company submitted a bid without prior invitation

(e) Contract not yet awarded
(f) Value likely to be around £35,000
(g) Contract will run for 12 months

(ii) Computer Software
3. (a) UNIX Typing Tutor Project
(b) For procurement of 230 licences
(c) 3 companies invited to tender
(d) No company submitted a bid without prior invitation
(e) Contract not yet awarded
(f) Value approximately £15,000
(g) Contract will run for one year

4. (a) Uniplex Word Processing Project
(b) For the procurement of Uniplex word processing software
(c) 7 companies invited to tender
(d) No company submitted a bid without prior invitation
(e) Contract not yet let
(f) Value unlikely to exceed £100,000
(g) Contract will run for 12 months

Sinai

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answers of 12 June, Official Report, column 326, and 30 June, Official Report, column 507, whether a decision has been taken on the future of the United Kingdom's participation in the multinational force and observers in Sinai.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Having carefully considered the views of the signatories of the 1981 protocol establishing the multinational force and observers, we confirmed our decision to withdraw. The United Kingdom contingent left on 21 October 1992. This decision reflects the fact that over 13 years after the signature of a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel their border is stable and internationally recognised.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attempts have been made by Her Majesty's Government to ameliorate the shortfall in payments to the International Atomic Energy Agency for nuclear safety research and safeguards implementation.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom has played an active part in ensuring that priority programmes in the areas of safety research and safeguards implementation are excluded from the effects of any shortfall in contributions. The Government have also made extra-budgetary contributions to meet particular needs for the acquisition of safeguards equipment and to assist the agency's programme on the safety of aging reactors.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom permanent representative to the board of governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency voted for Libya to be elevated to the board.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

Elections to the board of governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency are held by secret ballot. It is not Her Majesty's Government's practice to divulge its voting intentions or actions after the event on such matters.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mining Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what meetings he has held with (a) the National Union of Mineworkers and (b) the Union of Democratic Mineworkers since 10 April.

Mr. Eggar: Since 10 April, my right hon. Friend has met with the Union of Democratic Mineworkers (UDM) on 4 June and addressed its annual conference on 9 June. I have met with it on 13 May and 22 July and also when it met with the Prime Minister on 30 September. Both my right hon. Friend and I also met the UDM on 19 October. I met with the National Union of Mineworkers on 7 July.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what matters were decided in the meeting he held with the chairman of British Coal on 3 June.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend and the chairman of British Coal discussed a wide range of issues affecting the future of the coal industry.

Closed Coal Mines

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evaluation has been made by his Department of the implications of water pollution from closed coal mines.

Mr. Eggar: It is an offence for a mine owner to cause pollution of watercourses. The body with statutory responsibility for regulation of water pollution is the National Rivers Authority. I understand that the NRA has been reviewing data on water pollution from abandoned mines of all kinds and intends to publish its assessment in the next few months.

Industrial Strategy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of companies (a) created, (b) expanded or (c) helped, by his industrial strategy in each principal category of industry.

Mr. Heseltine: This Government's industrial strategy is designed to benefit the long-term competitiveness of business generally.

Coal Stocks

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reserves of coal were estimated to be in each of British Coal's mines that were in operation in September; and how long those reserves of coal would have taken to be exhausted at the rate of extraction achieved in each mine over the last 12 months.

Mr. Eggar: The scale and potential duration of coal reserves at individual British Coal mines are matters for the corporation.

Work Experience

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many of his staff have work experience (a) outside Government service, (b) of science and technology in industry or commerce and (c) of law and accountancy in industry or commerce.

Mr. Eggar: This answer can only be given at disproportionate cost.

Electricity

Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had regarding the increase in electricity prices for large-scale manufacturing industry.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is in regular contact with large electricity users concerning electricity prices.

Trentham Complex

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of profit and loss levels at Trentham colliery complex for the last full financial year.

Mr. Eggar: The issue which the hon. Member raises is a matter for British Coal.

Parkside Colliery

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what have been the profits and losses at Parkside colliery over each of the past six years.

Mr. Eggar: The issue which the hon. Member raises is a matter for British Coal.

Fuel Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether long-term contracts for the supply of gas to power stations include a clause linking the price to that of oil or any other measure; and if the Government will ensure that the price of electricity is not increased to take into account any increase in the price of gas.

Mr. Eggar: The contractual agreements between suppliers of natural gas and customers engaged in electricity generation are a commercial matter for the companies concerned. Licence conditions, including the electricity price controls, are a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Standing Charges

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will introduce the necessary regulations to abolish all standing charges for telephones, domestic electricity and gas bills for people over the state pension age for retirement; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his estimate of the current cost of the abolition of all standing charges for telephones, domestic electricity and gas bills for people over the state pension age for retirement; and how the estimate was arrived at.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1992]: This is primarily a matter for the utility companies, which may decide on the form and scale of their charges—including standing charges—within the constraints of their licences and relevant legislation. The utility regulators have an important role in agreeing the pricing levels and structures.

Point of Ayr Colliery

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the viability of Point of Ayr colliery as a supplier of coal to Fiddler's Ferry power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 26 October 1992]: The viability of Point of Ayr colliery will be considered as part of the review outlined by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 21 October. I should welcome any evidence or comments that the hon. Member may have on this issue to pass on to the review team.

Miners (Hours of Work)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy on limiting the number of hours worked underground by miners; what is the effect of the proposed European working time directive on his policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 26 October 1992]: The Government took powers in the Coal Industry Act 1992 to repeal in due course the Coal Mines Regulation Act 1908, which restricts the hours miners can work underground. The Government have made it clear, however, that the Act will not be repealed until it is replaced either by the adoption of the proposed European Community directive on working time or the introduction of an alternative United Kingdom measure.

Cabinet Committees

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if, further to his answer of 19 May to the hon. Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes), Official Report, columns 110-18, concerning the constitution and responsibilities of Cabinet committees, he will name the relevant committee charged with the responsibility for natural energy policy and the names of its members.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 22 October 1992]: Issues of national energy policy requiring collective discussion would normally fall within the remit of the Committee on Industrial, Commercial and Consumer Affairs. Other Committees, such as the Committee on the Environment, may also discuss issues affecting energy policy as appropriate. The membership of these Committees was given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in his answer of 19 May to the hon. Member for Harlow, Official Report, columns 110-18.

Gas Reserves

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on which countries, on present projections, will run out of gas reserves in the next 20 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 October 1992]: The rate at which gas reserves will be depleted depends on many factors including demand, development costs, prices, levels of imports and technological developments. My Department's latest assessment suggests that United Kingdom gas reserves will be sufficient to meet expected demand, including demand for power stations for at least this period. My Department does not carry out comparative assessments for other countries.

PRIME MINISTER

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees and what remuneration each currently receives.

The Prime Minister: As I told the hon. Member on 13 June 1991, Official Report, column 663, in answer to a similar question, this information could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Associations

Ms. Walley: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has made to representations from the National Federation of Housing Associations about the retention of the £2 billion grant for housing associations; and if he will make it his policy that no cuts in expenditure will be made to the budget for the west midlands.

The Prime Minister: The hon. Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Ainsworth) wrote to me on 15 October, enclosing a letter which he had received from the chairman of the west midlands regional council of the National Federation of Housing Associations (NFHA). My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary at the Department of the Environment replied on my behalf.

The Government cannot comment on the outcome of the public expenditure survey, which will be announced in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's "Autumn Statement". The Government have shown their commitment to housing associations as the main providers of new social housing by increasing resources for the Housing Corporation from £935 million in 1989-90 to over £1,700 million in 1992-93.

Next year resources will be allocated among the Housing Corporation's regions in accordance with the housing needs indicator, which is agreed by the Department of the Environment, the Housing Corporation and the NFHA.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 27 October.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 27 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Pit Closures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister in agreeing to the pit closures what account he took of the effect on competitiveness of the changes in exchange rate between the pound and the dollar; and if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1970 (a) the relative unit value of United Kingdom exports compared with those of the United States of America in each year based on the second half of 1973 equals 100 and the fourth quarter of 1986 equals 100, (b) the world price of coal in terms of dollars and (c) an index of freight rates from (i) the United States of America, (ii) Australia and (iii) the contract price for United Kingdom coal delivered to power stations.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 October 1992]: The competitiveness of British-mined coal was considered at a range of pound:dollar exchange rates. The other information requested cannot be supplied in the time available and my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will write to the hon. Member.

Middle East

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy during his visit to Egypt on 23 October to raise with President Mubarak Israel's nuclear capability and the danger of nuclear proliferation throughout the middle east.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 October 1992]: I discussed a number of middle east security matters with President Mubarak. I did not discuss Israel's nuclear potential.

WALES

Perifra

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what benefits have accrued to Wales from the European Community's Perifra I and II re-training schemes.

Mr. David Hunt: The EC Perifra programme is intended to part-finance small-scale measures in favour of peripheral regions and destabilised activities in the Community. In the case of defence industries, assistance is intended to alleviate the consequences of job losses by promoting the creation of alternative employment opportunities, and eligible activities include vocational training schemes.

The Welsh Office submitted an application under Perifra I last year for the re-development of the Royal Navy armaments depot, Milford Haven. Unfortunately, that application was dependent upon the local authority purchasing the land, and this did not happen; the bid was therefore withdrawn.

A further bid for £775,000 in grant support under Perifra II was prepared for the west Wales area in close collaboration with the west Wales task force and submitted to the European Commission in June this year. On 3 August, the Commission announced that west Wales would receive a reduced allocation of £140,000 for the training and employment in technology scheme sponsored by the west Wales training and enterprise council in partnership with the Employment Service and Welsh Development Agency. This will, of course, complement my own priority actions in the west Wales area. The size of the allocation is, however, disappointing and is considerably less than we had hoped for. My officials are seeking an urgent meeting with their Commission colleagues to discuss the whole issue.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional resources will be allocated to support the four new environmentally sensitive areas to which reference is made in chapter 18, paragraph 18.6 of "Britain's Environmental Strategy" (Cm 2068).

Mr. David Hunt: The provision for ESAs in future years will be determined in the context of the public expenditure survey now in progress. This year, I am making available £2·5 million to meet the cost of ESA's management agreements in Wales.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to receive a copy of the study into the Caldicot levels impoundment for wading birds being carried out by Mason Pittendrigh with respect to design and management and David Bellamy Associates with respect to the environmental aspects as part of the mitigation works in relation to the proposed Cardiff bay barrage.

Mr. David Hunt: I anticipate receiving the report of the feasibility study into the creation of a bird reserve on the Gwent levels before the end of this year.

Water Quality

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been allocated in the form of loans by the European investment bank to Welsh Water for the improvement of water quality in rivers and beaches, and the upgrading of drinking water supplies in each of the last two years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Languages

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will grant funding to the Mercator project on European lesser-used languages at the University college of Wales, Aberystwyth.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have no plans to fund the Mercator project in Aberystwyth.

A465

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will bring forward the upgrading of the A465 head of the valleys road to dual carriageway between Witworth and Abergavenny into the medium-term programme under "Roads in Wales".

Sir Wyn Roberts: The need to complete engineering design and statutory procedures means that it is unlikely that the dualling of the A465 head of the valleys road from Abergavenny to Hirwaun will start before April 1998. The position will, however, be kept under review.

Disabled Pupils

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many disabled pupils in (a) mainstream educational establishments and (b) special schools sat (i) GCSE O-level examinations and (ii) GCSE A-level examinations in Wales for the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will indicate the numbers of disabled pupils obtaining (1) 10 or more passes at GCSE O-level, (2) five to 10 passes at O-level, (3) between one and five passes at O-level, (4) the number leaving school without any qualifications and (5) the number obtaining one or more passes at A- level.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the examination achievements of pupils with disabilities is not collected centrally.

Visual Impairment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many visually impaired children attend mainstream schools in each local education authority areas of Wales; and how many such children have received formal mobility training during their education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on mobility training for children with visual impairments is not collected centrally.

The numbers of children in maintained primary and secondary schools who were blind or partially sighted and for whom the local education authority was maintaining a statement of special educational needs, in January 1991, are given in the table:

	Number
Clwyd	78
Dyfed	23
Gwent	19
Gwynedd	14
Mid Glamorgan	13
Powys	3
South Glamorgan	24
West Glamorgan	63
Wales	237

These figures include children in both mainstream classes and special classes units, in maintained primary and secondary schools. The figure for Powys includes one pupil educated outside of that authority. There may be a number of children with visual impairments for whom the LEA does not maintain a statement of special educational needs.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children between the ages of five and 16 years are estimated to have visual impairment; and if he will publish the official local education authority estimates for totals of blind and partially sighted children.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Local education authority estimates of children with visual impairments are not held centrally. Information on the total numbers of children with visual impairments for whom LEAs maintain statements of special educational needs, by local education authority, is published in table 10.04, "Pupils with disabilities, by authority, 1990-91", of the Welsh Office publication "Statistics of Education in Wales: Schools, No. 5 1991", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies which were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies which submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. David Hunt: Since 9 April, my Department has conducted only one relevant tender exercise. Three companies were invited to tender for the design and programming of a software application. No bids were submitted without prior invitation. The contract was awarded to Softa and Company Ltd. for a period of four months. Information relating to the value of the contract is commercial-in-confidence.

Quangos

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will update the information given in "Public Bodies 1991" (HMSO) on quangos in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: "Public Bodies 1992" is expected to be published by HMSO in January 1993 and the relevant information is now being updated.

Health Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what source of information is available to Welsh health authorities as purchasers on comparative prices for standard orthopaedic operations; what guidelines are given to health authorities in relation to baseload and marginal prices in quotation and final accounting procedures both between health authorities and within health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Providers routinely inform their purchasers of proposed prices to inform contract negotiations. On request, they also make in-year information on prices available to purchasers. Where the service is provided, tariffs include separately identified prices for orthopaedic procedures.

Guidance on setting prices was issued to health authorities in October 1990. This emphasised that providers must price their services on the basis of full costs. Marginal costs should be used only when providers are able to offer additional services, in-year, making use of unplanned spare capacity. Activity purchased in this way should be reflected in a future year's contract on a full and not marginal cost basis.

The detailed accounting requirements which health authorities should follow in completing their annual accounts and financial returns are given in the "Health Authority Manual for Accounts".

Health Promotion Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the relocation of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales from Brunel house, Fitzalan place, Cardiff; and what (a) financial and (b) policy considerations played a part in the decision on the site for relocation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Health Promotion Authority for Wales moved to Brunel house in 1988 as a temporary measure while the authority's long-term accommodation needs were properly established. At that time the authority had between 50 and 60 staff. The authority's activities have expanded since that time and it is apparent that larger accommodation is now required.

The authority has undertaken a comprehensive option appraisal of alternative premises to meet its long-term accommodation requirements. The lowest cost was selected from a short list of properties meeting the authority's requirements.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Livestock Auctioneers

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to prohibit the practice of livestock auctioneers keeping money for farmers from livestock sales at market on trust in bank accounts which are already overdrawn prior to the transaction.

Mr. Curry: This is not a matter for Government intervention.

Pesticides

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to call for a world-wide ban on the use of organochlorine pesticides.

Mr. Soames: Given the diverse range of crops, pests and climatic conditions it is for each country to decide whether pesticides best meet its particular pest control and environmental needs. The use of persistent organochlorine pesticides is already prohibited throughout the European Community. The United Kingdom also protects the third world countries from the importation of hazardous pesticides by participating in the United Nations Environment Programme/Food and Agriculture Organisation's prior informed consent scheme.

Genetically Engineered Food

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the foodstuffs that have been genetically engineered which are currently on sale to the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The following products, produced by or containing genetically modified organisms, have been examined by the relevant expert committees advising the Government in this area and cleared for use in foodstuffs —a yeast for use in baking and three different preparations of the enzyme, chymosin, which is used in cheese manufacture. Once cleared for use, the sale of the products is a matter for the manufacturers concerned and their customers.

Data Centre for Beef

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to provide funding for the data centre for beef.

Mr. Soames: This important industry initiative has attracted considerable support. As a commercial venture with potential benefits for all producers, the board of the animal data centre should continue to look to the users for funds.

Veterinary Investigation Centres

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of veterinary investigation centres, by county, in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979.

Mr. Gummer: In 1979 in England and Wales veterinary investigation centres were operating in Aberystwyth (Dyfed), Bangor (Gwynedd), Bristol (Somerset), Cambridge (Cambridgeshire), Cardiff (south Glamorgan), Carmarthen (Dyfed), Chester (Cheshire), Gloucester (Gloucestershire), Leeds (West Yorkshire), Lincoln (Lincolnshire), Liverpool (Lancashire), Newcastle (Tyne and Wear, Northampton (Northamptonshire), Norwich (Norfolk), Penrith (Cumbria), Reading (Berkshire), Shrewsbury (Shropshire), Starcross (Devon), Sutton Bonington (Nottinghamshire), Thirsk (North Yorkshire), Truro (Cornwall), Weybridge (Surrey), Winchester (Hampshire), Worcester (Worcestershire) and Wye (Kent).

In 1980, the centre at Weybridge was closed and the area it covered was divided between the Reading and Wye centres. In 1985, the centre at Liverpool was relocated to Preston (Lancashire).

In 1986, the centres at Cardiff and Northampton were closed. The areas they covered were taken over by Carmarthen and by Sutton Bonington respectively. The centres at Gloucester and Leeds were closed and the areas they covered were divided respectively between Worcester and Bristol and between Thirsk and Northallerton. In 1991, the centres at Bangor and Lincoln were closed. The areas they covered were divided respectively between Shrewsbury and Aberystwyth and between Sutton Bonington and Thirsk. The centre at Wye was closed and its area was taken over by Winchester.

This rationalisation of the service has allowed the centres to be continuously upgraded to meet the changing needs of the industry. Veterinary investigation centres in Scotland are attached to Scottish agricultural colleges and are not listed.

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that copies of each of the replies to the consultation paper on the future of the Milk Marketing Board are placed in the Library.

Mr. Gummer: The consultation was carried out on the basis that the consultees' views confidential. Any who wish to make their views public can do so, or will have already done so.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies which were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies which submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. Curry: This Department has issued one invitation to tender for the supply of computer hardware and software in the period since 9 April 1992. The details are as follows: description of services—geographical information system; number of companies invited to tender—26; number of companies submitting an uninvited bid—nil; company awarded contract—ESRI (UK) Ltd.; period of contract—10 years.

The value of the contract cannot be provided as the information is confidential.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Sherry

Mr. Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy at the European Council of Finance Ministers to press for a reduction in the difference in excise duties between British sherry and Spanish sherry.

Sir John Cope: At the Council meeting on 19 October the United Kingdom and Spain reached an agreement on the duties to be charged on British and Spanish sherry. The agreement provides for duty differential between the two products, to be reduced to 25 per cent. by 1 January 1996, the name "British Sherry" being discontinued by the same date.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total amount of land, in hectares, affected by transfers under the conditional exemption system in each year since the Inheritance Tax Act 1984 in Wales.

Mr. Dorrell: The total area of land of outstanding scenic interest in Wales which has been conditionally exempted from inheritance tax or capital transfer tax since 1976 is estimated at 1,500 hectares. As there are only five cases benefiting from conditional exemption, the normal rules of taxpayer confidentiality prevent any further breakdown being made available.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to require the owner of land granted inheritance tax exemptions under the Inheritance Tax Act 1984 to make public the rights of access to the general public which have been granted as a result of the inheritance tax exemptions.

Mr. Dorrell: The owner of land that has been conditionally exempted from inheritance tax or capital transfer tax is required to publicise the agreed public access arrangements. In addition, the appropriate heritage advisory agency is able to supply information about public access to heritage land including conditionally exempt land, although land will not be identified as conditionally exempt.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue forgone to income tax if MIRAS were available at a basic rate of 20 per cent. instead of the present 25 per cent., and the consequent saving.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost of mortgage interest tax relief in 1992-93 is provisionally estimated to be £5·3 billion. If relief were available at 20 per cent. the cost would be about £4·2 billion, a reduction of £1·1 billion.

Recession

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when is his estimate of the beginning of the recession in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on the relative timing of the onset of the recession in the United Kingdom and other OECD countries.

Mr. Nelson: A recession is usually defined as a period of two or more successive quarters of falling output. Taking the first quarter in which output falls to be the onset of recession, following are the dates for the onset of the recessions in the United Kingdom and other OECD countries over the past two years.

Country	Date of onset of recession
United Kingdom	1990 Q3
United States	1990 Q3
Canada	1990 Q2
Australia	1990 Q2
Denmark	1990 Q4
Finland	1990 Q2
Germany	1991 Q2
Greece	1990 Q2
Sweden	1990 Q2
Switzerland	1991 Q1

Housing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the market value and the replacement value of the private housing stock as a percentage of money gross domestic product, for each year since 1962.

Mr. Portillo: The most appropriate measure of the market value of the private housing stock for which data are available is the value of residential buildings, published in the personal sector balance sheet. The concept of replacement value of the housing stock is not clear. However, one indirect measure which might be considered is the personal sector net capital stock in dwellings at current replacement cost. Land is included in the balance sheet measure, but not in the capital stock measure. Latest estimates of these series are available on the CSO database which may be accessed through the House of Commons Library. The relevant database identifiers are:

Market value	ALLN
Net capital stock	EXGV
"Money GDP"	CAOB

EC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the United Kingdom net contribution to the EC budget.

Sir John Cope: The latest estimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the European Community budget in 1992 is £2,599 million. This was published in the "Statement on the 1992 Community Budget" (Cm 1948).

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of EC agricultural support budget is spent in (a) Germany, (b) France and (c) Italy, respectively.

Sir John Cope: The European Commission's financial report for 1991 on the guarantee section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund shows the shares of agricultural market support receipts for (a) Germany, (b) France and (c) Italy to be 16·3 per cent., 19·8 per cent. and 16·2 per cent. respectively.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the savings to his Department of taxing invalidity benefit and the numbers of people who would be worse off expressed as a percentage of the total numbers of people on invalidity benefit.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate can be made of the number of people who would have an income tax liability whose sole income was invalidity benefit if invalidity benefit were liable to tax;

(2) what would be the yield in a full year from making invalidity benefit liable to tax.

Mr. Dorrell: Provisional estimates are that the yield, at 1992-93 levels, from making invalidity benefit taxable would be about £450 million.

Some 650,000 people or almost half of those receiving invalidity benefit would have an income tax liability. Of these about 70,000 would have invalidity benefit as their sole source of taxable income.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the reports for 1991-92 published by the executive units in Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Sir John Cope: The framework document "Next Steps: A Framework for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise" requires the heads of the Department's 30 executive units to provide the chairman of Customs and Excise with a report on its unit's performance annually, including against key targets, and to publish it in a suitable form. Reports for the year 1991-92 have now been published, and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Disabled Passengers Scheme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to lay the appointed day order repealing the disabled passengers scheme; what assessment he has made of the effects of its abolition on disabled people; and if he will provide details of consultation between his Department and organisations representing disabled people prior to announcing these plans.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have been asked to reply.

We shall make and lay the appointed day order repealing the disabled passengers scheme shortly.

The order will ensure that current beneficiaries under the disabled passengers scheme will not lose their entitlement to exemption from vehicle excise duty as a result of the repeal.

The repeal of the scheme was announced by my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General on 7 May, in an answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) shortly before the publication of the Finance Bill 1992. The decision to repeal the disabled passenger scheme was taken because, as a result of new social security benefits introduced on 6 April this year, it was no longer possible to administer the scheme.

HOME DEPARTMENT

London Parks (Policing)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the sums paid for the past 10 years by the Departments of the Environment and of National Heritage to the Metropolitan police for the policing of each of London's parks; what are the sums proposed for the next financial year; and if he will show the percentage increase, in real terms, for each year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Hyde park is the only London park policed by the Metropolitan police service for which a charge is made to the Department of the Environment and in 1992 the Department of National Heritage. Charges are set out in the table.

From 1 April 1993 the Royal parks police will assume responsibility for policing Hyde park.

(1982-83 = 100 per cent.)

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the refusal of the United Kingdom to grant asylum to two Chinese women democracy activists in September.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There is no provision for receiving applications for asylum from abroad, but we are prepared to consider granting entry clearance for the purpose of making an asylum application where a person falls within the definition of a refugee in article 1A of the 1951 United Nations refugees convention and has close ties with the United Kingdom such as to make it the most appropriate country of refuge. On 28 August this year, Amnesty International wrote to the Home Office asylum division asking for the asylum applications of these two women, who were in Hong Kong, to be considered in the United Kingdom. The information provided by Amnesty International was carefully considered and the Hong Kong authorities were consulted. It was established that the applications had been fully considered by the Hong Kong authorities, who did not accept that either applicant would be at risk of persecution if returned to China. There were no grounds for taking a different view of the cases from the Hong Kong authorities, who had had the benefit of interviewing the applicants and hearing their representations at first hand. Neither applicant had any ties with the United Kingdom. Amnesty International was therefore informed on 4 September that there were no grounds for granting them asylum in the United Kingdom.

Asylum Bill 1991

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals of his Department's staff worked on the Asylum Bill 1991 (a) in Committee and (b) in the Home Office; and how many person-hours were used in each case.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Within the immigration and nationality department three members of staff worked on the Asylum Bill in 1991-92, for the greater part of their time, two over the period October 1991 to March 1992 and one over the period August 1991 to March 1992. This work included time spent in preparing the Bill and in attending the Committee. The Bill was in Committee for some 27 hours. Other members of the Department were consulted on aspects of the Bill as part of their normal duties. In addition, three members of the legal adviser's branch of the Home Office worked on the Asylum Bill for up to 50 per cent. of their time.

Police Manpower

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table showing for each police force area in England and Wales, and for the whole of England and Wales, the number of police officers in the authorised establishment at (a) 1 April 1979, (b) 1 April 1990, (c) 1 April 1991 and (d) 1 April 1992 and the percentage increase in each case.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is set out in the table.

1. The police establishment of the Kent constabulary will increase by 40 officers on 1 January 1993.
2. The police establishment of the City of London police was reduced at the request of the police authority.

Safe Cities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to create any new safer cities areas; and what are his plans for the existing safer cities areas after 31 March 1994.

Mr. Jack: The safer cities programme was originally intended to create 20 local projects, all of which have now been established. We remain committed to doubling the number of safer cities projects to 40, when circumstances and resources enable us to do so.

The first 16 projects to have been established have already been guaranteed funding until March 1994. No decision has been made concerning their futures beyond that date. The four most recently established projects—in Derby, Hammersmith and Fulham, Leicester and Middlesbrough—are planned to continue in 1994-95.

Probation Service

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met representatives of (a) the Association of Chief Officers of Probation or (b) the National Association of Probation Officers; and what was the outcome of their discussions.

Mr. Jack: The Secretary of State last met representatives of the Association of Chief Officers of Probation in July 1992. The discussion covered a range of current topics relating to the changes in and expansion of probation work including the implementation of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, partnerships with the independent sector and the introduction of national standards. The Secretary of State has not met representatives of the National Association of Probation Officers this year.

I have met representatives of the Association of Chief Officers of Probation on various occasions since my appointment. These meetings have covered a number of current topics about probation work. I met representatives of the National Association of Probation Officers in July; this meeting also covered a range of topics.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation staff by grade were in full-time employment during 1991 in England and Wales.

Mr. Jack: The number of full-time equivalent staff employed by the probation service, by grade and in post on 31 December 1991, was as follows:

	Number
Chief Probation Officer	55
Deputy Chief Probation Officer	24
Assistant Chief Probation Officer	210
Senior Probation Officer	1,163
Main-grade Probation Officer	5,702
Probation Ancillary	1,864
Research and Information Officers	64
Other staff (Professional, Administrative, Clerical and Secretarial)	5,250

Car Crime

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the incidence of car crime in England and Wales in each year since 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The information reques[illegible] is set out in the table. Figures are for offences recorded by the police.

	Theft/ unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle	Theft from a motor vehicle
1982	351,230	449,037
1983	325,699	424,238

Sentencing Policy

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice his Department is offering sentencers and others on the extent to which judges and magistrates are expected to take previous offences into account when determining the level of seriousness of an offence.

Mr. Jack: The criteria for determining the seriousness of an offence for the purpose of deciding on an appropriate sentence are set out in the Criminal Justice Act 1991. However, it is for the courts alone to interpret the provisions of the Act as they apply to individual cases in the light of all the circumstances of the offence and the offender and any guidance which the Court of Appeal may issue in due course. In addition, a substantial programme of training for sentencers on all matters relating to the Act has been provided under the auspices of the Judicial Studies Board.

Public Houses (Violence)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the trend of violence against landlords and landladies in public houses; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many physical attacks on landlords or landladies of public houses were reported in 1991;

(3) if he will make it his policy to encourage magistrates to exclude from licensed premises those who are found guilty of violence against landlords or landladies of public houses.

Mr. Jack: No central record is kept of crimes of violence against licensees and their staff on licensed premises. I am aware of concern about such violence, and that a number of steps have been taken by the licensed trade, in partnership with other agencies, against the problem. The Licensed Premises (Exclusion of Certain Persons) Act 1980 enables magistrates in England and Wales, when sentencing a person convicted of violence or threatened violence on licensed premises to make an "exclusion order" prohibiting him or her from entering those or any other specified premises for a period of between three months and two years without the express consent of the licensee. Sentencing in individual cases is entirely a matter for the courts in the light of all the circumstances of the offence and the offender.

Drugs

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the drug prevention projects funded under his Department's drug prevention initiatives together with (a) the current level of annual funds of each, (b) the start date of each and (c) the date to which funds have been agreed in each case.

Mr. Jack: There have been 20 local drugs prevention teams established between October 1990 and March 1992 under the drugs prevention initiative. The annual fund for each team excluding salaries and running costs is £85,000. This comprises £75,000 to grant-aid local drugs prevention projects and £10,000 for publicity. An additional £15,000 to support activities undertaken during European Drug Prevention Week has been allocated to each team for this financial year 1992-93. Funds have been agreed initially for a period of three years in each case. Details on the individual teams are as follows:

Local drugs prevention team	Start date	Funds agreed until
Brighton and Hove	29 October 1990	29 October 1993

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the projects that have been set up under the drugs prevention initiative and the cost of each of these projects; and how long he intends these projects to be operational.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 October 1992]: The 20 local drugs prevention teams were established between October 1990 and March 1992 for initial three-year terms. The position of the teams beyond that period is currently under active review. The effectiveness of the drug prevention initiative, including the work of the 20 teams, is being fully evaluated. A structural review has been commissioned to be carried out by the university of Bristol and a private sector consultancy. The results of the review will be available in June next year. The average annual cost of each team, including its grants and publicity budget, is approximately £200,000. Details are as follows:

Local Drugs Prevention Team	Contracted until
Brighton and Hove	29 October 1993
Lewisham	19 November 1993

Identity Cards

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the case for introduction of an identity card scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Although we remain ready to consider any arguments which may be advanced in favour of introducing an identity card system, we are not at present persuaded that the case for such a system has been made.

Her Majesty's Prison, Manchester

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is in a position to make a statement about the market testing of Her Majesty's prison, Manchester.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Work has now been completed on the specification for the operation of Manchester prison. This forms part of the invitation to tender issued to the prison service and potential contractors from the private sector. A copy has been placed in the Library. Following the evaluation process, we aim to announce a decision on the successful bidder in early spring 1993. It is our intention that the part of the prison that is currently being extensively refurbished shall be ready to accept prisoners from autumn 1993.

Prisoners (Injuries)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken by the prison service to reduce the level of suicide and self-injury by prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison service's policies in this complex and important area were recently described in an information paper, "Caring for prisoners at risk of suicide and self-injury: the way forward", which was published on 20 August 1992. I have today arranged for a copy of the paper to be placed in the Library of the House. The paper outlines in detail the measures being taken across the prison service as a whole and gives examples of some local schemes. I very much support the efforts being made by the prison staff, working in partnership with voluntary agencies and increasingly with prisoners themselves, to tackle the problems associated with suicide and self-injury.

Discretionary Life Sentences

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rules he has made governing the proceedings of the parole board when considering the cases of discretionary life sentence prisoners who are eligible for consideration under the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1991; and how the board will be constituted when considering such cases.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The parole board rules 1992 were made on 31 August 1992 under section 32(5) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991. They will come into force on 1 October. A copy of the rules has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

When considering these cases, the parole board will sit in panels of three. I have written to the chairman of the board asking him to bear in mind the following criteria when selecting panel members.

Chairman

Panels should be chaired by a High Court judge member of the Board where cases involve:

terrorist offences;
the attempted murder or wounding of a police or prison officer;
the sexual assault or mutilation and killing of a child (ie in the same incident);
serial rape;
manslaughter following release from prison on a previous manslaughter sentence;
offences giving rise to multiple life sentences.

Otherwise, a circuit judge or recorder may take the chair.

Second member

The second member should generally be a psychiatrist. But, if there is conclusive medical evidence that no serious concern exists about the prisoner's state of mind at the time of the offence or subsequently during imprisonment, a psychologist or probation officer may be appointed.

Third member

The third member of the panel should be a lay member, a criminologist, or a psychologist or probation officer (where he or she is not already the second member).

Prisoners

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, columns 64-65, (1) how many of the 616 prisoners came from each police area responsible for initiating action towards prosecutions; and in each case how many were remand prisoners and how many convicted prisoners;

(2) if he will show in respect of each police authority area how many of those held in police cells were remand prisoners and how many were convicted prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 23 October 1992]: The information collected centrally does not separate remand and convicted prisoners held in police cells, but most would have been held on remand. It is also not possible to apply the available data to the Crown prosecution service areas, but the table gives the prisoner in police cells position for 16 October by prison service establishment. This may give the hon. Member a clearer indication of the origin of the prisoners concerned.

Prison Service

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what his Department's estimates are for the potential redundancy costs of teaching staff currently employed by local education authorities arising from changes in the provision of educational services in Her Majesty's prison service;

(2) who will have responsibility for redundancy payments of teaching staff in the event of changes in the provision of educational services in Her Majesty's prison service leading to existing contracts with further education colleges being changed;

(3) what his Department's estimates are for the overall financial costs of the proposed changes in the provision of educational services in prison service establishments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 October 1992]: The prison service has given notice that it intends to invite competitive tenders for the provision of education to inmates in prisons and young offender institutions in England and Wales, for which it is responsible, with effect from 1 April 1993. This is consequent upon changes in the further education responsibilities of local education authorities resulting from the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 and is consistent with the Government's policies on market testing, as set out in the White Paper "Competing for Quality" (Cm 1730).

Competition between the public and private sector is directed to achieving better service and value for money. It will be possible to quantify the overall benefits in quality and cost only when the tendering exercise is complete.

All existing providers are being invited to tender, and any possible consequential redundancy costs cannot therefore yet be accurately assessed. Such costs would fall to the employer of existing prison education staff, normally the local education authority or a college of further education. They would only arise if the existing provider was unseccessful in the competitive tender and it was not possible to avoid redundancy, for example, by redeployment of staff to other areas or agreed transfers to the new contractor.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what costs were incurred by his Department in employing outside consultants to advise on changes to be made in the provision of educational services in prison service establishments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 October 1992]: Consultants were employed to provide advice to the prison service on the implications for the provision of education in prisons in England and Wales of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992. The cost was £27,500, exclusive of value added tax.

SCOTLAND

Football Stadiums

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will circularise planning authorities urging them to give sympathetic consideration to applications for new football stadiums in greenfield sites, particularly in cases where there is no feasible alternative for football clubs to meet with the requirements and time scale of the Taylor report.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Certain of Scotland's football clubs are required to have all-seater stadiums by August 1994 in line with recommendations contained in the Taylor report. The planning system should not obstruct this requirement.

The Government's policy, as set out in Scottish Development Department circular 17/1985, is that planning permission should always be granted, having regard to all material considerations, unless there are sound and clear cut reasons for refusal. A draft national planning policy guideline on sport and recreation, containing further guidance on the implications of the Taylor report, will be issued for public consultation in the spring.

As with any other applications for planning permission, the football clubs may appeal to the Secretary of State if they are aggrieved at a planning authority's decision or if the planning authority fails to determine an application timeously.

Water Authority Land

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total acreage of land presently belonging to Scotland's water authorities, broken down into each authority area.

Sir Hector Monro: This information is not held centrally.

Scottish Nuclear

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any intention of privatising Scottish Nuclear.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Roads

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to introduce experimental traffic measures at Dairsie.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Traffic-calming measures for Dairsie have recently been approved by the Scottish Office roads directorate and the necessary signing/road marking authorisation and revised speed limit order are presently being processed. On completion of these procedures, the "village gateway" measures will be implemented as soon as is practical.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the progress of the Auchtermuchty bypass.

Mr. James Douglas-Hamilton: The preparation work for the Auchtermuchty bypass is at a stage where it could be quickly completed, but no funding opportunity has presently been identified for the scheme and therefore no further action is being taken at this time.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the capacity of the trunk roads which pass through Cupar and their ability to accommodate projected traffic flows by the year 2000.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A transportation study to address trunk road capacity and other matters in Cupar was recently carried out by the Scottish Office roads directorate and Fife regional council. This exercise included consideration of both a bypass and an inner relief road in relation to the medium and longer-term needs of the A91 trunk road. An evaluation of the findings of the report is currently under way to determine how best to meet the requirements of Cupar and the trunk road.

Housing, East Lothian

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the availability of housing to rent in East Lothian; and if he will make a supplementary housing capital allocation to East Lothian district council for the current year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is the responsibility of East Lothian district council to consider the housing needs of its area, including housing for rent. The Government took full account of East Lothian's needs, as set out in its housing plan and housing capital programme, when decisions were taken on East Lothian's housing capital allocations for 1992-93.

All resources currently available for housing capital expenditure in Scotland in 1992-93 have been distributed. If further resources become available, the relative housing needs of East Lothian will continue to be taken fully into account.

Haddington Sheriff Court

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the backlog of cases at Haddington sheriff court relative to other sheriff courts; and if he intends to take any steps to improve the efficiency and accommodation of the court in Haddington.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Ayr (Mr. Gallie) on 15 July 1992, Official Report, columns 708-10, setting out the waiting periods for civil proofs and summary criminal trials for each sheriff court in Scotland. Haddington is within the national average for each category. The speedy and efficient disposal of sheriff court business is a matter for sheriffs principal. Witness accommodation at Haddington has been improved over recent years and steps are being taken to provide better interview facilities for solicitors and their clients. The main courtroom will be refurbished when resources permit.

Homelessness

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of homeless persons in Scotland and each local authority area for (a) the most recent date for which figures are available and (b) 1979-80.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 October 1992]: Table 2 of the statistical bulletin HSG/1992/3, "Operation of the Homeless Legislation in Scotland 1979/80 to 1990/91: District Analyses", shows the number of applicant households, by local authority district, for the years 1979-80 and 1990-91, the latest date for which this information is available. Copies of the bulletin are available in the House Library.

Information on the number of persons in each applicant household is available only from 1990, in case returns supplied by authorities to the Department. The table gives for 1990-91, by district, the number of households for whom case returns have been received and the total number of persons in these households.

Housing

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount of capital expenditure on housing for each of the financial years 1979-80 to 1991-92 inclusive in cash and real terms.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Recycling

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make supplementary credit approvals available as hypothecated local authority expenditure to enable local authorities to engage in recycling projects.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 26 October 1992]: No. As in previous years, local authorities in Scotland will each receive a capital consent allocation for its general services capital programme. Allocations will be determined in light of the proposals for capital expenditure contained in the detailed financial plans submitted by authorities. Thereafter, within the limits of their consent, it will be for local authorities to determine their own priorities for capital expenditure, including on recycling projects.

Health Care

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what private psychiatric services are offered by Grampian Healthcare.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 26 October 1992]: None.

Organic Farming

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken and what further measures he proposes to promote organic farming in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 October 1992]: Through Food from Britain, the Government set up and now fund the United Kingdom register of organic food standards to determine national standards, codes of practice and provide credibility to certification procedures. The Government also fund a wide range of research relating to organic farming, from strategic research into production methods through to wider issues such as the environmental impact of organic farming systems.

In addition, Scottish farmers of organic produce can benefit under a number of schemes open to farmers generally. These include the farm and conservation grant scheme; set-aside arrangements and the group marketing grant scheme. The need for any further measures will be considered in the context of the implementation of the European Community agriculture and environment regulations.

Forth Valley Health Board

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much money has been spent on refurbishing Forth Valley health board headquarters over each of the past five years;

(2) if he will give a detailed breakdown of the total expenditure on refurbishing Forth Valley health board headquarters over the past five years.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 26 October 1992]: The total expenditure on refurbishing Forth Valley health board's headquarters at 33 Spittal street and 9 Gladstone place, Stirling over the past five years is as follows:

EMPLOYMENT

Pit Closures

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions she has had with (a) the chairman of British Coal, (b) members of the National Economic Development Council, (c) the director-general of the Confederation of British Industry, (d) the Major Energy Users Council, and (e) the coal industry trades unions on the implications of the coal industry pit closure plans.

Mr. McLoughlin: Employment Ministers have not met representatives of these bodies to discuss the pit closures. There has been a meeting with the training enterprise councils involved to discuss what help can be given.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what day her Department first made preparations to deal with the impending pit closures.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 26 October 1992]: My Department has been aware for some months of possible future pit closures and has been involved in contingency planning.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions she has had with the European social affairs and regional Commissioners in regard to the implications for EC employment and regional aid programmes of the pit closure programme.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

I have been in contact with Mr. Millan, the Commissioner with responsibility for regional policies, and discussions have begun at official level.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the level of resignations amongst directors of training and enterprise councils in the 12-month period to the end of June.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the year to the end of June 1992, the turnover of TEC directors—excluding chairmen—was 19 per cent. Although information on the reasons for these moves is not held centrally, the common reasons are moves around the country, retirement or changes of job.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the adequacy of the present level of funding for TECs to meet current demand for training programmes for young people; and what estimate she has made of the effect of any budget cuts.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced to the House on 7 July, Official Report, columns 171-72, new measures to establish a national system for monitoring the numbers of young people seeking training. There is currently no shortage of funds for TECs to meet the demand for youth training.

Unemployment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures she is taking to alleviate hardship resulting from concentrations of high unemployment.

Mr. McLoughlin: The social security system provides comprehensive support for unemployed people in all parts of the country through unemployment benefit, income support and help with housing costs. The social fund provides a mixture of interest-free loans and non-repayable grants to meet the costs of specific items. To help unemployed people to find work as quickly as possible, we are now offering the widest range of help and advice ever made available to unemployed people.

Medicopharma UK

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 348, whether Medicopharma UK has now met all claims for redundancy payments; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Redundancy payments have been made to all entitled employees, initially by the company and, following the company's insolvency, by the Department's redundancy payments service. In addition, some claims in relation to protective awards made by an industrial tribunal are currently being processed.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she intends to take any action to speed up the hearing of industrial tribunal cases at London, North;

(2) how many industrial tribunals were lodged each year in the area covered by London, North industrial tribunals, Woburn place for the period 1987-1991; what proportion of these proceeded to hearing; what number are settled; and what number were withdrawn before hearing;

(3) what is the average time between the lodgement of an industrial tribunal IT1 form, and its being heard at London, North tribunals each year for the period 1987 to 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: The listing of industrial tribunal cases for hearing depends on the availability of tribunal chairmen and I am informed that there has recently been a shortage of chairmen in the London, North region. Appointment of chairmen is the responsibility of my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor and in an effort to improve the situation, five new chairmen—one full time and four part time—have been appointed in the past six months. I understand that further appointments are under consideration. London, North has also adopted an intensive case listing policy in an effort to accelerate the throughput of cases.

Tribunal statistics are held for financial rather than calendar years and the tables have been compiled on that basis. The number of applications lodged at London, North is shown in table 1. Table 2 shows the outcomes of cases dealt with. I regret that information on the waiting time between a claim being lodged and heard is not available in the precise form requested. The figures in table 3 show the percentage of applications coming to first hearing within six, eight, 10, 12, 20 and 26 weeks respectively of receipt of the application.

Employment Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the Employment Service.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the papers published by the Employment Service in the last 12 months. This is something which falls to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

I have attached to this letter an annex which sets out the details you have asked for. If there is a particular publication which you are interested in please let me know and I will ensure you receive a copy promptly.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Research and Evaluation:
The Employment Service Research and Evaluation branch carries out internal studies and commissions studies by external contractors. With the exception of those produced by some contractors the reports of these studies are not published as on sale documents. Copies are placed in the House of Commons Library and sent to people who ask for them. The following lists the reports which have been issued in the past year and, where appropriate, the name of the external contractor concerned. The items marked * are available on sale.

Financial Services

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will supply figures for the numbers employed in the financial services sector for each of the past three years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is as follows.

Employees in employment: Great Britain

June of each year	Thousands Banking, finance and auxiliary activities[1]
1990	671·1
1991	648·7
1992	623·7

Doncaster Travel-to-work Area

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will outline the current travel-to-work area boundaries for the Doncaster area; and if her Department has any plans for reviewing them.

Mr. McLoughlin: The current travel-to-work areas, TTWA, have been compiled from 1981 ward boundaries, using data from the 1981 census of population. The wards for the Doncaster TTWA are as follows: Ardwick, Armthorpe, Askern, Balby, Bentley, Central, Bentley, North Road, Bessacarr, Central, Eddington and Warmsworth, Hatfield, Intake, Richmond, Rossington, South East, Southern Parks, Stainforth, Thorne, Town Field, Wheatley—which are all in the Doncaster local authority district—and Haxey, which is in the Boothferry local authority district.

A travel-to-work area review is planned and will take into account any significant changes in commuting patterns in the United Kingdom. It will use the special workplace statistics from the 1991 census of population scheduled for release in November 1993. Draft TTWAs are expected to be available approximately six to nine months after that.

Manufacturing Employment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish a table showing the absolute and percentage change in the level of manufacturing employment in each Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country since October 1990; and if she will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relative performance according to this indicator.

Mr. McLoughlin: Comparable information from the OECD is available only for the total of the energy, manufacturing and construction industries. Manufacturing is the lagest component but its share in the total differs between member states. Changes since September 1990 are shown in the table.

Changes in civilian employment in production and construction industries between September 1990 and June 1992

[1] Latest data available is at December 1991.

[2] Figures available are not seasonally adjusted.

[3] Latest data available is at March 1992.

[4] Figures exclude participants in work related Government training programmes (for which separate industry estimates are not available).

Source: OECD, except United Kingdom (Employment Department).

The level of employment is not the only or the best indicator of the health of the country's manufacturing sector. It would be wrong to ignore improvements in productivity for instance. A better measure is provided by the ratio of manufacturing output to total gross domestic product. This has remained broadly constant in the United Kingdom over the past 10 years, as it has in a number of other countries including France, Italy and west Germany.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by her Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (B) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies who were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies who submitted a bid without prior invitation by her Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Employment Department group has issued a substantial number of tenders for the supply of computer hardware, software and associated services since 9 April 1992. Details of these in the form requested could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Benefit Disqualifications

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list by unemployment benefit under each paragraph of section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975 for the latest month for which information can be obtained for the Doncaster area (a) how many unemployed people were disqualified for unemployment benefit, (b) what were the reasons given by his office, (c) what was the length of disqualification imposed, (d) how many unemployed people appealed against his office's decision and (e) what was the result of the appeal.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the latest available information on the number and length of unemployment benefit disqualifications, and subsequent appeals under Section 20(1) of the Social Security Act in the Doncaster area. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Unfortunately information is not available in the form you have requested. We compile information on disqualifications by region; the Doncaster area is included in our Yorkshire and Humberside region and quarterly rather than monthly intervals. A record is not kept of the length of disqualification periods imposed under Section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975. We collect information on the number of appeals made in each region broken down by the numbers reviewed and allowed by adjudication officers and the numbers submitted to social security appeal tribunals.

During the quarter ending 30 June 1992 the number of people in Yorkshire and Humberside disqualified for receiving unemployment benefit under section 20(1) of the Social Security Act was as follows:—

Leaving employment voluntarily without just cause	4,002
Employment lost due to misconduct	1,746
Refusal of employment without good cause	14
Neglect to avail oneself of an offer of employment	26
Refusal to comply with written instructions	Nil

Although voluntary termination of approved training without just cause, misconduct whilst on approved training, refusal of an offer of approved training without good cause and neglect to avail oneself of approved training can also lead to disqualification under Section 20(1) a record is not kept of the number of disqualifications under these sub-heads.

In this same period the number of appeals processed in Yorkshire and Humberside was as follows:—

Total of all appeals received	563
Appeals reviewed and revised	121
Appeals submitted to Social Security Appeal Tribunal	405

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Forensic Science Laboratory, Newtownbreda

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what plans he has to rebuild the forensic science laboratory at Newtownbreda following the recent bomb damage; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to re-locate the forensic science laboratory from Newtownbreda; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: The Northern Ireland forensic science laboratory is functioning from temporary premises. A full study is being carried out of the options for permanent accommodation for the laboratory.

Firearms

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new firearms licences were issued in each of the past five years; how many applications were refused in each of these years; and how many were issued on appeal to the Secretary of State in each of those years.

Mr. Mates: Firearms licensing is the responsibility of the Chief Constable of the RUC. There is a statutory right of appeal from the Chief Constable's decision to the Secretary of State.

The table sets out the total numbers of firearm licences issued, refused and issued on appeal to the Secretary of State. These figures relate to all licences—new licences, variations of licence and renewal of licences—since it is not possible to provide figures on new licences only without incurring disproportionate cost.

Year	Licences issued	Licences refused	Licences issued[2] on appeal
1987	41,161	781	133
1988	33,815	821	122
1989	27,923	948	153
1990	39,810	773	112
1991	33,432	343	70
[1]1992	19,630	412	43

[1] up to 30 September 1992

[2] includes those resolved by Chief Constable following submission of appeal

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the date of the terrorist bomb at the forensic science laboratory at Newtownbreda; and how many owner/occupiers of homes have now received an interim compensation payment of £2,000 or more as a result of damage caused to their homes by this explosion.

Mr. Mates: The date was 23 September 1992. By 25 October, the Compensation Agency had authorised interim payments in all cases where it was possible to do so. The total number authorised in the case of owner/occupiers was 45, of which five amounted to £2,000 or more.

Students' Unions

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the amount of public funds allocated to the students' unions in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years; what proposals he has to abolish for students at the Queen's university of Belfast and the Ulster university, compulsory membership of the students' unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Public funds are not allocated direct by Government to students' unions in Northern Ireland. However, the amounts which have been allocated by universities and colleges of education in Northern Ireland to students' unions were as follows:

	Universities £	Colleges of Education £
1987-88	917,612	62,293
1988-89	886,315	65,915
1989-90	1,088,505	69,350
1990-91	1,241,948	73,500
1991-92	1,350,000	77,900

Information on the amounts paid by further education colleges is not available.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education recently announced that he is bringing forward proposals on the voluntary membership of students' unions and consideration is now being given to the options available for the implementation of those proposals.

Births

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many babies were born at (a) Ards hospital, (b) Bangor hospital and (c) Ulster hospital in each of the past five years.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

	Live births					Still births
Hospital	1987	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	1987	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92

Local Government Staff Commission

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the reasons for the variance from year to year in the budget of the Local Government Staff Commission for Northern Ireland; and what action he will take to avoid substantial increases in costs to local government authorities.

Mr. Atkins: The variance in the budget of the Local Government Staff Commission for Northern Ireland in recent years can be attributed to the development of its role in assisting district councils and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in a range of services connected with the recruitment, training and terms and conditions of employment of officers.

Approximately 14,000 people are employed by district councils and the NIHE. Under the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 and the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1992, the staff commission has a statutory duty to, among other things, establish advisory appointment panels, draw up codes of procedure for recruitment and promotion; assist in the development of training of officers and monitor the fair employment practices of district councils.

The staff commission carried out an organisational review in 1991 which identified a need for the commission to restructure and to take on additional staff in order to be able efficiently and effectively to discharge its statutory functions. This it has done: it now offers a comprehensive package of services delivered by a team of professionally qualified officers which assists councils and the NIHE in the full range of personnel services.

The increased costs of the staff commission therefore relate primarily to the remuneration of new staff, although the commission did move to new premises this year and the rental and furnishing costs associated with this are reflected in the current year's budget.

Although the commission's budget has risen substantially over the past few years, I am entirely satisfied that it is necessary in order to ensure that it is in a position to help councils and the NIHE meet their statutory obligations and also to enable it to assist them to enhance and develop their reputation as good employers.

Lough Foyle

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what damage to the environment has been caused by the recent leak from the Du Pont synthetics factory into Lough Foyle; what will be the cost of the clean-up; how far the company will be charged for the cost of cleaning up the pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Scientists in the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland consider that the leak has not resulted in any significant damage to water quality or aquatic life in Lough Foyle. Samples of water and of shellfish taken after the spillage showed a slight increase in normal background levels but within a few days the levels had fallen and results were only slightly above or at the levels of detection.

No subsequent clean-up operations were necessary.

Belfast Institute

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many vice-principals there were in the three colleges merged to form the Belfast Institute; how many (a) vice-principals and (b) deputy directors were appointed to the new institute; how many of these were formerly vice-principals in the old structure; of the former vice-principals, how many have remained on vice-principal protected salaries; and what teaching duties these persons now perform.

Mr. Hanley: The management structure of the new institute provides for three deputy director posts—its nomenclature for vice-principal—of which two have been filled to date. One of these was a former vice-principal. Of the remaining four former vice-principals, three continue to be employed on protected salaries and none of these undertakes teaching duties. The other former vice-principal has retired.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to improve communication between the different sites of the Belfast Institute.

Mr. Hanley: This is a matter for the institute and the Belfast education and library board.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of upgrading the Computerised Information Management of Further Education in Northern Ireland system, and the cost of (a) hardware and (b) software needed to cope with the needs of the Belfast Institute.

Mr. Hanley: A total of £201,326, comprising £85,523 for hardware and £115,803 for software, installation and training, was required to enhance the capability of the Computerised Information Management of Further Education in Northern Ireland System to meet the management information needs of the institute.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland where the central headquarters of the Belfast Institute is situated; what were the set-up costs; how many persons are employed in the central headquarters; what were the annual running costs.

Mr. Hanley: The central headquarters of the Belfast Institute is at Park house, 87-91 Great Victoria street, Belfast. The cost of adapting the premises was £101,000. Twenty-five institute staff are located there. The estimated annual running costs are £113,000.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many heads of department were appointed to the new Belfast Institute; and how many of the heads of department of the former colleges were not appointed and retain salaries; and what are the annual costs associated with such department status former heads of departments over the salaries payable for the posts they now occupy.

Mr. Hanley: All heads of department in the former colleges continue to be employed as heads of department in the new institute, with the exception of six who elected to retire on amalgamation.

Students

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the number of students from (a) Northern Ireland, (b) the Irish Republic, (c) Great Britain and (d) elsewhere, in each further education college in Northern Ireland, in (i) total and (ii) full-time equivalents; and what is the cost to the United Kingdom taxpayer in respect of these students.

Mr. Hanley: The latest enrolment details are for the 1991-92 academic year and are set out in the table; however, full-time equivalent numbers are not yet compiled for that year. It is not possible to calculate costs. For information on the latest overall student unit costs I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 19 October, Official Report, column 104.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students from (a) the Irish Republic, (b) Great Britain, (c) elsewhere in the EEC and (d) elsewhere, attend each of the universities in Northern Ireland; and what is the cost of students from (i) the Irish Republic and (ii) the rest of the EEC to the United Kingdom taxpayer.

Mr. Hanley: Final enrolment figures are not yet available for 1992-93. However, the latest available estimates for 1992-93 non-Northern Ireland domiciled enrolments at each of the universities in Northern Ireland are as follows:

	Queen's University Belfast	University of Ulster
(a) Irish Republic	637	1,775
(b) Great Britain	329	444
(c) Elsewhere in EC	50	214
(d) Elsewhere	491	133

Information on the cost of students is not readily available in the form requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However, the estimated cost to public funds of tuition fees for eligible students from the EC in the 1992-93 academic year will be about £4·2 million.

Assistance to Business

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of firms sponsored by (a) the Local Enterprise Development Unit, and (b) the Industrial Development Board in Northern Ireland, in each of the last two years, the total sums paid to the firms in each category in those years, the total costs relating to (i) the LEDU and (ii) the IDB and the number of persons now employed in these two groups of firms.

Mr. Atkins: The available information is as follows:

There are currently 25,116 employees in IDB client companies which accepted of assistance in the past two years. It is not possible to provide a similar LEDU figure without disproportionate cost, but there are currently 31,550 employees in all LEDU client companies.

Terrorism

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the sums paid for (a) criminal injuries and (b) criminal damage, which arose as a result of terrorist activity in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available and the amount estimated for such payments in the appropriation orders for those years; how any shortfall in the estimates was funded; what other Northern Ireland programmes were reduced as a result of transfers to pay for such damage; and whether payments were sought and received from the contingency fund to cover higher than expected compensation payments.

Mr. Mates: The available information on the amounts paid for criminal injuries and criminal damage resulting from terrorist activity is as follows:

Financial year	Criminal damage £000	Criminal injuries £000
[1]1988-89	11,766	3,466
1989-90	18,168	6,489
1990-91	18,756	7,965
1991-92	29,765	10,878

[1] From 6 August 1988.

The amounts exclude costs incurred by applicants in making their claims. In formulating estimates, no distinction is made between terrorist and non-terrorist compensation.

Within the Northern Ireland block, the Secretary of State has flexibility to reallocate any savings in order to meeting increased requirements. In recent years the amount of such savings has generally been sufficient to cover new demands, including compensation costs, without the need for imposed reductions or access to the reserve. In 1991-92, exceptionally, it was necessary to introduce a brief moratorium on certain—mainly capital—expenditure as a result of substantial increased demands: these arose primarily in education and health rather than solely or mainly in relation to compensation costs.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the level of racial discrimination in Northern Ireland; what are the racial divisions he intends to recognise in legislation to outlaw discrimination on grounds of race; and by what physical definition he intends to divide the population into its racial groups.

Mr. Mates: The former Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in March 1992 agreed in principle to the publication of a consultative document which would examine the scope for legislation on racial discrimination and consider what additional action ought to be taken by the Government to promote equity of treatment for ethnic groups. This should be published later this year. Consideration of the content of possible legislation will be informed by the outcome of the consultative process.

Road Accidents

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken in each of the last five years to recover DSS payments made to support persons who were injured in road accidents from the compensation received by the injured party from insurance companies; and what sums were received by his Department in each of those years.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. My noble Friend Lord Arran has asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. A. Wylie to Mr. William Ross, dated 26 October 1992:

Your recent Parliamentary Question on the recovery of compensation payments has been passed to me for reply as I am responsible for social security operational matters.

I should explain that prior to September 1990 compensation payments were reduced by the amounts of social security benefits received and this was a matter between the compensator and the benefit claimant. No records of such payments are therefore available.

In July 1989 a Compensation Recovery Scheme was introduced in both Great Britain and Northern Ireland following which a Compensation Recovery Unit was established. Under the Scheme compensation payments made on or after 3 September 1990, where an injury occurred on or after 1 January 1989, are reduced by an amount equal to the whole value of benefits received for the injury in question, but only up to the date of settlement or for a maximum period of five years.

I regret that information relating to amounts recovered in respect of persons injured solely as a result of road accidents is not available. The total amounts recovered in respect of all accidents since the introduction of the Scheme for each year are as follows:

September 1990—March 1991	581,505
April 1991—March 1992	2,830,102
April 1992—September 1992	2,036,921

I hope this is helpful to you and I will be pleased to provide any further information you may require.

Environmental Protection Act 1990

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he now expects the standards of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to be applied in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The Government intend to introduce in Northern Ireland provisions similar to those of the Act in due course.

Chlorobutadine

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish his Department's assessment of the dangers to health if chlorobutadine is inhaled or absorbed through the skin.

Mr. Hanley: Danger to health from chlorobutadine depend on concentration and exposure time. At the levels encountered in industry it is of low toxicity. Exposure to the high levels can result in skin, eye and lung irritation and generalised toxic systemic effects. Gross overexposure, as in the case of many chemicals, can lead to fatalities. It should therefore be handled with care and in accordance with the manufacturer's instructions.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the chemical formula of the residues of the chlorobutadine spillage in the drainage system of the Du Pont site at Maydown, County Londonderry, and Lough Foyle; what effect such residues have on the environment; and whether they exceed environmental protection standards.

Mr. Atkins: The chemical formula of the compound is 2-chloro-1, 3-butadiene ($C_4\ H_5\ Cl$) (Chemical Abstract Service (CAS) No. 31900-55-7).

The levels detected in samples collected in the week beginning 12 October 1992 were at or below the analytical detection limit. At such low levels it is considered that there has been no adverse effect, given that chlorobutadine is not known to bioaccumulate.

The median tolerance limit (TLM96) for the compound is 234 milligrammes/litre—the test species is the blue gill sunfish. This is the concentration at which 50 per cent. of the test species survive. Levels detected in samples were of the order of 10,000 times lower than this value.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the warning equipment first denoted a fault in regard to the spillage of chlorobutadine at the Du Pont factory at Maydown, County Londonderry; what action was taken then; when the spillage was sealed off; when his Department was notified; and what steps he has taken to determine the extent of the damage and dangers to workers and persons resident near the plant and the environment.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has been advised by Du Pont that the warning equipment at the Maydown factory first signalled a fault in the early hours on Tuesday 6 October 1992. This signal was misinterpreted by an employee as having been caused by fumes from a vat containing chlorobutadine which had been cleaned out. At 7 am it was discovered that a pump had failed and was allowing chlorobutadine to escape to the waste stream to Lough Foyle. A second alarm failed to go off because it was blocked by the substance.

The processing was stopped at once but Du Pont has advised the Department that it did not at first appreciate the scale of the spillage. It was not until further analysis had been made of the routine samples from the waste stream and the recovery system had been checked that it was realised on Thursday afternoon, 8 October, that some two to three tonnes could have been spilled.

The Department of the Environment was first advised by Du Pont of the spillage before lunchtime on Friday 9 October.

Arrangements were made at once to take water and shellfish samples from Lough Foyle and the Department of Health and Social Services (DHSS) immediately issued a warning against consuming fish or shellfish from the Foyle system. Subsequent analysis of the samples showed an increase in normal background levels, but samples taken later showed that the levels had fallen, with most slightly above or at the level of detection. On 14 October, DHSS withdrew the advice against eating fish and shellfish.

The Department of the Environment considers that the spillage has not resulted in any significant damage to water quality or aquatic life in Lough Foyle. Arrangements will be made for long-term monitoring but it is unlikely that any persistent effects will be found, as chlorobutadine is not known to bioaccumulate. The health and safety inspectorate of the Department of Economic Development has been inspecting the chemical plant to avoid a recurrence of this type of incident.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the exposure limits to the vapours of chlorobutadine; and whether those limits were exceeded in the recent spillage of chlorobutadine at the Du Pont factory at Maydown, County Londonderry.

Mr. Atkins: Exposure limits to vapours of chlorobutadine have been assigned in United Kingdom and in the United States at 10 parts per million over an eight-hour working day/40-hour week. There is no evidence to suggest that these limits were exceeded.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the storage of chlorobutadine is covered by the regulations set out in Statutory Rules of Northern Ireland 1992 No. 401.

Mr. Atkins: No. These regulations—the Pollution of Waters by Dangerous Substances (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1992—do not relate to storage. They implement the requirements of a series of European Community directives on pollution caused by dangerous substances discharged into the aquatic environment. Chlorobutadine is not one of these substances.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish his Department's assessment of the dangers to human health and to the environment of chlorobutadine and the adequacy of a long-term exposure limit of 10 parts per million for this substance.

Mr. Hanley: The Department believes that the normal use of chlorobutadine within industry does not pose a significant risk to human health or to the environment. In terms of occupational exposure, the internationally accepted standard concentration in the air of 10 parts per million, calculated on the basis of an eight-hour day over a working lifetime, is considered to be safe.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the inspection carried out by his Department of the spill of chlorobutadine at the Du Pont site at Maydown, County Londonderry.

Mr. Atkins: My Department's officials have inspected the neoprene plant at Du Pont and have had discussions with the company's staff. The company has reviewed its alarm systems and has instructed its staff, if there is any suspicion whatsoever of a spillage, to stop processing immediately and divert the waste stream to an emergency holding facility.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of whether the storage and transport of dangerous substances at the Du Pont site at Londonderry meet the standards set out in current regulations.

Mr. Atkins: The health and safety inspectorate of the Department of Economic Development inspects this plant regularly and is satisfied that the storage and transport of dangerous substances meet the requirements of the current health and safety legislation.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment his Department has made of whether the storage and transport of chlorobutadine on the Du Pont site at Maydown, County Londonderry, meets the standard set out in current regulations.

Mr. Atkins: The health and safety inspectorate of the Department of Economic Development inspects this plant regularly and is satisfied that the storage and transport of chlorobutadine meet the requirements of the current health and safety legislation.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what surveys he has carried out to discover how many persons or animals suffered or appeared to suffer discomfort as a result of the spillage of chlorobutadine at Du Pont's site at Maydown, County Londonderry, in early October.

Mr. Hanley: No specific public health surveys have been carried out. However, the Western health and social services board was alerted to the spillage and the incident was widely publicised throughout Northern Ireland. To date, there have been no reports of discomfort or illness to humans or animals as a result of the incident.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of whether the precautions taken against static discharges of dangerous substances at the Du Pont site at Maydown, County Londonderry are adequate.

Mr. Atkins: Du Pont has a consent from the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland DOE NI) under section 7 of the Water Act (NI) 1972 to discharge its trade effluent to Lough Foyle. All the effluent from the factory is discharged through a single outfall.

Prior to the recent incident, DOE (NI) had been reviewing the Du Pont discharge consent and was on the point of finalising new tighter consent conditions. Du Pont is an environmentally responsible company and has consistently complied with the consent conditions. Improvements over the years in the factory processes have made it possible to impose more stringent discharge standards.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of whether the storage and transport of dangerous substances at the Du Pont site at Maydown, County Londonderry, presently meet the standards set out in the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Atkins: The provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 have not yet been extended to Northern Ireland. The storage and transport of dangerous substances at the Du Pont site meet the standards applicable under current legislation.

DEFENCE

Empty Houses

12. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many empty houses are currently owned by his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 September 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, 9,388 MOD-owned dwellings were vacant of which 9,167 were service married quarters. The majority of the vacant properties were either undergoing or awaiting major modernisation work, or allocated to incoming service families. A total of 1,807 dwellings were in the process of being sold, and a number of others were being considered for disposal.

Armed Forces (Commitments)

13. Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional commitments have been required of United Kingdom armed forces as a result of responses to international problems by the United Nations, the European Community, the Western European Union and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation over the past 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the past 12 months, the armed services have been asked to contribute personnel to United Nations operations in the former Yugoslavia and Cambodia, and the joint NATO/WEU sanctions monitoring operation in the Adriatic. Military personnel are also filling headquarters and support posts in the EC monitor mission in the former Yugoslavia during the period of the United Kingdom's EC presidency. At the same time, the United Kingdom contribution to the United Nations force in Cyprus and the multinational force and observers in Sinai are reducing.

Yugoslavia

16. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's current contribution to peacekeeping in Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

17. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give an update on the level of the British commitment to the United Nations peacekeeping force in Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: A main party of about 1,800 personnel is expected to be operational in Bosnia by mid-November. In addition, 400 extra troops, mainly Royal Engineers, will be involved in order to assist in the initial stages of deployment. This brings the total number to be deployed initially to 2,400, including headquarters troops. We have also provided United Nations observers, a field ambulance and an RAF Hercules has been taking part in humanitarian airlift operations into Sarejevo.

Forces in Europe

18. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the strength of British forces currently stationed in Europe, broken down by countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total strength of British forces currently stationed in Europe outside of the United Kingdom as at 1 July 1992 was 62,643. The distribution by country was:

	Number
Germany	53,488
Cyprus	4,722
Gibraltar	1,045
Belgium	692
Italy	669
Holland	611
Denmark	366
Norway	344
Former Yugoslavia	305
France	206
Portugal	105
Turkey	59
Switzerland	31

Trident

19. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the progress of the Trident programme.

Mr. Aitken: The Trident programme continues to progress to time and within budget towards its in-service date of the mid-1990s. The first Trident submarine, Vanguard, left Barrow-in-Furness for her contractor's sea trials on 23 October.

30. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the cost of Trident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The currently estimated cost of the Trident procurement programme is £10,518 million at 1991-92 prices and £1 = $1·59.

Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe

20. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in arrangements for NATO forces to undertake a peacekeeping role for CSCE.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO is considering ways in which it might support CSCE peacekeeping operations if called upon to do so. Allies have, in addition, provided valuable support to the United Nations deployment in the Balkans as well as deploying forces for sanctions monitoring in the Adriatic.

Turkey

21. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on British forces deployment in eastern Turkey.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom contribution to the coalition deterrent force in south-east Turkey comprises eight Jaguar and two tanker aircraft plus ground support. These forces have played and continue to play a major part in helping to ensure the safety of Iraqi citizens in northern Iraq. The continuing presence of British coalition forces demonstrates our determination that renewed repression will not be tolerated.

Eastern Europe

22. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet other NATO Defence Ministers to discuss NATO defence policy in relation to eastern Europe.

Mr. Rifkind: I will next see my alliance colleagues at meetings of European Ministers and the defence planning committee in Brussels from 9 to 11 December 1992. I expect our discussions to cover a range of current alliance business.

Zimbabwe

23. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy regarding United Kingdom military assistance for Zimbabwe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom provides a range of military training for the Zimbabwean armed forces, including places on defence-related courses in the United Kingdom and the provision, since independence in 1980, of a resident British military advisory and training team (BMATT). The size and nature of our military assistance programme are kept under regular review.

Defence Expenditure

24. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the level of 1991-92 defence expenditure spent (a) in the south-east region and (b) in the Yorkshire and Humberside region.

Mr. Aitken: Information on Ministry of Defence expenditure by standard United Kingdom region is only available for equipment expenditure. In 1990-91, the latest year available, we estimate that the Ministry of Defence spent £2,900 million in the south-east region and £150 million in the Yorkshire and Humberside region.

Low Flying

25. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on changes in the occurrence of low-flying training since 1 January 1990; what changes he proposes in the near future; and what changes he proposes in the arrangements to inform the public and deal with complaints.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We expect to cut the amount of jet low flying in the United Kingdom by about 30 per cent. by the end of 1994. The appointment earlier this year of regional community relations officers for the Lake district and the Borders has provided the public in those areas with a focal point for their inquiries on low-flying matters. The management of the United Kingdom low-flying system is kept under constant review and changes are made when necessary.

Nuclear Deterrence

26. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on nuclear deterrence.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government intend that our independent nuclear deterrent should continue to provide the ultimate guarantee of our security in the decades ahead, as it has for decades past.

Korean War

27. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the result of his inquiries into the position of British soldiers captured during the Korean war, who may have been held in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No evidence has been received that supports allegations that British soldiers captured during the Korean war were held in the Soviet Union.

Iraq

28. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made by the United Nations peacekeeping forces, with the involvement of United Kingdom troops, towards implementing the United Nations resolution relating to the disposal of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Significant progress has been made with substantial United Kingdom involvement. Despite Iraqi obstruction much vital evidence has been uncovered, but more remains to be found. The process of destroying weapons and facilities is well advanced, with the majority of the proscribed items declared or discovered to date destroyed by the Iraqis under United Nations supervision.

Naval Support Command

29. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the naval support command is to be situated.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Although some work remains to be completed, I hope to be able to announce the preferred location in the Bath area for the naval support command by around the end of the year.

Allivane Ltd.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all contracts signed between his Department's logistics executive and Allivane Ltd. in the export of military equipment since 1987.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no record of any contracts between the Army's logistic executive and Allivane Ltd. for the export of military equipment since 1987. One contract was signed in 1988 for the short-term storage in MOD facilities of ammunition subsequently exported by the company.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report all addresses of Allivan Ltd. and Allivane International Group as registered by his Department as authorised exporters of military equipment during the period 1985 to 1989.

Mr. Aitken: I will write to the hon. Member.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the letter of reply to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent of 23 July in response to the written question on hazardous waste control policies of his Department.

Mr. Aitken: The text of my reply of 23 July was as follows:

> I undertook to write to you in response to your recent Parliamentary question concerning our procedures for the minimisation and disposal of toxic and radioactive wastes.
> I should say at the outset that it is our overall policy to minimise or eliminate the use of toxic substances whenever this is practicable. Because discharges of such materials can occur at every stage of their manufacture, use and disposal the only method of reducing exposure to them is to restrict their use to essential applications or to phase them out altogether. Accordingly, special controls exist over the use of cadium, lead, polychlorinated biphenyls (PCB's), asbestos, arsenic, triorganotins and pesticides. The controls reflect the requirements of domestic legislation or EC Directives or both. They are outlined in the Department's Environment Manual together with information on minimisation of use and phasing out. Additional guidance on the use of toxic materials and disposal routes is contained in regulations issued by the Directorate of Defence Health and Safety and, also Health and Safety Executive Guidance notes. Waste residues containing such substances are defined as special waste and are subject to disposal procedures regulated by the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1988. It is our policy that special waste will only be disposed of at a properly licensed disposal facility and that the transport of special waste will follow strictly the prenotification, consignment note and recording requirements stipulated by the Regulations.

The Department's policy is to dispose of radioactive waste through nationally available disposal routes wherever possible, in conjunction with Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution in England and Wales and Her Majesty's Industrial Pollution Inspectorate for Scotland. Very low and low level waste are transported in purpose built containers and by approved methods for disposal at an authorised site which, for low level waste, is the BNFL site at Drigg in Cumbria. There is at present no national disposal route for intermediate level wastes and MOD, like the civil nuclear operators in the United Kingdom, has to store such waste under secure controlled conditions at the site of origin, pending the availability of the deep depository planned by UK Nirex Ltd. to be in operation in 2005. The increasing costs associated with the available disposal routes is an additional incentive to minimise the amount of waste generated by our activities over and above the obvious health and safety and environmental considerations. Accordingly, radioactive waste minimisation is, and will remain, a key element in our operating procedures.

I hope that this is helpful.

Nuclear Defence Expenditure

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the letter of reply to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent of 22 July in response to his written question on nuclear defence expenditure.

Mr. Aitken: The text of my reply of 22 July was as follows:

I said I would write in answer to your question on 16 July about nuclear expenditure and 13 Figure of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1992 (CM 1981).

The figure shows in some detail how the Defence Budget is distributed to Top Level Budget Holders under the New Management Strategy. Expenditure on nuclear warhead testing and nuclear warhead design and development is included in the Chief of Defence Procurement's top level budget. A small amount is also included in the Chief Executive of the Defence Research Agency's top level budget.

British Aerospace

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Aerospace to discuss defence procurement.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to do so.

Recruitment

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans the forces have to change their recruiting techniques both for officers and for other ranks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to change recruiting techniques. Although the reduction in the size of the armed forces has resulted in lower recruiting targets, there will be a continued need for new recruits during the drawdown period in order to preserve an appropriate balance of age and skills.

RAF Ascension Island

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 666, if the detailed investment appraisal of the continuing charter of Maersk Ascension for bulk fuel storage for the RAF at Ascension island has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The investment appraisal on bulk fuel storage for the RAF at Ascension island has been completed. My Department is now considering whether to go ahead with the project.

Plymouth Urban Development Corporation

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in determining the amount of (a) funds and (b) surplus land to be transferred from his Department's vote to the proposed Plymouth urban development corporation; what are the mechanics of the transfer; what progress has been made in determining the future of the Royal William Yard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The MOD land identified for transfer to the proposed Plymouth urban development corporation (UDC) comprises Royal William Yard—and adjacent land at Western Kings—RAF Mountbatten and an area of Mount Wise. The precise nature of the intended conveyance remains to be resolved. In addition it is proposed that £20 million from MOD funds is made available to the proposed UDC through normal financial channels over a four-year period. The future of all the areas transferred will be a matter for the proposed UDC to determine.

Nuclear Weapon Transporters

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 530, what further progress has been made in the provision of armoured nuclear weapon transporters and containers to Russia.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) earlier today.

Fishery Protection

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Royal Navy has been able to meet the requirement for fishery protection in 1992-93; which ships are currently assigned to the coastal division of the fishery protection squadron; and what plans he has to fulfil the fishery protection requirement in 1993-94.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Navy Fishery Protection Squadron is on target to meet the level of patrolling for 1992-93 agreed with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency. HM ships Blackwater, Brinton, Sheraton, Berkeley and Brecon are currently assigned to the coastal division of the Fishery Protection Squadron. Plans for fishery protection in 1993-94 are still under consideration.

"Options for Change"

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many battalions are now deployed in, or committed to, Northern Ireland; and how that figure varies from the assumptions underlying "Options for Change".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 12 battalion-sized units deployed in Northern Ireland. Planning under "Options for Change" assumed that no less than 10 such units would be deployed but that the actual number would be revised from time to time in the light of the security situation.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the effect of the deployment of British forces with the United Nations in Bosnia on his Department's projections for military requirements under "Options for Change".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The requirement to allow sufficient leeway to deal with the unexpected and to meet peacetime commitments without unacceptable strain was one of the major considerations underpinning our work on "Options for Change". The deployment of forces to Bosnia has had no impact upon our plans for the restructuring of the Army.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the projected interval between emergency tour deployments for infantry soldiers if current and planned deployments in Northern Ireland, Bosnia and elsewhere continue as well as amalgamations of battalions and cuts in infantry strength under "Options for Change"; and if he will make a statement on the attainability of his Department's target of 24-month intervals between emergency tours for infantry soldiers under present circumstances.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The effect of current and planned deployments to Northern Ireland, Bosnia and elsewhere will be to reduce the projected interval between emergency tours for infantry battalions, although the impact will vary from case to case. The projected intervals for the 17 battalions due to undertake emergency tours during 1993-94 will range from 17 to 82 months.

It was always recognised that the non-availability of units undergoing amalgamation or redeployment would also affect tour intervals in the short term but once the restructuring process is complete, the target tour interval of 24 months will be achieved.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many infantry soldiers currently serving on emergency tours have returned to such duties after an interval of less than 24 months; what is the shortest interval for an individual soldier; and how many of those soldiers are involved in the amalgamation of battalions under "Options for Change".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Of the infantry battalions currently serving on emergency tours none has returned to such duties after an interval of less than 24 months—this excludes deployment to the Gulf. Tour intervals for individual soldiers would usually reflect those of their parent unit unless they have been posted between battalions in the interim.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the number of applications for redundancy by officers, non-commissioned officers and private soldiers in each infantry battalion which is commencing the process of amalgamation under "Options for Change"; and how those figures relate to the reduction in personnel required under his plans.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The closing date for applications for the second phase of the Army redundancy programme is 30 October. I will write to the hon. Member once this period is over and my Department has had an opportunity to assess the response.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the impact on his Department's budget of the reduction in the value of sterling in relation to other European currencies and the dollar.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As explained in Supply Estimates 1992-93 (HC273-I), about 10 per cent. of the defence budget is to be spent in US dollars and deutschmarks during 1992-93. As in previous years, the MOD has bought forward the bulk of its estimated requirements for these two currencies through the Bank of England in accordance with government accounting practice. Recent changes in the pound's value should not therefore lead to significant additional expenditure in 1992-93. The requirement for other European currencies is less than 1 per cent. of the total defence budget and any effect of the change in the pound's value is likely to be small.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the feasibility of continuing with plans to produce the European fighter aircraft without participation by Germany, Italy or Spain.

Mr. Aitken: The Government are making every effort to ensure the continuation of EFA on a collaborative basis. If these are unsuccessful, the Government believe that it would be technically feasible for the United Kingdom to continue the project alone but we would need to consider the cost and other implications.

Indonesia

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British armed services personnel are currently stationed in Indonesia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At 1 September 1992 there were three. One Navy officer and one Army officer as military attaches and one Army soldier as support staff.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military training Her Majesty's Government currently supply to the Government of Indonesia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Her Majesty's Government provide training for members of the Indonesian armed forces covering a wide range of military topics, including officer development courses such as staff college, and technical instruction. Details of training provided are confidential between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Indonesia.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the provisions of the memorandum of understanding signed in September by the United Kingdom and Indonesian Governments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The two Governments signed a supplement to the existing defence equipment memorandum of understanding. This will cover training arrangements in connection with a possible further sale of Hawk aircraft. The supplement will only become valid if a contract for the sale is concluded.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies which were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies which submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. Aitken: The information the hon. Member requests is not held centrally and could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Activity Bulletins

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to place regular bulletins on developments and activities in (a) Bosnia and (b) the Gulf, which affect the troops deployed there, in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I am considering how best to keep the House informed of developments and activities in Bosnia and the Gulf which affect British forces. I will inform the hon. Member of my conclusions.

Cyprus

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he intends to reduce the United Kingdom contingent in the United Nations force in Cyprus.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Following consultation with other troop contributors and the United Nations secretariat the Government have decided to reduce the United Kingdom's contribution to the United Nations force in Cyprus by 25 per cent. by the end of this year. This will mean a reduction of about 200 personnel and reflects the improved security situation in Cyprus. The other major troop contributors are also reducing their contributions to UNFICYP and the United Kingdom will continue to make the single largest contribution.

HEALTH

Glaucoma

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will commission research into the variation in the levels of blindness caused by glaucoma in people of different ethnic origins.

Dr. Mawhinney: American research studies have found that Afro-Caribbeans have a higher risk of contracting glaucoma than Caucasians and that the condition occurs earlier. The results of a research study carried out in this country are expected to be published early next year.

Unemployment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department will conduct a survey of the health effects on communities where significant unemployment is created by the closure of the main local industrial employer.

Dr. Mawhinney: The effect of unemployment on health has already been well documented.

Prescription Charges

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing the change in prescription charges in each year since 1976 in cash and real terms.

Dr. Mawhinney: The requested information is in the table. Only one in five prescribed items dispensed in the national health service now attracts a charge at the point of dispensing, compared with one in three in 1979. In 1991, over 100 million more items were dispensed free of charge than in 1979. Although the prescription charge has increased, it continues to represent less than half the average total cost of a prescribed item to the national health service.

Prescription charge increases 1 April 1976 to 1 April 1992, in cash and real terms

Social Work

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the statutory responsibilities of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work for training workers to meet the social rehabilitation needs of visually impaired people; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Under section 10 of the Health and Social Services and Social Security Adjudications Act 1983 the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work has a responsibility to promote training in relevant social work. This responsibility includes promoting training in social work with visually impaired people.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in discussions with the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work to consider how deficiencies in training of workers with visually impaired people in the social care field can be improved.

Mr. Yeo: Officials will be meeting shortly with the training agencies in the visual impairment field together with representatives of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work and the Local Government Management Board in order to discuss how qualifications for workers with visually impaired people can be integrated into the emerging continuum of qualifications at vocational, professional and post-qualifying levels.

NHS Staff

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) consultants, (b) other medical staff, (c) nurses, (d) ancillary staff, (e) administrators and (f) accountants were employed within the South East Thames region in each of the years from 1987 to 1992; and how many are estimated to be employed in the region in 1993, 1994 and 1995.

Dr. Mawhinney: The manpower statistics available centrally are set out in the table.

Responsibility for manpower planning rests with the regional health authority. The hon. Member may like to write to Mr. Peter Barker, chairman of South East Thames regional health authority, for future manpower plans.

Notes:

1. Medical figures include permanent paid and honorary staff only.
2. Figures for nursing and midwifery exclude agency staff.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to propose a European ban on tobacco advertising at the conference of European Community Health Ministers on 13 November.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will initiate a study into the relationship between the numbers waiting on the consultants' waiting list for longer than the maximum time specified under the patients charter and the numbers awaiting their initial out-patient appointment and length of that wait.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. The patients charter requires health authorities to set and publish local guarantees for the length of time people wait for out-patient appointments. The NHS is therefore expected to deliver a balanced programme that progressively reduces the whole waiting experience.

Surgery Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is collected from, held and disseminated to health authorities as (a) purchasers and (b) providers on comparative prices, both on base load and marginal costing principles, for operations in general surgery, and orthopaedic surgery.

Dr. Mawhinney: Extra contractual referral (ECR) tariffs are collected by regional health authorities (RHAs) from providers in their regions. RHAs are responsible for publishing and distributing these tariffs to purchasers within their region—including GP fund holders who request them—and to other RHAs, for distribution to their purchasers.

Distribution of these tariffs to providers is not specifically required but providers may arrange with their local RHA for access.

During the financial year a provider may agree to provide unplanned excess capacity at marginal cost. There is no national vehicle for providers to advertise marginal rates due to this being an in-year agreement. Typically this agreement would be with the local main purchaser or local GP fund holder.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what criteria will be used to determine the allocation of community care funding to local authorities which have not reached agreement by 31 December with health authorities concerning discharge arrangements;

(2) what arrangements have been made to protect the well-being of individuals who will be affected by the withholding of funding for community care when local authorities have not reached agreement by 31 December with health authorities concerning discharge arrangements;

(3) what plans she has to exclude from the receipt of community care funding any local authority which does not by 31 December have agreements with health authorities concerning discharge arrangements;

(4) what is her current estimate of the number of local authorities unlikely to have concluded the required discharge arrangements with health authorities by 31 December.

Mr. Yeo: All authorities should be able to reach the required agreements. Consideration will be given in due course to the action which may be necessary if any authorities fail to do so by 31 December 1992.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates the Government have prepared of the cost of housing provision necessary to meet the requirements of the Government's community care plans; and whether she will publish these in a form which identifies the scale and timetable of such provision for the respective groups of people in need.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply. The new community care arrangements will be fully implemented from April 1993. Their impact on housing demand is expected to be gradual and progressive. It will be some time before a full picture of new housing requirements emerges.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by her Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies which were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies which submitted a bid without prior invitation by her Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested, from 9 April 1992, is shown in the table:

Number of tenders issued for:			Description of the services required	Number of companies invited to tender	Number of companies submitting bid without prior invitation	Which company was awarded the contract	The value of the contract	The length of the contract

Sorrento Maternity Hospital

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to reply to the letter of 3 June and the reminder of 17 August from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak regarding the proposed closure of the Sorrento maternity hospital.

Mr. Sackville: I replied to the hon. Member on 26 October. I regret that, due to an oversight, a reply was not sent sooner.

Employment of Children

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has commissioned into the levels of illegal employment of school age children; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Radionuclides

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons the Radioactive Substances (Hospitals) Exemption Order 1990 prescribes a higher permitted level of megabecquerels per month for radionuclides, excepting Technetium-99, in human excreta than for media other than human excreta.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

There are two different categories of procedure involved covering, namely:

(a) administration of radiopharmaceuticals to patients who then return to the exempted hospital, after treatment at another hospital, and who therefore pass a proportion of the administered activity to drain at the exempted hospital; and

(b) the preparation of radiopharmaceuticals, and other "in vitro" laboratory uses of radioactive materials on the exempted hospital premises.

From a radioactive waste management point of view, the significance of (b) can be greater than that of (a), per unit of activity discharged to drain. This is because (b) involves the manipulation of radioactive materials, and because some of the radionuclides used in a pathology laboratory, especially iodine-125, have both a relatively long half-live and a relatively high radiotoxicity compared with most diagnostic radiopharmaceuticals administered to patients.

The order thus aims to ensure that there is adequate provision for patients who return to an exempted hospital, but that any hospital which undertakes ra[illegible]therapy work or diagnostic scanning on its premises, or which has substantial pathology laboratories, will not be exempt and will require an authorisation under S.6 of RSA60.

Regional Health Authority Chairmen

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will announce the appointment of regional health authority chairmen.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to her reply, 9 July 1992, c. 335]: I have today invited Sir William Stavely GCB to become chairman of North East Thames regional health authority for a term of office beginning on 1 January 1993 and ending on 31 July 1995. He will replace Mr. Tim Chessells who has agreed to become chairman of the London implementation group.

Sir William is currently chairman of the Royal London NHS Trust. I have invited Mr. Michael Haines to take over the chairmanship of the trust.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the current level of expenditure on family credit on families whose main earner is in an occupation covered by one of the wages councils, by (a) all families and (b) couples where the main earner is (i) male, (ii) female and (iii) single person families.

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the form requested. An analysis of family credit recipients, by the occupation of the main earner, is contained in table A1.05 of "Social Security Statistics 1991", a copy of which is in the Library.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Scott: The following papers have been published in the last 12 months by the chief executives of the Department of Social Security's executive agencies. In addition, the Department publishes a wide range of explanatory leaflets on matters such as individual social security benefits.

Benefit Statistics

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of households receiving the following benefits (a) housing benefit, (b) community charge benefit, (c) family credit and (d) income support; and if he will list the figures separately for those households in which the head of household is (i) in full-time employment and (ii) in part-time employment.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The available information as at May 1991 is as follows:

Number of households with earnings

	Thousands
Housing Benefit	330
Community Charge Benefit	641
Income Support cases with earnings of claimant	117
Income Support cases with earnings of partner	48
Family Credit (as at July 1992)	430

Notes:

1. Head of the household may not necessarily be the claimant.
2. In income support cases, neither the claimant nor the partner could have been in employment for more than 24 hours a week.
3. There will be considerable overlap between the benefits, e.g. the figures given for income support may also include housing benefit/community charge benefit.
4. Information on earnings is collected separately for a claimant or partner in income support cases, although there may be some overlap.
5. All figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average amount of housing benefit paid each week to (a) tenants receiving income support and (b) other housing benefit recipients not receiving income support, who are respectively (i) local authority tenants, (ii) housing association tenants and (iii) other tenants in Great Britain and in each region of Great Britain.

Mr. Burt: The latest information, for May 1991, is set out in the table.

Region	Housing benefit with income support		Housing benefit without income support
	Weekly average benefit for local authority tenants £	Weekly average benefit for private tenants £	Weekly average benefit for local authority tenants £	Weekly average benefit for private tenants £
South East	29·67	40·18	20·66	26·72
London	35·87	47·62	28·83	31·46
North	22·74	30·18	14·94	20·46

North West	24·28	33·48	16·70	21·05
Great Britain	26·16	37·20	18·37	24·98

Note:

The average weekly amount of housing benefit for housing association tenants is included in the amounts for private tenants.

Disability

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to provide more reliable information about (a) the level of disposable household income of those currently receiving invalidity benefit, (b) the level of disposable income of those claiming, but not receiving, invalidity benefit and (c) the level of disposable income of those from whom entitlement to invalidity benefit has been withdrawn.

Mr. Scott: Information on the income of invalidity benefit claimants is not available as this information is not required to make a decision on the claim. Information on the income of invalidity benefit recipients—but not the other two groups identified by the hon. Member—is available from surveys such as the family expenditure survey (FES). The family resources survey, announced in July 1992, will have a larger sample size than the FES and will provide better information in due course.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his practice to provide a direct ministerial answer to letters sent to him by hon. Members relating to the ineffective working of the disability living allowance scheme, and not to transfer such letters to the Benefits Agency.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply by the then Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 6 June 1990, at column 615.

Social Fund

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will issue new guidelines on the granting of social fund payments to appointed persons in residential homes to cover the funeral costs of deceased residents, to include recommended time scales for dealing with applications and appeals.

Mr. Scott: Everyone taking responsibility for funeral costs is entitled to a funeral payment from the social fund if they satisfy the eligibility criteria. There is no need for special provision for people in residential homes.

The average clearance time for a funeral payment is just over eight days; but due to the complexity of some cases the Benefits Agency have no recommended time scales for dealing with applications or appeals.

Contributions Records

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what sum of money is held at the Newcastle records office unattributed to the contributions record of the specific contributor.

Miss Widdecombe: The amount of moneys held at Newcastle but unattributed to specific contributors is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Miss A. Chant to Sir David Mitchell, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency I am responsible for answering questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State about monies held at Newcastle but unattributed to specific contributors.

This Agency deals with nearly 59 million accounts and recording contributions is almost always done automatically. But we rely on employers and individuals to provide us with the correct identity details. If for some reason we are unable to allocate the individuals' contributions they are held while we make further inquiries. In some cases individual contributors query their National Insurance position and we enlist their help to allocate contributions.

The records we hold of these unallocated contributions constantly shift day by day as items are traced and allocated and further items are added.

I am sorry that the precise information you require is not available. It could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

I hope that the information I have provided is helpful but because it may not answer all your concerns I will be writing to you shortly to see if I can be of any further assistance.

Contributors Charter and Employers Charter

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations were undertaken with service users in the course of the production of the contributors charter and the employers charter.

Miss Widdecombe: The consultations undertaken with service users in the course of production of the contributor's and employer's charters is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Miss A. Chant to Ms. Marjorie Mowlam, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency I am responsible for answering questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State about the consultations that were undertaken with service users in the course of production of our Charters.

The Contributions Agency produced a working draft of the Charters which was circulated to the 36 customer organisations with whom we had contact. They were given 2 months to comment and we asked them what they thought about both its style and content. From the replies we received we made several significant amendments and incorporated those in the first versions of the Charters.

The 36 organisations represented accountants, payroll bureaux, large and small employers and the self-employed. The interests of individual contributors were represented by the National Association of Citizen's Advice Bureaux, the TUC and the Confederation of Shipbuilding and Engineering Unions.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) to what extent Government forecasts of future demands on the staff of the Benefits Agency were wrong in relation to the disability living allowance; where and by whom the forecasts were made; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many hours of overtime have been worked by staff of the Benefits Agency in processing claims for the disability living allowance and the disability working allowance; and if he will indicate the equivalent in terms of additional staff;

(3) what additional resources were made available to the Benefits Agency to deal with the backlog of cases involving claims for the disability living allowance, top-up claims and claims for attendance allowance for people aged over 65 years; what was the number of cases still awaiting clearance at the end of September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Alfred Morris, dated 26 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about staff dealing with Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

You asked first about the forecasting of future demands upon Benefits Agency staff in relation to DLA. I should explain that the implementation of DLA was planned within the Agency by a discrete Project team based at Fylde. Staffing levels were determined using forecast workloads prepared by the Government's Analytical Services Division, which in turn were built upon the benefit's original policy intentions and some assumptions as to likely take-up rates etc.

From this basis it was calculated that around 2,000 staff would be required to administer claims to DLA and Attendance Allowance (AA) for the over 65s. However, the pleasing success of the advertising campaign and the widespread interest from disabled people, attracted a much larger number of applications in the early stages than was predicted.

Whilst at first the take up of new claims to DLA was slow, the intake in March was more than double that forecast. In addition the "Top-Up" claims received by the end of April had exceeded the total number forecast for the whole year (137,000) and by the end of September had reached 195,000, an increase of 35 per cent.

At the same time the staff in the Disability Benefit Centres, where DLA claims are processed, experienced a surge in claims to AA. Over 55,000 more claims than originally forecast were received in the period February to April, representing an overall increase of 42 per cent. Indeed the total claims activity for DLA (including "Top-ups") and AA for those over 65 during the period February to April inclusive was an intake of 447,000 which represented an increase of 27 per cent. (94,000 claims) over the original estimate of just over 353,000. Consequently, the effects of both the numbers and the rate at which claims were received resulted in backlogs.

As you will know from my recent letter to Members, we have as a result increased the number of staff devoted to handling DLA and AA claims by over 800.

You also asked about overtime. Since the onset of the new benefits almost 420,000 hours of overtime have been worked by staff at the Disability Benefits Centres (DBCs) and the Fylde Unit which is equivalent to around 340 posts in terms of additional staff. I have also established a senior management task force to tackle the arrears and to optimise work flows.

These measures have increased the throughput of new claims considerably, and we are on schedule to clear the backlog shortly.

Your third question also asked about number of cases still awaiting clearance at the end of September. The table below gives details of outstanding claims for the months June to September inclusive:—

	New claims	Top-ups	AA
June	125,000	123,000	153,000
July	117,000	104,000	143,000
August	106,000	79,000	122,000
September	90,000	58,000	90,000

All figures are provisional and may be subject to amendment.

During the same period, the numbers of claims cleared rose steadily from 15,600 in April to 52,000 in September in the case of DLA claims with 22,700 and 70,500 respectively for AA cases. The clearance of top-up claims remained steady at around 7,000 per week during the months August and September.

Of course there will always be a certain number of cases in action at any one time. We expect this normal on hand level for new claims to be in the region of 50,000 cases for DLA and just below 60,000 for AA.

Finally you also asked how many hours of overtime had been worked by staff in processing claims for Disability Working Allowance. So far no overtime has been worked by staff in processing applications for this benefit.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what criteria he plans to determine the award of performance-related pay to Michael Bichard, chief executive of the Benefits Agency.

Mr. Burt: Mr. Bichard's entitlement to performance bonus is largely dependent upon the achievement of a range of specific targets which include improving on the performance targets which we set the Benefits Agency each year. These are published in the "Benefits Agency's Business Plan", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the disability and other organisations from which expressions of concern have been received about delays in processing claims for the disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Alfred Morris, dated 26 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if he will list the disability and other organisations from which expressions of concern have been received about delays in processing claims for Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

The organisations that have made general enquiries to the DLA Ministers Unit about the delays in processing DLA claims, as opposed to those that have made customer specific enquiries, are attached.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many special rules claimants have died before receiving benefit from disability living allowance; and in how many such cases, payment was made after six months from the application.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure for (a) disability living allowance, (b) disability working allowance, (c) mobility allowance and (d) attendance allowance from 1 April to 1 October.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not yet available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how analysis of potential take-up benefit was undertaken prior to the introduction of disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The analysis of potential take-up of disability living allowance lower rates was made using data produced in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys surveys of 1985-88. OPCS questions related to lack of independent mobility were used to produce estimates of the number of potential lower rate mobility beneficiaries. Questions relating to the extent of people's need for help with personal functions and with preparing food were used for the lower rate care component.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the backlog of claims for disability living allowance benefit to be cleared; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. David Marshall, dated 26 October:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about when the backlog of claims for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) will be cleared.

I should explain that there are two categories of claims for DLA. Firstly there are claims from people who were not already in receipt of Attendance Allowance or Mobility Allowance when DLA was introduced. Secondly there are applications from people who were in receipt of one of these benefits but who may be entitled to an additional amount under the DLA entitlement rules. These latter applications are known as "top-up" claims. Since February, therefore, when applications began to be accepted for the new benefit, we have been dealing with claims made under the old scheme and processing the new-style claims at the same time.

In the first eight months of live operation over 303,000 new claims and almost 195,000 "top-up" claims were registered.

I wrote to all MPs on 19 October explaining how the backlog has arisen and detailing the measures introduced to deal with it. I am glad to say that these measures have already resulted in a substantial improvement in the speed of claims processing.

At the end of September the number of claims still to be dealt with was approaching 90,000 new claims and 58,000 "top-up" claims. This compares with the outstanding figures of 125,000 new claims and 121,000 "top-up" claims in July. Most significantly, Disability Benefit Centres are now clearing 12,000 claims per week compared with approximately 6,000 per week in June and only about 3,000 per week in April. The clearance of "top-up" claims remained steady at around 7,000 per week during the months August and September.

I am by no means complacent about the number of applications still to be processed and am currently monitoring the situation closely. I am confident, however, that we will have reached a steady state shortly for new claims and by the end of November for "top-up" claims.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown by number and percentage of the total number of claims for disability working allowance received by his Department that were refused on the grounds that (a) the claimant was not in remunerative work, (b) the claimant's income was above the limit, (c) the claimant was not in receipt of a qualifying benefit, (d) the claimant was receiving family credit, (e) the joint income of the claimant and his or her partner exceeded the limit, (f) the claimant was working less than 16 hours a week or (g) for other reasons.

Mr. Scott: By 16 October the total number and percentage of claims refused in each category was as follows:

		Percentage
Not in work or working less than 16 hours a week	10,208	59
Income of claimant and partner exceeds DWA level	1,929	11
No qualifying benefit	4,455	26
Receiving family credit	409	2
Other reasons	425	2

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures were taken by his Department, and when, to identify people receiving severe disablement allowance or with underlying entitlement to severe disablement allowance following their transfer to retirement pension who became eligible for the age-related addition introduced in December 1990; and if he will make it his policy that no one will lose out due to ignorance of their entitlement.

Mr. Scott: In August 1990 DSS local offices identified and arranged to pay, from 3 December 1990, all severe disablement allowance (SDA) recipients entitled to an age-related addition. A check of national insurance records was made in May 1992 to identify those retirement pension recipients, with an underlying entitlement to SDA, who had not received an age addition.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the findings of research commissioned by his Department on invalidity benefit; what is the total cost of this research; and how he plans to use it.

Mr. Scott: The Department has commissioned a number of related research studies about invalidity benefit. The findings of an international comparative study of the growth in incapacity benefit caseloads were presented to the Beveridge anniversary conference in September. Fieldwork for some of the remaining studies is still in progress, and it is not yet known when the findings will be published. The research will cost £320,000. It is designed to explain the growth in invalidity benefit caseloads and to improve forecasts of the numbers receiving the benefit.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of appeals heard by disability appeal tribunals to date; and if he will provide a breakdown of these by (a) outstanding mobility allowance, (b) outstanding attendance allowance and (c) disability living allowance and attendance allowance, post-February 1992 appeals.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to him given to him by my hon. Friend on 13 July at column 455.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of the numbers awarded the disability living allowance to date by (a) those awarded the higher rate of the care component, (b) those awarded the middle rate of the care component, (c) those awarded the lower rate of the care component, (d) those awarded the higher rate of the mobility component and (e) those awarded the lower rate of the mobility component.

Mr. Scott: Following is the information requested.

Number of awards of each component of disability living allowance made at 30 September

		Number
(a)	Higher rate care	25,000
(b)	Middle rate care	34,000
(c)	Lower rate care	73,000
(d)	Higher rate mobility	75,000
(e)	Lower rate mobility	75,000

These figures include new claims and "top up" claims from existing attendance allowance or mobility allowance beneficiaries.

All figures are provisional and may be subject to amendment.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average award of invalidity benefit (a) for all claimants, (b) for single people, (c) for childless couples and (d) for couples and/or single parents with dependants.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average weekly payment of invalidity benefit for a single person and a married couple at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. The average weekly payment of invalidity benefit as at 30 March 1991(1) was £67·40.

Notes:

[1] The latest date for which figures are available; information from a 1 per cent. sample of claimants.

[2] Separate information is not available for single people and couples.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the number and percentage of recipients of invalidity benefit who are also in receipt of income support.

Mr. Scott: Available information is in the table:

	Number
Number of invalidity benefit recipients on 30 March 1991[1]	1,306,000
Number of income support claimants, in receipt of invalidity benefit, in May 1991[2]	104,000
Number of income support claimant's partners in receipt of invalidity benefit, in May 1991[2]	7,000

Notes:

[1] Information from 1 per cent. sample of claimants.

[2] Information from the annual statistical enquiry.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the savings to his Department of freezing invalidity benefit and the numbers of people who would become eligible for income support as a result.

Mr. Scott: The answer would depend on the assumptions made by the hon. Member.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average income of people in receipt of invalidity benefit as a percentage of average full-time earnings among men and women employees.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. The average gross weekly income of benefits units[1] in which there is at least one IVB recipient is £155[2]. This represents 65 per cent.[3] of the average weekly earnings of adults in full time work.

[1] A benefit unit is a single adult or a couple, together with any children dependent on the adult(s) who are entitled to claim benefit in their own right.

[2] Source: Family Expenditure Survey 1989.

[3] Source: New Earnings Survey 1989.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of successful disability working allowance applicants by (a) average hourly earnings, (b) average hours worked, (c) average age, (d) sex, (e) marital status, (f) householder status and (g) qualifying benefit.

Mr. Scott: Information on the householder status of applicants is not available. The table provides estimated figures derived from an analysis of successful claims up to 31 August.

	Estimated figures
Average hourly earnings	£2·92
Average hours worked a week	30
Average age	37
Number of awards to men	1,089
Number of awards to women	765
Number of awards to single people	1,120
Number of awards to couples	734
Qualifying benefits:[1]
Invalidity benefit	240
Severe disablement allowance	66
Income support with disability premium	128
Housing benefit with disability premium	20
Community charge benefit with disability premium	56
Lower rate disability living allowance	161
Higher rate disability living allowance and attendance allowance	1,183

[1] Applicants may have more than one qualifying benefit.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for attendance allowance and mobility allowance were made (a) in the six months prior to February 1992 and (b) in the six months prior to February 1991.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

	Attendance allowance	Mobility allowance
August 1991-January 1992	283,000	118,000
August 1990-January 1991	209,000	85,000

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many invalidity benefit recipients there are by age, sex, household, and marital status.

Mr. Scott: Available information is in the table. This shows the number of invalidity recipients on 30 March 1991, the latest date for which information is available.

Age	Men	Women	Married women	Other women	All persons
All ages	976,100	329,900	225,600	104,300	1,306,000

20-29	24,800	28,400	17,200	11,200	53,200
30-39	60,000	49,700	33,600	16,100	109,700
40-49	125,600	75,100	53,300	21,800	200,700
50-59	291,500	139,500	99,600	39,900	431,000
60 and over	474,000	37,000	21,900	15,100	511,000

Note: Information from a 1 per cent. sample of claimants.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for the disability working allowance were received by his Department in each month since its introduction.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 19 October at column 173.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the current claim pack for disability living allowance is to be replaced by the revised version; and if he will provide details of his Department's plans to monitor the impact of the changes in the revised pack and state when and where the results of such monitoring will be published.

Mr. Scott: As part of our continuing efforts to meet the needs of customers, improved claim packs for disability living allowance (DLA) and attendance allowance (AA) will be available in November. In monitoring the effectiveness of the claim packs we engage in an ongoing dialogue with disabled people themselves and their organisations.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been spent in total by his Department to date on publicity for disability living allowance and disability working allowance; and if he will publish a breakdown by type of medium used.

Mr. Scott: The Department has spent a total of £7,227,304 on publicity for disability living allowance and disability working allowance. The breakdown by medium is as shown:

Advertising	3,288,149
Exhibitions	74,850
Film/video	562,816
Marketing/response	1,947,448
Publications	1,026,685
Research	327,356
Total	7,227,304

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for the disability working allowance have been received by the Department to date; and if he will provide a breakdown by (a) the number and percentage of these that resulted in an award, (b) the number and percentage of these that were refused and (c) the number and percentage of these that are awaiting a decision.

Mr. Scott: By 16 October 1992 the number of claims for disability working allowance received was 21,174; and the number of awards made was 2,401, 11 per cent; the number of claims refused was 17,426, 82 per cent. and the number of claims awaiting a decision because further information was needed to assess the claim was 619, 3 per cent.; the remainder of claims were withdrawn by the claimant before a decision was made.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the number and percentage of invalidity benefit recipients who are in receipt of other sources of income by source and average amount of such other income.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. Available information is shown in the table.

Table: Benefit Unit with an IVB Recipient: Sources and Amount of Components of Gross Income, 1989

Source of Income	Percentage of benefit units with at least one member on IVB in receipt of other named source of income	Average amount of income, for those in receipt of given source of income
	per cent.	£
IVB	100	59
Occupational pensions	43	60
Investment income	62	21
Income support	6	23
Housing benefit/rent rebate	35	16
Community charge benefit (Scotland only)	6	6
Other social security pensions and benefits	18	8
Earnings	24	129
Other income	86	20
Gross income	100	155

Source: Family Expenditure Survey, 1989.

Notes:

1. Gross income is income received by a benefit unit in which there is at least one IVB recipient, and includes all social security benefits and pensions. A benefit unit is a single adult or couple, together with any children dependent on the adult(s), who are entitled to claim benefit in their own right.
2. Average amounts of income are gross of tax and NI contributions, and are rounded to the nearest £1.
3. CCB was only applicable to Scotland in 1989.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people choose to remain on invalidity benefit after reaching retirement age; and if he will provide an estimate of the savings to his Department in each of the years up to and including 1997-98 if the right of invalidity benefit recipients to remain on invalidity after reaching retirement age were removed.

Mr. Scott: The number of invalidity benefit recipients over retirement age on 31 March 1991—the latest date for which information is available—is:

	Number
Men	200,900
Women	37,000
Total	237,900

There would be no savings to the Department if the right of invalidity benefit recipients to choose to remain on the benefit after reaching retirement age were removed. The rate of benefit payable to invalidity benefit recipients over retirement age is based on their entitlement to the retirement pension which would then be put into payment.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many awards of the higher rate mobility component made since 3 February were made (a) on the ground that the person was severely mentally impaired and displayed severe behavioural problems and (b) under the deaf-blind provisions.

Mr. Scott: Number of people awarded the higher rate mobility at 30 September:

(a) On grounds of severe mental impairment and severe behavioural problems: 715
(b) Under deaf-blind provisions: 62

Includes new claims and "top up" claims from existing attendance allowance and mobility allowance beneficiaries.
All figures are provisional and may be subject to amendment.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of successful disability working allowance applicants by (a) people already working and (b) people who started working shortly before making an application for benefit.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available to say how many disability working allowance recipients were previously in employment. Of the 2,401 people who had claimed successfully up to 16 October, we estimate that 27 per cent. had received invalidity benefit, severe disablement allowance or a disability premium with income support, housing benefit or community charge benefit in the eight weeks before claiming disability working allowance.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for invalidity benefit and severe disablement allowance were referred to the regional medical services in each month since January 1991; how many of these cases resulted in medical examinations; and what were the outcome (a) where examinations took place and (b) where they did not.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

References to the regional medical services cleared between quarters ending March 1991 and March 1992.

	31 March 1991	30 June 1991	30 September 1991	31 December 1991	31 March 1992
Incapable of work (without examination)	135,750	132,820	156,842	120,192	127,745
Claim terminated before examination—no opinion given	1,840	2,282	3,625	1,716	3,571
Failed to attend examination	17,576	14,062	14,347	17,045	14,664
Incapable of work (after examination)	47,154	41,125	43,507	40,182	51,545
Capable of work (after examination)	10,188	8,525	9,008	8,188	9,332
Capable of work within limits (after examination)	14,024	11,753	12,920	10,512	14,785
Total number of references cleared	226,532	210,567	240,249	197,835	221,642

Note: Information relates to references for all incapacity benefits.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average amount of benefit received by long-term sick and disabled people in each member state of the European Community expressed in pounds sterling.

Mr. Scott: Comparable information for each member state of the European Community is not available.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number and percentage of (a) first claims (b) renewal claims and (c) requests for a review of attendance allowance and mobility allowance received by his Department prior to 3 February remain outstanding; how many have been decided; and what number and percentage of reviews decided resulted in the award of the lower rate of (i) the care component, (ii) the mobility component and (iii) both components of the disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for (a) mobility allowance and (b) attendance allowance were refused, annually, for each year since 1985.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

	Mobility allowance	Attendance allowance
1985	50,000	71,000
1986	61,000	76,000
1987	61,000	92,000
1988	72,000	111,000
1989	78,000	101,000
1990	85,000	93,000
1991	90,000	108,000

Figures rounded to nearest thousand

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure for (a) mobility allowance and (b) attendance allowance from 1 April to 1 October 1991.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested.

Estimated expenditure for each benefit in the 1991-92 financial year was:

	£ million
(a) Mobility allowance	1,061
(b) Attendance allowance	1,706

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications have been received for disability working allowance; and how many, to date, have been successful.

Mr. Scott: Up to 16 October 21,174 applications for disability working allowance had been received and 2,401 awards made.

John Gardner

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects that Mr. John Gardner of 115 Countisbury avenue, Llanrumney, Cardiff, will have a response to his application for mobility allowance, now being treated as an application for disabled living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. As the application is a personal and confidential matter, he will reply direct to the hon. Member.

Miners' Redundancy Payments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the age distribution of the miners to be made redundant; and how long their redundancy payments are likely to last before they qualify for social security.

Mr. Burt: Information on the age distribution of miners who are affected by redundancy is a matter for British Coal.

The effect of redundancy payments on entitlement to social security benefits will depend on the nature of the payment and on the type of benefit claimed.

Most social security benefits are not affected by statutory redundancy pay, or similar payments intended as compensation for loss of employment. However, in the income-related benefits, such payments are treated as capital and may affect entitlement.

Fraudulent Claims

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated amount of money claimed fraudulently from his Department in 1991; what is the basis of the estimate; and what action he has taken to recover the estimated amount.

Miss Widdecombe: The total sum claimed fraudulently from the Department is not known. The Benefits Agency has a target which is based on detected fraud. In 1991-92 £427 million was estimated to have been saved. This estimate is derived from

1. the calculation of the weekly amount of benefit being claimed wrongfully when action by fraud investigators put a stop to the fraud or irregularity;
2. the conversion of this weekly amount to an estimated overall saving;
3. the actual value of benefit saved by the termination or prevention of an instrument of payment irregularity.

The multiplier used for item 2 was 32. This was based on the estimated average number of weeks the fraud would have continued had fraud staff not stopped it.

The Benefits Agency pursues vigorously the recovery of overpayments of benefit from those who cheat the system. In appropriate cases criminal or civil proceedings will be instituted.

Terminal Illness

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations have been received by his Department from organisations working with terminally ill people on problems with the special rules procedures and the particular difficulties caused to people with terminal illness on account of the delays with the processing of disability living allowance claims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We receive a large volume of correspondence on disability benefits, some of which comes from organisations involved in the care of terminally ill people and refers to the special rules arrangements. Much of the correspondence applauds the rules, some contains suggestions on further improvements we might make to the procedures. We welcome these representations, which we actively consider.

We have also received representations about delays in dealing with claims in respect of people with a limited life expectancy. Unfortunately, because of the massive influx of claims more generally on disability living allowance and attendance allowance, some delays have occurred in dealing with claims made under the special rules. The Benefits Agency is taking firm action to clear the backlogs and in doing so treat claims for people who are terminally ill as a top priority.

Doctors' Fees

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the fees payable to doctors for each type of medical examination required for adjudication purposes for all social security benefits and for the disablement pension.

Mr. Scott: The fees payable to doctors for medical examinations required for all social security benefits are as follows:

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were in receipt of the invalidity benefit from each year since 1983-84.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the table:

Year	Beneficiaries (in thousands)
1983-84	760
1984-85	825
1985-86	865
1986-87	935
1987-88	1,010
1988-89	1,100
1989-90	1,190
1990-91	1,265
1991-92	1,325

Source: 1992 Departmental Report and earlier Public Expenditure White papers.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what his Department's expenditure on invalidity benefit has been, in cash and constant prices, for each year from 1983-84, until the latest year for which figures are available; and what is the expected outturn expenditure on invalidity benefit for 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: The table shows expenditure on invalidity benefit for Great Britain at cash and constant 1992-93 prices in each year from 1983-84 to 1992-93.

Year	Cash £ million	1992-93 prices £ million
1983-84	1,972	3,123

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies which were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies which submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Miss Widdecombe: The tenders issued by the Department for computer hardware and software since 9 April 1992 are as shown in the table. We have not supplied information on the value of the contracts as to do so could be a breach of commercial confidentiality.

Independent Living Fund

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what form the replacement for the independent living fund will take; what will be the size of its financing; and what criteria will apply for individual applicants receiving it.

Mr. Scott: Details of the arrangements will be announced in due course.

Maxwell Pensioners

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made by the special unit and the trust fund established to assist the Maxwell pensioners.

Mr. Lilley: On 8 June I announced a number of Government initiatives following the loss of assets from the Maxwell pension schemes. These included the provision of a £2·5 million emergency fund to help to keep pensions in payment in the short term, the setting up of the Maxwell pensions unit within my Department, and the establishment of the Maxwell Pensioners Trust.

The unit has made grants amounting to just over £1 million to eight pension schemes. All pensions in payment in February 1992 are being paid, as are those due to people who have retired since then at the normal retirement age for their scheme. In addition, grants have been made in respect of people who have retired since February 1992 on grounds of ill health. Pension scheme members who have been contracted back into the state earnings-related pension scheme (SERPs) have that part of their pensions paid direct by my Department.

The unit is also working with Sir John Cuckney, as chairman of the Maxwell Pensioners Trust and special adviser to the unit, to help in the recovery of missing assets, by encouraging out-of-court settlements wherever possible, reducing the time and cost of legal actions. The unit has established constructive working relationships with pension scheme trustees, the liquidators and administrators dealing with the Maxwell companies, and the pensioners action groups.

The Maxwell Pensioners Trust was formally constituted on 17 July to help secure Maxwell pensions in the longer term. Following an initial appeal, the trust has raised just under £6 million. And payments have already been made, or are being processed, to 86 ex gratia pensioners. This is a creditable achievement, but substantially more funds are needed if the justifiable anxiety felt by the pensioners about their future security is to be properly addressed.

No Government could accept an obligation to use taxpayers' money to make good losses resulting from fraud. However, I believe it is right for the Government to exercise those responsibilities we do have in ways which actively assist the pensioners' position. I am announcing one further such step today.

When pension scheme members who have been contracted out of SERPS are brought back into the state scheme, the pension scheme is required to pay state scheme premiums for each member to the national insurance fund. The amounts involved can be substantial. I have discretion to postpone collection of these premiums for as long as I am satisfied that it would not be in the interests of scheme members to enforce payment.

I have decided to exercise this discretion, on a scheme by scheme basis, in the case of the Maxwell pensioners. This amounts to an interest-free loan to the trustees of the pension schemes of some £100 million. It is a major extension of Government assistance to securing pensioners' financial future, and it will give the schemes a breathing space while the remaining matters in dispute are resolved.

This measure will not close the gap between the Maxwell schemes' assets and liabilities. For that, we still need substantial contributions to the trust. I hope that this further example of Government support will encourage those companies and institutions that have not so far felt able to contribute to the trust to reconsider its position.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Magistrates

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how judges and magistrates will be advised to treat aggravating or mitigating factors when determining the seriousness of any offence.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to his similar question on 27 October, at column 578.

Police Officers

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table showing for each police force area in England and Wales and for the whole of England and Wales the number of police officers actually in post at (a) 1 April 1979, (b) 1 April 1990, (c) 1 April 1991 and (d) 1 April 1992, and the percentage increase in each case.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is set out in the table.

[1] Figures for 1 April are not available; 31 March figures have therefore been provided.

Samuel Kulasingham and Prem Sivalingham

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects to make a decision as to whether he will exercise his power under section 17 of the Criminal Appeals Act 1968 to refer to the Court of Appeal the case of Samuel Kulasingham and Prem Sivalingham;

(2) when he received an interim or final report from the Essex police inquiry team, established in April 1992 to investigate the circumstances surrounding the convictions of Samuel Kulasingham and Prem Sivalingham;

(3) whether the Essex police inquiry team, established in April 1992 to investigate the circumstances surrounding the convictions of Samuel Kulasingham and Prem Sivalingham, have obtained transcripts of any Metropolitan police interviews with the two chief prosecution witnesses at the 1988 trial, Indrakumar Thiyegaral and Muralee Tharan Arulkodnenthan, which took place prior to their statements as witnesses.

Mr. Jack: The Essex police are continuing their inquiries into this case and I expect to receive their report shortly. I shall then be in a position to decide, after proper consideration of all the relevant information, whether there are grounds for referring either conviction to the Court of Appeal.

I understand that the inquiry team has established that both the two chief prosecution witnesses were interviewed by officers of the Metropolitan police before statements were taken from them as witnesses, but that no record was made of either of these interviews.

Probation Service

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the resource implications of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 for the probation service; and what is his best estimate of the additional costs involved for the probation service in England and Wales.

Mr. Jack: Increased central Government support for the probation service was set out in the Home Office annual report published in February 1992 as follows:

	1992-93	1993-94	1994-95
Central Government support (£ million)	290	314	338
Provision for total staff numbers	14,234	14,713	15,100
(Including year-on-year staff increases of;)	560	398	376

The additional staff and resources are primarily for the implementation of the Criminal Justice Act 1991; these represent the current best estimates of the additional resources needed.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what remuneration has been offered to probation staff to enable them to undertake new duties in respect of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 27 October 1992]: The Criminal Justice Act will involve new responsibility for the probation service. To respond to this we have provided for a substantial increase in the numbers of probation officers. In addition, we recognise that there will be an impact on the work of some existing probation officers. As a consequence, probation employers have responded to this by offering a system of local pay flexibility to reflect the increased responsibilities which individuals might undertake. Discussions over the details of this offer are continuing.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what fianancial penalties will be invoked if any probation staff refuse to undertake new duties implicit in the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Jack: Probation staff who refuse to undertake duties in the context of the current industrial action in support of their pay claim are being asked to sign an undertaking that they will work normally and to return this undertaking within two working days. If an officer refuses to sign the undertaking, the probations committee will reduce that officer's pay by 15 per cent. while he or she continues to refuse to work normally.

Any staff who were to refuse to undertake duties in other circumstances would be subject to normal disciplinary proceedings, including financial penalties.

Court Reports

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional court reports will be written per annum under the provisions contained in the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Jack: On the basis of pilot trials run in five Crown court centres between May and December 1991, it is expected that between 20,000 and 29,000 additional reports will be required each year.

Prisoners (Towels)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will consider increasing the number of towels issued weekly to prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The range of items issued to inmates is subject to regular review. The number of towels currently issued each week is normally two but, because of a high incidence of vandalism, it is necessary to issue some 400,000 towels each year to meet the needs of the 45,000 inmates held in custody; this restricts the capacity of the prison service to increase the level of issue for individual prisoners. However, in an effort to improve the efficiency and acceptability of the item, the existing white towel is in the process of being replaced by one of larger size in deep-dyed colours.

Drug Prevention

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to renew the funding for each of the drug prevention projects currently funded by his Department as it reaches the end date of the period for which funds have been approved to date.

Mr. Jack: As I stated in my written answer of 27 October 1992, at column 578, in response to earlier questions from the hon. Member, funding for the 20 local drugs prevention teams has been agreed initially for three years in each case and active consideration is currently being given to the position of the teams beyond that period.

Car Phones

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidelines are given to the Metropolitan police about stopping motorists who drive while using a car or mobile phone.

(2) how many charges and convictions have been obtained by the Metropolitan police concerning the use of car phones while driving.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No such guidelines have been issued to the Metropolitan police. The police may take action against drivers in such cases for the offences of driving without due care and attention or driving without proper control of the vehicle. No figures are available to show the number of charges or convictions obtained by the Metropolitan police for such offences involving the use of telephones.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what target date he has set his Department to clear the backlog of asylum applications.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No specific date has been set. The increase in the number of asylum division staff to 500, together with streamlined administrative procedures, is already having a considerable impact on the current backlog. Further progress will be influenced by the rate of new applications and the impact on procedures of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 15 July, Official Report, column 775, to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) (a) which concepts used in the convention are the subject of common interpretation and (b) what is the common interpretation referred to.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Article 1 of the Dublin convention of 15 June 1990—Cm 1623—defines for the purposes of the convention the meaning of: an alien; an applicaation for asylum; an examination of an appliction for asylum; a residence permit; an entry visa; and a transit visa.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 15 July, Official Report, column 775, to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) whether any definition has been reached in respect of first host country.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. This matter is still under discussion between member states.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 15 July, Official Report, column 775, to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) (a) to which third countries it is intended to extend the system of the convention by means of parallel convention and (b) with which countries negotiations have commenced in respect of that convention.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Formal negotiations on extending the provisions of the Dublin convention will not be undertaken until the convention has been ratified by all member states. Extension to third countries will be by the unanimous agreement of the member states.

Security Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will publish, in any form that does not jeopardise national security, the number of entries in the names index and in the organisations index of the main security service computer system and provide a description of the kinds of information held;

(2) whether he will publish, in any form that does not jeopardise national security, the approximate total number of files held by the Security Service, the approximate number of red, amber and green files, and the proportion of files that are temporary; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Security Service holds only information which it needs in order to carry out the functions conferred upon it by the Security Service Act 1989. The service's record-keeping policy was described in the Security Service Commissioner's annual report for 1991. It would not be in the interests of national security to provide the detailed information requested.

Mr. John Samuels

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of Greater Manchester on the operation on Friday, 11 September which resulted in the complaint by Mr. John Samuels.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. These are operational matters which are the responsibility of the chief constable.

Charities

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures the Charity Commission uses when deciding whether or not to register charities formed to assist with specific disasters and emergencies and which require accelerated registration procedures to enable them to operate in good time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: In deciding whether to register an organisation as a charity the Charity Commissioners consider whether the object for which the organisation is established are exclusively charitable in law, accurately reflect the intended activities of the organisation and whether the activities proposed are acceptable for a body with charitable status.

Where it is strongly represented to the commissioners by the promoters of an organisation, which is formed to assist with a specific disaster or emergency, that any degree of delay in registering the charity would be harmful to the intended beneficiaries, the commissioners give priority consideration to that application for registration.

External Frontiers Convention

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he has made for the public distribution of the draft convention on external frontiers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Copies of the draft convention between the member states of the European Communities on the crossing of their external frontiers were placed in the Libraries of both Houses in July.

Worcester Kurdish Refugee Association

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Charity Commissioners expect to complete their investigation into the Worcester Kurdish Refugee Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Charity Commissioners expect to complete their inquiry into the affairs of the Worcester Kurdish Refugee Association in January 1993.

Hostels

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current cost level for repairs, additions or equipment in a hostel site which represents the dividing line between his Department's capital grant and operational expenditure.

Mr. Jack: Major refurbishment works, new building or extension costs, and the purchase of specific items of equipment which are expected to be in use for a number of years attract capital grant. The operational or revenue budget covers more basic redecoration and routine maintenance and the purchase of smaller items. There are items which from time to time do not easily fall into either of these categories and where judgments are made on a case by case basis as to the most appropriate form of funding.

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances a probation hostel or a bail hostel can refuse to accept as a resident a person whom the court wishes to let out on bail.

Mr. Jack: The Approved Probation and Bail Hostel Rules 1976 provide that, once a court has granted bail subject to a condition of residence in an approved hostel, admission can be refused only if there is no place available; or if the person falls outside the categories for which the hostel is approved; or if the defendant is suffering from severe subnormality or a psychopathic disorder; or with the consent of the Secretary of State.

Before the court reaches its decision, a probation officer may, through advice to the court, indicate that, in the circumstances of the individual case, a defendant would not be suitable for a place in an approved hostel, in line with the considerations set out in paragraph 16 of the "National Standard for the Management of Approved Probation and Bail Hostels". I will send my right hon. Friend a copy of the relevant section of these standards.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are normally on duty in probation and bail hostels in England and Wales (a) from 6 pm till midnight, (b) from midnight till 6 am and (c) at weekends.

Mr. Jack: [holding answer 27 October 1992]: All approved probation and bail hostels in England and Wales have 24-hour a day staff cover. The funding of a number of hostels was increased this year to ensure that there is provision for at least two members of staff to be on duty at night in any hostel. Since the deployment of staff is a matter for probation or voluntary management committees, detailed information on staff rotas is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners (Learning Difficulties)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish figures showing the current percentage of prison inmates in England and Wales who are known to have learning difficulties.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 October 1992]: Records of the number of prisoners with learning difficulties are not held centrally. In the White Paper, "Custody, Care and Justice"—Cm 1647—the Government stressed that the first priority for education programmes in prison must be to identify and provide help for those prisoners who have difficulty reading or writing and who are unable to do simple arithmetic. The national prison survey undertaken in 1991 indicated that 43 per cent. of prisoners had left school before the age of 16, prisoners had higher truancy rates than the general population, and 43 per cent. of prisoners had no qualification when they came into prison.

Criminal Justice Act 1991

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters he has received on the workings of the Criminal Justice Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 27 October 1992]: I regret that it is not possible to identify from central records of correspondence received from all sources how many of the several thousand letters dealt with in different parts of the Home Office each month refer to the workings of the Act, either as a single subject, or as one among several others. However, it is beyond question that many correspondents are referring to the Act and these referrals have increased since 1 October when the vast majority of its provisions came into effect.

Combination Orders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many combination orders he estimates will be made under provisions contained in the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 27 October 1992]: The power to make a combination order was introduced by section 11 of the Criminal Justice Act which came into effect on 1 October 1992. The criteria for the use of the power are set out in the section, but sentencing in any individual case is a matter for the sentencer alone. There is, at present, no basis on which to estimate the number of occasions upon which courts may exercise this power.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies who were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies who submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 27 October 1992]: The table provides information about tender invitations issued by my Department for projects requiring the supply of computer hardware and computer software since 9 April.

The value of each project is a matter of commercial and contractual confidentiality. Information about the number of companies who submitted a bid without prior invitation by my Department is not readily available.

Car Theft

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list for each police authority area the number of offences of (a) theft of and (b) unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle and (c) the combined total of the two committed by juveniles in each of the last five years for which figures are available and what percentage this was of the total number of offences in this category;

(2) if he will state for each police authority area and for England and Wales as a whole how many offences of theft from a vehicle were committed by juveniles in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what percentage this was of the total number of offences in this category in each case;

(3) if he will state for each police authority area and for England and Wales as a whole, how many offences of theft or unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle were committed by young adults in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what percentage this was of the total number of offences of this category;

(4) if he will state for each police authority area and for England and Wales as a whole how many offences of theft from a vehicle were committed by young adults in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what percentage this was in each case of the total number of offences in this category.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 20 October 1992]: The data in the table relate to the number of "known" offenders —persons found guilty, or cautioned—by offence category, specific age groups and police force area 1986 to 1990. Provisional data for 1991 will not be available before the end of 1992.

Ronnie Kray

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what treatment Ronnie Kray received at Heatherwood hospital, Ascot on 15 October; how many members of staff from Broadmoor hospital escorted him there on his visit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

Information about the treatment of individual patients is confidential between the hospital and the patient concerned. The provision of escorts for special hospital patients is an operational matter about which the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the Special Hospitals Service Authority, Dr. David Edmond.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much was spent on training and retraining magistrates in the financial years 1979-80, 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and the planned expenditure for 1992-93.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Statutory responsibility for providing training and retraining magistrates lies with the 105 magistrates courts committees in England and Wales. This is funded 80 per cent. from central Government grant and 20 per cent. from local funds. At this stage it is not possible to identify the amounts that have been spent by magistrates courts committees on training and retraining magistrates in the years in question, but measures are in hand to ensure that this information is recorded in future.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the names of those responsible for choosing magistrates for the borough of Sandwell and their length of service in each case.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The ultimate choice is that of the Lord Chancellor. He is advised by the Lord Chancellor's advisory committees, the members of which are as follows:

Name	Date of Appointment
Warley Advisory Committee
Mrs. D. Cox, JP (Chairman)	1985
D. L. Crump, Esq. JP	1987
Mrs. W. V. Dyke, JP	1991
Miss B. Fletcher, JP	1991
Mrs. F. J. Groves, JP	1981

Name	Date of Appointment
F. D. Head, Esq., JP	1987
Miss J. E. H. Marshall, JP	1987
H. E. Nottingham, Esq., JP	1991
C. G. Simmonds, Esq., JP	1991
J. Southall, Esq., JP	1981
R. G. Trigg, Esq.	1991
West Bromwich Advisory Committee
P. J. Elliott, Esq., JP (Chairman)	1977
Dr. A. R. M. Evans, JP	1991
D. A. Hamilton, Esq. JP	1991
A. Mandley, Esq., JP	1988
J. A. Neale, Esq., JP	1984
J. F. Nicklin, Esq.,	1988
D. Parish, Esq, JP	1981
D. B. Peakman, Esq.,	1991
A. Pitt, Esq., JP	1988
Mrs. S. M. Smith, JP	1991
Mrs. M. Wilkes, JP	1984
Mrs. D. M. Wills, JP	1991

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give the political balance of magistrates for the borough of Sandwell.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The political allegiances of the magistrates, at the time of their appointment, were as follows:

	Number
Warley
Conservative	70
Labour	54
Liberal Democrat	15
Independent and not known	16
West Bromwich
Conservative	79
Labour	43
Liberal Democrat	11
Independent and not known	13

The Lord Chancellor has asked the West Bromwich advisory committee to seek additional appointments to improve the political balance.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to undertake public consultations about substituting the channel tunnel high speed link running between Stratford and King's Cross for the North London line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Government expects to receive the report of Union Railways on the channel tunnel rail link by the end of December. We shall consider carefully its proposals and options, and will then announce a route for public consultation. We shall aim to do this as soon as possible.

M20

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in connection with the widening of the M20 between junctions 3 and 5 (a) how many dwellings he has acquired under the discretionary power in section 62 of the Planning and Compensations Act 1991, (b) how many dwellings he has agreed to acquire under section 62 but where completion has not yet taken place, (c) how many applications to purchase under section 62 are still awaiting his decision and (d) what is the average acquisition cost to his Department per dwelling of the houses acquired under section 62.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: (a) one dwelling has been acquired under the discretionary power contained in section 62 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991; (b) further 17 are in the process of acquisition following acceptance of their application for discretionary purchase; (c) there are 32 outstanding applications for discretionary purchase awaiting decision; (d) the average cost per dwelling is expected to be in the region of £92,000.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in connection with the widening of the M20 between junctions 3 and 5 (a) how many dwellings he has acquired under the blight notice procedures, (b) how many dwellings he has the acquisition still to complete under those procedures, (c) what is the average acquisition cost to his Department per dwelling and (d) how many of the dwellings already acquired, and to be acquired, are on land that is now actually required for this road widening scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: (a) 264 dwellings have been acquired to date under the blight provisions; (b) a further 28 are in the process of acquisition following acceptance of blight notices; (c) the average cost per dwelling is in the region of £92,000; (d) 57 dwellings are on land that is expected to be physically affected by the widening scheme.

British Transport Police

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake that after the privatisation of British Rail the British Transport police will remain as a unified force, independent of the metropolitan and county forces.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have no plans to end the present arrangement under which the British Transport police, as a separate service independent of the county police forces, have responsibility for security and the enforcement of law and order on the railways.

Railways, United States

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which railways' rapid transports he visited in the United States of America this summer.

Mr. MacGregor: Unfortunately I had to cut short my visit to the United States, and so could not undertake my planned visit to see commuter services provided by the private sector in the Chicago conurbation.

Norbreck Parade, London

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement detailing the reasons why his Department directed the local planning authority to refuse the application for permission to construct an access to Norbreck parade, London NW10, from the north circular road, and which was the subject of appeal proceedings on 14 October at the Ealing town hall.

Mr. Norris: The Department directed refusal of this application in order to safeguard the safety and free flow of traffic on the north circular road.

Marshalling Yards, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has had with British Rail concerning the future of Doncaster's marshalling yards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This is a commercial matter for British Rail.

Jubilee Line

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now authorise the construction of the Jubilee line extension.

Mr. Norris: No. Discussions with the private sector continue.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees and what remuneration each currently receives.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The information, listed by public body, is as follows:

	Period of appointment

ENVIRONMENT

Leasehold Enfranchisement

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to separate the leasehold enfranchisement elements of the Housing, Land and Urban Development Bill from the other parts of the Bill and to present them as a separate Bill.

Mr. Baldry: No.

Urban Regeneration Agency

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet Stoke on Trent city council to discuss its response to the Urban Regeneration Agency consultation paper.

Mr. Robin Squire: The consultation exercise on our proposals on the Urban Regeneration Agency closed on 21 September. The Department took note of Stoke-on-Trent's response, along with the many others we received, in preparing the details of the agency in the Housing and Urban Development Bill which was introduced to the House on 22 October. It is too late to take receipt of further formal comments but I would be happy to discuss our plans for the agency when I visit Stoke-on-Trent on 13 November.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it is policy that any future arrangements for the proposed Urban Regeneration Agency will not discriminate against those authorities currently in receipt of derelict land grant but currently without assisted area and other status.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Housing and Urban Development Bill makes provision for a new unified grant regime for the Urban Regeneration Agency which will replace derelict land grant and the other grants to be transferred to it. The Government will take account of the current priorities for these grants, including derelict land grant, when constructing the new unified regime.

Council Tax

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account is taken of home improvements in valuation of households for the council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: The band shown in the valuation list compiled on 1 April 1993 should reflect the size, layout and character of each dwelling on that day. If there has been a change to a dwelling since it was valued, and before 1 April 1993, the banding of the dwelling may be reconsidered by the listing officer. In all cases, the banding will reflect the open market value of the dwelling, including any subsequent improvement, as at 1 April 1991.

After 1 April 1993, home improvements and other factors which lead to a material increase in the value of a dwelling will only be taken into account when it is subsequently sold.

Eco-labelling Scheme

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in implementing the eco-labelling scheme; and how it will be funded in 1992-93.

Mr. Maclean: The Government have laid regulations before both Houses of Parliament which are due to come into force on 1 November establishing the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board as a non-departmental public body and giving it responsibility for administering and promoting the EC eco-labelling scheme in the United Kingdom.

The board was set up in an advisory capacity in July under the chair of Dr. Elizabeth Nelson. It has already made a good start in preparing the ground for implementation of the scheme and developing plans for a communications strategy. On 23 October the board and European Commission jointly hosted in the first meeting of competent bodies from EC member states, in London, to discuss issues of common interest.

Unfortunately there have been delays at the Commission in setting in place the necessary administrative arrangements for the scheme. The United Kingdom has played and will continue to play a leading role in the development of the eco-labelling scheme. Through our presidency of the European Community we are pressing the Commission to implement the scheme speedily and asking that other member states show the same commitment to it as we are showing. The board remains hopeful that the first eco-labels will start appearing on goods in the shops in the early part of 1993.

Parliamentary approval of this new expenditure will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the central environmental services vote—class VIII vote 5. Pending the approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £550,000 will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Transfer of Undertakings and Acquired Rights

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the advice he has issued to local authorities over the transfer of undertakings and acquired rights directive.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Directive was implemented in the United Kingdom by the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. We are at present consulting interested parties on a draft of guidance to be issued under section 9 of the Local Government Act 1992, which states our view that it would be most unusual for the Regulations to apply to a normal contract let under the compulsory competitive tendering legislation. However the interpretation of the law in individual cases is a matter for the courts.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies who were invited to tenders, (d) the number of companies who submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. Howard: The following major contracts have been awarded by my department since 9 April 1992 for the supply of computer hardware and software. No companies submitted a bid without prior invitation.

(a) Provision of computer hardware
Description of services: Provision of hardware and software to enable the department to perform automatic security back ups of its computer bureau systems.
Number of companies invited to tender:—3
Company awarded the contract: Digital Equipment Corporation
Value of contract:—£116,736
Duration of Contract:—Not applicable

(b) Provision of computer software
(i) Description of Services: Provision of a personal computer version of library periodicals software formerly provided by Comshare as part of their bureau service.
Number of companies invited to tender:—1
Company awarded the contract:—Comshare Ltd.
Value of contract:—£36,450
Duration of contract:—4 months

(ii) Description of services: Provision of computer system design software.
Number of companies invited to tender:—1
Company awarded the contract:—LBMS
Value of Contract:—£24,300
Duration of contract:—Not applicable

(iii) Description of services: IEF software
Number of companies invited to tender:—1
Company awarded the contract:—JMA Information Engineering
Value of contract:—£8,500
Duration of contract:—Not applicable

(iv) Description of services: Helpdesk software for VAX VMS system.
Number of companies invited to tender: 1
Company awarded the contract:—Intercom Data Systems
Value of contract:—£17,000
Duration of contract:—Not applicable

(v) Description of services: Diskeeper Plus Software (defragmentation)
Number of companies invited to tender:—1
Company awarded the contract:—Executive Software
Value of contract:—£4,700
Duration of contract: Not applicable

In addition, during the same period my department issued 1,471 orders for minor items of computer hardware, software and associated consumables, over half of which were from "call-off" contracts that were placed before 9 April 1992. The combined value of these orders is £1,238,000.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution United Kingdom nuclear fuel cycle experts have made to the International Atomic Agency's RADWASS programme on developing safety standards for nuclear waste management.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom plays a major part in the planning and development of the Radioactive Waste Safety Standards programme of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Disabled Facilities Grants

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe of 3 July, Official Report, column 719, what information is available to him on the numbers of disabled people who receive no disabled facilities grants because the income or capital or family members is deemed excessive; what proportion of these do not consequently obtain the adaptations they require; if all such cases are automatically referred to the Department of Social Security for consideration of their duties under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not collect details of applicants for disabled facilities grant who do not qualify for assistance under the means test, because of the financial circumstances of family members, and who subsequently do not obtain the adaptations they need. There is no automatic referral procedure to social services departments. However, the Department jointly with the Department of Health, has reminded social services authorities of their responsibilities under the 1970 Act to provide financial assistance in cases where a disabled person will otherwise face hardship in meeting their share of the cost of adaptations.

EDUCATION

Funding

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will reconsider the fifth report of Session 1990-91 from the Education, Science and Arts Committee, and the first report of the School Teachers Review Body and take steps to clarify the arrangements for the funding of education.

Mr. Forth: The Government do not accept that there is any lack of clarity about the current arrangements for funding education. Under these arrangements the great bulk of central Government support for local authority expenditure is through revenue support grant which is not earmarked for particular services. Central Government are accountable for its overall support for local government spending through revenue support grant, while individual local authorities are accountable to their electorates for the decisions they take both about their overall spending and the balance of that spending between and within services.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what response he has made to the evidence submitted to his Department by the Association of County Councils on the likely vulnerability of shared local education authority/funding agency transitional arrangements.

Mr. Forth: The ACC's comments on the proposals in the White Paper have been carefully considered. In addition, my right hon. Friend has had a meeting with representatives of the ACC.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what guidance he has issued to grant-maintained schools on leakages of chlorofluorocarbons and other ozone-destroying chemicals; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he is taking to advise local education authorities on replacing halons in school fire extinguishing systems with non-ozone depleting substances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Department does not at present issue specific guidance on the use of ozone friendly or CFC-free materials in school buildings. However, the Department is currently reviewing the scope and content of its guidance on environmental standards for educational buildings.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from Birmingham local education authority about parental choice and grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: No recent representations have been received from Birmingham local education authority specifically about parental choice and grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the sources and evidence on which the statement made at paragraph 13.3 of the White Paper, "Choice and Diversity: A New Framework for Schools", that grant-maintained schools secure better value for money is based.

Mr. Forth: Her Majesty's inspectorate has observed that grant-maintained schools have generally deployed their resources to good effect. The majority of respondents to a survey of grant-maintained schools conducted by the Grant-Maintained Schools Centre reported increased ability to focus spending on delivery of education in the classroom.

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees, and what remuneration each currently receives.

Mr. Forman: The details requested are given in the table. Information on the qualifications of appointees is not kept centrally, but we are satisfied that the qualifications of appointees to this Department's public bodies fully meet the standards required.

each monthly board meeting.

[3] Members who have previously served on the Universities Funding Council or the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council.

[4] Membership of the Higher Education Funding Council, England carries with it an honorarium of £4,000 per annum.

[5] Members of the Further Education Funding Council receive an honorarium of £4,000 per annum.

[6] Members of the Further Education Unit have had their periods of office extended from the original expiry date of 31 March 1993 (30 April in the case of Mr. Ainsworth) to 31 March 1994.

[7] Mr. Pascall receives remuneration of £285 per day for the time spend on National Curriculum Council business. This is reimbursed to his employer.

A-Levels

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils obtained three or more A-levels in (a) 1982 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Forman: The estimated number of school leavers in England who obtained three or more A-levels was 72,600 in 1982 and 86,700 in 1991, the latest year for which information is available.

Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is current per capita spending on education in schools in England and Wales; and what it was in 1982.

Mr. Forth: The latest year for which actual spending information is available is 1990-91. In that year, school-based funding available per nursery, primary and secondary pupil in England was some £1,620 per pupil. This figure includes unspent balances held by schools at the year end under local management schemes. In 1981-82, school-based funding in England was some £740 per pupil, which represents some £1,240 per pupil at 1990-91 prices. There was a real-terms increase in funding per pupil between 1981-82 and 1990-91 of 31 per cent. Expenditure on schools in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Teachers Pensions Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the Teachers Pensions Agency.

Mr. Forth: The Teachers Pensions Agency was established on 1 April 1992. Since that date, the following papers and guides have been issued:

The TPA Business Plan and Framework documents
A guide to Teachers Superannuation for Further Education and Sixth Form Colleges
Two Teachers' Superannuation Scheme Fact Sheets
A Guide for employers to the TPA
A Guide for teachers to the TPA
The first TPA newsletter

In addition, many of the explanatory and option leaflets in daily use by employers and scheme members have been redesigned and reissued.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Coal Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many tonnes of coal were imported from the Netherlands in 1991; what was the pithead cost of that coal; and if he will make it his policy to impose an anti-dumping duty on such coal.

Mr. Eggar: The Netherlands has closed all its mines and now produces no coal. In 1991 the statistics recorded 6,000 tones of coal originated in the Netherlands. It is assumed that these 6,000 tonnes were first imported into the Netherlands from other countries, processed there, and subsequently re-exported to the United Kingdom. The statistics also record that in 1991, 4·713 million tonnes of coal, destined to the United Kingdom, passed through the Netherlands in consignment.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for each port in the United Kingdom, the tonnages of coal imports by year for the last four years; and what were the points of origin.

Mr. Eggar: Breakdowns of coal imports by port of entry, and by country of origin, for the last four years and for the current year to date, are as follows:

	1988	1989	1990	1991	[1]1992

[1] January to August.

[2] Some imports previously recorded by Customs and Excise as originating in the Netherlands have been re-allocated to the other countries indicated or, where revised country or origin data is not available, included in the residual entry "Others". This re-allocation has been carried out for 1991 and estimates of such imports previously classified to the Netherlands have been included for 1990. Figures for earlier years have not been re-allocated to individual countries.

[3] Includes imports previously recorded separately for the German Democratic Republic.

Coal Stocks

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans he has to sell existing coal stocks (a) in the EEC and (b) outside the EEC at a reduced price to ease the burden on the Exchequer;

(2) what proposals he has to auction the entire stock of coal above ground to the highest overseas bidder.

Mr. Eggar: The sale of coal stocks is a matter for the owners of the stocks. More generally as my right hon. Friend indicated to the House on 21 October, I will report on the level of coal stocks and whether plans to run them down are sensibly phased as part of the current review of coal policy.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to re-examine the recommendations numbered 13, 23, 36, 43, 44, 45, 48 and 49 in the second report of the Energy Committee, Session 1991-92, on the consequences of electricity privatisation.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend announced on 26 October, Official Report, columns 522-23, the scope of the review which we will be conducting of the proposed closure of 21 pits, within the context of the Government's energy policy.

Divisional Papers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the heads of division of (a) the business task force 1, (b) the companies investigation branch, (c) the competition policy division, (d) the financial services division, (e) the insurance division, (f) the manufacturing technology division and (g) the telecommunications and posts division, respectively.

Mr. Eggar: The details[1] are as follows:

RECHAR

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the initial instalment of RECHAR programme moneys to be specifically allocated to the projects; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in the payments.

Mr. Sainsbury: In accordance with the standard procedure for the European Community structural funds, the allocation is made by 11 area committees, each of which includes central and local government and European Commission representatives. So far, grant of £11·6 million has been committed to 129 projects, and a further £29·5 million of grant has been approved in principle to 359 projects. Further committee meetings will be held shortly.

In accordance with the standard procedures grant is, for financial control reasons, not generally paid on to final beneficiaries until they certify their own expenditure. So far grant of £96,000 has been paid to two projects.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria he has used in his Department's monthly publication, Energy Trends, to exclude natural uranium, enriched uranium and plutonium from the table of imports and exports of fuels.

Mr. Eggar: The exclusion of natural uranium, enriched uranium and plutonium from the data on imports and exports of fuels in Energy Trends follows internationally accepted practices for the compilation of energy statistics. There are difficulties in compiling aggregate energy statistics that include nuclear fuels, including the technical problems associated with converting data to a common unit of measurement that can be compared with other fuels.

Clean Coal Technology

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investments his Department, and predecessor Departments, have made annually since 1979, to support research, development and demonstration projects in clean coal technology; and if he will make a statement on the criteria adopted in deciding upon investment.

Mr. Eggar: The estimated annual investment by my Department and the former Department of Energy in support of coal research and development is as follows:

1991 prices	£ million
1979-80	5·3
1980-81	5·7
1981-82	8·3
1982-83	6·0
1983-84	5·3
1984-85	1·3
1985-86	1·1
1986-87	2·5
1987-88	1·7
1988-89	1·1
1989-90	2·2
1990-91	11·8
1991-92	5·1

Total public sector expenditure on coal R and D over the period 1981-92 was approximately £1,000 million, at 1991 prices, of which around half was associated with the development of clean coal technology.

The Department's coal R and D programme is primarily focussed on the development of new clean coal technologies that improve the environmental performance of coal utilisation. The criteria for assessing the desirability of specific project proposals are set out within a document prepared by the Department's coal task force in August 1991. Factors include the degree of novelty, relevance to the overall objectives of the R and D programme, and the potential for exploitability. If the objective of the work is commercial, the potential benefit to United Kingdom company competitiveness is also taken into account.

Natural Gas

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantity of natural gas is currently consumed annually in the United Kingdom (a) by electricity generators and (b) by other customers; and what quantity his Department estimates will be consumed by electricity generators and other customers in (a) 1995, (b) 2000, (c) 2010, (d) 2020, (e) 2030, (f) 2040 and (g) 2050, respectively.

Mr. Eggar: Natural gas sales to (a) electricity generators and (b) other customers in 1991 and for the first half of 1992 in Gigawatt hours were as follows:

	Electricity generators	Other customers
1991	13,686	581,072
1992 (January-June)	7,239	305,556

Source: Energy Trends (Table 9).

An indication of the likely range of gas requirements in some possible future energy scenarios can be obtained from "Energy Paper No. 59", which was recently published by this Department. A copy of this paper has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantity of natural gas in the British sector of the North sea his Department estimates (a) is in gas fields currently being exploited, (b) is in gas fields identified as economically exploitable but not currently being exploited and (c) is yet to be discovered in economically exploitable gas fields.

Mr. Eggar: My Department's most recent estimate of recoverable gas reserves remaining in the United Kingdom were published in the Brown Book—"Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom"—in April 1992. Reserves so far identified as economically exploitable are as follows:

Billion cubic metres

	Proven	Proven plus probable	Maximum possible
Fields in production and approved for development	540	805	985
Other discovered fields identified as economically exploitable	0	430	820
Total	540	1,235	1,805

In addition, reserves in unappraised discoveries and undrilled prospects are estimated at between 395 and 1,557 billion cu m.

Electricity Costs

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the current costs of producing a unit of electricity by (a) coal, (b) gas, (c) nuclear and (d) wind, respectively; and what are the projected costs over the next decade.

Mr. Eggar: The comparable capital and full fuel costs per kilowatt-hour of power stations using coal, gas and nuclear fuels depend significantly upon the contractual terms of fuel purchase, and the contractual terms under which the power station is to be constructed and operated. These are commercial matters for the companies concerned. As far as electricity is concerned it is up to the Director General of Electricity Supply to ensure that the regional electricity companies comply with their economic purchasing obligations. My Department will, however, be assessing the evidence available on the comparative economics of coal as against other sources as part of the Government's review.

Cost data for wind energy are likely to be given in the report of the Renewable Energy Advisory Group, which I hope to receive shortly, and which I expect to be published soon afterwards.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the cost of electricity for manufacturing industry in the United Kingdom and in each of the other European Community countries.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 26 October 1992]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 26 October, Official Report, columns 518-20.

Boreholes

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will direct British Coal to provide information to the British Geological Survey about its 1958 to 1965 and 1973 to 1985 drilling programmes to establish the undersea extension of the Northumberland and Durham coalfield; and if he will ensure that the academic community has access to this information.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that British Coal already provides information to the British Geological Survey in accordance with statutory requirements.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the number of boreholes drilled between Acklington Whin Dyke and the Grange Park fault in the Northumberland and Durham coalfield; and if he will list the borehole numbers, their co-ordinates, the coal sections and the depths to each coal section.

Mr. Eggar: The Department does not keep information on boreholes. This is a matter for British Coal.

Sectoral Divisions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the sectoral divisions he has created in his Department; for each what are their current work programme priorities and recent contacts; and if he will list the studies, projects and research reports they have commissioned.

Mr. Eggar: In the reorganisation of the Department which my right hon. Friend announced on 3 July he said that the Department would be adopting a more directly sectoral approach in the industries for which it is responsible. Seven new sectoral divisions were created to cover the key sectors not previously dealt with in this way:

Chemicals and biotechnology
Steel, metals and minerals
Vehicles (also covering shipbuilding)
Aerospace
Electronic and electrical engineering
Mechanical engineering
Textiles and retailing

The sectoral divisions, both new and old, have been given the explicit role of sponsoring their industries, not uncritically, but as the basis for an informed dialogue and a constructive partnership between the Government and business. In addition, the new industrial competitiveness division is examining what lessons can be learnt from the leading industrialised countries and ensuring that policies of all Government Departments take due account of the need to promote the competitiveness of United Kingdom industry and commerce.

All sectoral divisions are taking forward my right hon. Friend's initiative and developing their contacts with their industries. My right hon. Friend will be reviewing their current work priorities and progress made during the MINIS discussions which he will be holding with his officials over the next few months.

Halons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research or evaluations his Department has conducted or commissioned on new gases which could replace ozone-destroying halons in fire-fighting applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None. My Department and the Department of the Environment are willing to consider requests from industry for support for collaborative research into alternative gases and technologies. However, halons are only one of five commonly used fire extinguishing media and many businesses are finding that they can use water, foam, powder or CO_2 instead.

Electricity

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total capacity of electricity supplied to the United Kingdom from French sources in the years 1990, 1991 and to the third quarter of 1992.

Mr. Eggar: The quantity of electricity supplied to the United Kingdom from French sources in the years 1990, 1991 and in the first three quarters of 1992 is set out in the table.

	Electricity supplied from France (Gigawatt hours)
1990	11,990
1991	16,422

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total capacity of electricity supplied to France from United Kingdom sources in the years 1990, 1991 and to the third quarter of 1992.

Mr. Eggar: The quantity of electricity supplied to France from United Kingdom sources in the years 1990, 1991 and in the first three quarters of 1992 is set out in the table.

Pit Closures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the cost to the Government of maintaining output at the 31 pits scheduled in his announcement of 13 October to be closed; whether this includes the market value of the coal being stockpiled; and whether he will publish a table showing exactly how the £100 million per month referred to in that announcement is made up by item of expenditure.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 27 October 1992] British Coal has said that it cannot expect to sell more than 40 million tonnes of coal to the electricity supply industry next year. This is 25 million tonnes less than in the current year.

The cash operating costs of the pits concerned are about £100 million per month. This excludes stocking costs.

The coal produced could only be sold at distressed prices, over an extended period, if at all.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many pits have been subject to the consultative review procedure on redundancies in the last decade; and how many have remained open following the review.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 26 October 1992]: The issue which the hon. Member has raised is a matter for British Coal.

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will request National Power and PowerGen to announce no further station closures during the moratorium on pit closures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The procedure governing power station closures by National Power and PowerGen is prescribed by a licence condition. The Director General of Electricity Supply announced last week that he has decided to appoint an independent assessor to examine the issues in relation to their power station closures.

Power Stations

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the expected rate of depletion of reserves of natural gas within United Kingdom or European Community ownership, at those volumes of gas contracted to be burned by gas-powered power stations in operation, or likely to be approved, stated in approximate volume, time and percentage terms.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 October 1992] My Department's latest estimates of United Kingdom gas reserves are set out in the Brown Book "Development of Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom". The rate at which gas reserves are depleted will depend on many factors including demand, development costs, prices, levels of imports and technological developments. I am not aware of any plans to import gas from European Community countries.

As my right hon. Friend told the House on 21 October, we will be producing for the House the conclusions we draw from our estimates of reserves, and will report on the scale of gas-generated power stations in production, in build and in the planning process.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef Premium

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the arrangements for payment of beef premium from 1 January 1993.

Mr. Curry: Commission legislation giving effect to the new premium scheme is still in the course of preparation and arrangements for its application in the United Kingdom cannot therefore be finalised. I recognise the need for some form of transitional arrangement so that the provision of animals for slaughter is not interrupted in the early months of the year, but this is still to be negotiated.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Agriculture Council held on 26 and 27 October.

Mr. Gummer: I chaired the meeting of the Council of Agriculture Ministers in Luxembourg on 26 and 27 October. My hon. Friends the Minister of State in my Department and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Scotland represented the United Kingdom.

Following a short discussion on GATT I confirmed on behalf of the Community, that the Commission should attempt urgently to seek an accommodation with the United States on the Uruguay round and the oilseeds dispute following the mandates already given by the Council and using the Commission's powers under the treaty of Rome. I understand talks will resume shortly.

Progress was made on a wide range of other issues dealing with the implementation of CAP reform and of the single market. Decisions will be needed on these before the end of year.

Bananas

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the relationship between the single market for bananas and (a) the Lomé convention and (b) GATT negotiations in the Uruguay round.

Mr. Curry: The Government are determined that the arrangements for the single market in bananas should meet its Lomé convention obligations, whilst being compatible with a successful outcome to the GATT Uruguay round.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the division of licences on the single market for bananas amongst (a) Latin American producers, (b) the Association of Caribbean Producers and (c) European Community producers.

Mr. Curry: Negotiations are continuing on single market arrangements for bananas. No agreement has yet been reached. The Commission proposal would require licensing of all fruit from non-EC and non-ACP sources and of imports from ACP origins that exceed traditional volumes of trade. The detailed provisions for licence allocation are complex but would broadly distribute 66·5 per cent. of the total on the basis of past trade in non-EC and non-ACP fruit; 30 per cent. would be available to operators who undertook to market a related quantity of EC or ACP fruit; 3·5 per cent. would be available to newcomers to the trade.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement concerning the level of banana exports to the European Community in 1993 from (a) Caribbean exporters and (b) Latin American exporters.

Mr. Curry: The precise level of banana exports to the European Community in 1993 will depend on many factors. Negotiations on the bananas dossier are continuing and it is therefore not possible, at this stage, to forecast the level of imports in 1993 from either the Caribbean or Latin America.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent (a) Caribbean, (b) Latin American and (c) European Community producers will have access to banana markets under the single market system.

Mr. Curry: Negotiations are continuing on single market arrangements for bananas. The Commission's proposals would apply a quota to all imports of bananas from non-EC and non-ACP sources, including Latin America; non-traditional volumes from ACP sources would also be covered; EC and ACP supplies would continue free of duty; all others would face a 20 per cent. duty. No agreement has so far been reached regarding the single market arrangements.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans Her Majesty's Government have for the maintenance of an orderly market at the start of 1993 if the single market for bananas is not fully in place.

Mr. Curry: The Government are working hard to secure agreement on a common organisation of the market in bananas by the end of this year. We shall be discussing with the Commission and other member states what arrangements may be necessary at the start of 1993 in the light of developments in the negotiations.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the responsibilities of Her Majesty's Government to Commonwealth banana exporters as a result of the Lomé convention.

Mr. Curry: The Lomé convention imposes obligations on all EC member states. In particular, article 1 of protocol 5 of that convention states:

> "In respect of its banana exports to the Community markets, no ACP State shall be placed, as regards access to its traditional markets and its advantages on those markets, in a less favourable situation than in the past or at present."

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement concerning the establishment of a quota system under the single market for bananas.

Mr. Curry: The Commission has proposed a system for the common organisation of the Community banana market based on an absolute quota on imports from non-EC and non-ACP sources, and on ACP supplies above traditional levels. This proposal provides the basis for the negotiations between member states that are currently under way.

Geopathic Stress

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department is currently carrying out into geopathic stress; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Department currently spends about £50 million a year on agricultural research relevant to environmental problems. Details are given in the MAFF publication "Scientific Research and Development: The Environment", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

CAP Reforms

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what consideration was given to introducing the common agricultural policy reforms over more than one year; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when more information about the detail of the common agricultural policy reforms will be made available to farmers;

(3) what representations he has received about the speed of the common agricultural policy reforms.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry is in regular contact with representatives of consumer, farming and environmental organisations to discuss all aspects of the common agricultural policy reforms, which are being phased in over a four-year period. An explanatory booklet on the arable scheme was sent to farmers at the beginning of September; a copy was placed in the Library of the House. Discussion of detailed rules for the reformed beef and sheepmeat regimes is still continuing; farmers will be given information on these as soon as it is available.

Eggs

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce salmonella testing on eggs imported into the United Kingdom from the EC and marketed in the United Kingdom as packed in the United Kingdom, before such eggs are introduced into the retail market.

Mr. Soames: Imported eggs are already subject to salmonella testing and where positive results are found these are pursued with the exporting member state. To delay the distribution of such eggs would be a clear breach of European Community law.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to fix a date for ending salmonella testing on laying flocks to bring the United Kingdom into line with the rest of the EC.

Mr. Soames: The package of measures introduced by the Government to combat salmonella in poultry, including the testing of laying flocks, has been an important factor in helping to restore confidence in British eggs.

We shall continue to keep these measures under review, taking account of the progress being made in Brussels towards the introduction of Communitywide measures for the control of salmonella in poultry.

Suckler Cows and Sheep

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the base year for suckler cows and sheep used to establish the quota for herds and flocks.

Mr. Curry: For suckler cow premium, the Government have chosen to base quotas on claims in respect of the 1992 marketing year.

For ewe premium, individual producers will receive quota equal to their eligible sheep numbers in 1991, provided they also made a valid claim in 1992. However, the total quota available to the United Kingdom industry will be based on the number of eligible animals in the national flock in 1990. The difference between the 1991 and 1990 numbers—some 320,000 ewes—will be used to create the national ewe premium quota reserve.

These decisions provide the United Kingdom suckler cow and sheep industries with the maximum quota permitted under the Council regulations.

Milk

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he intends to make to fund the individual farmer for milk recording under the new system in place of the milk marketing board.

Mr. Curry: I understand that the Milk Marketing Board envisages that its proposed successor co-operative would continue to offer a milk recording service. This would be available to non-members on a commercial basis. It will be open to other organisations to offer competing services.

PRIME MINISTER

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with President Bush over the circumstances surrounding the imposition of sanctions by the United Nations against Libya; and what plans Her Majesty's Government have to raise the issues surrounding Lockerbie at the United Nations.

The Prime Minister: The Government have worked closely with the American administration on all aspects of the Lockerbie case, including United Nations Security Council resolutions 731 and 748.

Bloodstock

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister if he will institute an interdepartmental review of the case for reducing the level of value added tax on bloodstock in the United Kingdom to reduce the difference between the United Kingdom rate and the rates levied in France and Ireland.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 October 1992]: The Government recognise the regional economic importance of the bloodstock industry. My right hon. Friend the Paymaster General has worked hard with industry representatives to ensure that it is not significantly disadvantaged by the continued difference in VAT rates between member states. The introduction of the flat rate farmers' scheme and a 0·75 per cent. cut in betting duty in the 1992 Budget will help to secure the right environment in which the industry can compete successfully.

Ministers receive many well-argued cases for tax relief, many of which appear at least as deserving of a reduced rate as bloodstock. The Government believe that their long-standing policy of a VAT system based on a zero rate and a single positive rate is simple for all traders and cheap to administer.

Pit Closures

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from the General Secretary of the TUC about pit closures; and what reply he is sending.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 October 1992]: Following British Coal's announcement of pit closures on 13 October the General Secretary of the TUC, Mr. Willis, wrote to me on 15, 17 and 20 October.

In replying, I noted that the issues he raised had been addressed in Parliament on a number of occasions and that we looked forward to the TUC's contribution to the widespread consultation announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Mr. Willis also wrote to me twice on 26 October. I shall reply to these letters shortly.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Departmental Offices

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about (a) the timetable, (b) the location, (c) the space requirement and (d) the cost of the provision of new office accommodation for his Department.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend is considering the future location of the Department, which requires approximately 70,000 sq ft of useable space. He expects to make an announcement on the matter in due course and the Department will then move to its new headquarters as soon as possible.

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointee and what remuneration each currently receives.

Mr. Key: The Department of National Heritage is still in the process of setting up central records and the information required to answer this question is not yet centrally available.

National Lottery

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether a national lottery will be classified by the Government as gambling.

Mr. Brooke: The Government made it quite clear in the White Paper "A National Lottery: Raising Money for Good Causes", Cm. 1861, that lotteries, including the national lottery, represent the "softest" form of gambling. Properly regulated, the national lottery will provide a harmless form of entertainment.

Exhibition, Upper Waiting Hall

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Royal Armouries' new museum in Leeds to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Key: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 26 to 30 October 1992.

Tourism

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many (a) foreign and (b) domestic visitors are estimated to have been to (i) the Tower of London, (ii) Hampton Court and (iii) Greenwich in each of the years from 1987 to 1991; and how many are expected to visit each in 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Key: The figures for estimates of the number of visitors to the Tower of London, Hampton Court and Greenwich are published annually by the British tourist authority and the English tourist board. These figures, which are set out in the table, are not compiled on a foreign/domestic visitor basis.

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Tower of London	2,289,400	2,181,700	2,214,000	2,298,700	1,923,500
Hampton Court	590,600	533,000	538,800	521,000	502,400
Cutty Sark, Greenwich	375,700	401,000	360,100	411,000	437,500
National Maritime Museum, Greenwich	442,000	707,400	423,800	563,000	587,900

Figures rounded to the nearest hundred.

There are no projected figures for the period 1992 to 1994.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Home Carers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to exempt home carers from obligations for classified business miles payments, for education purposes.

Mr. Dorrell: I am very much aware of the important and valuable service provided by home carers. If carers receive motor mileage allowances in respect of business journeys or volunteer driving, no tax is payable if the allowances do no more than cover their costs. The allowances are liable to tax only if the allowances exceed actual costs and so result in a profit. If, however, the hon. Member is concerned about the tax treatment given in a particular case, I would be happy to look into it if he would let me have the usual details.

Fraud

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much his Department has saved from the investigation of fraud in the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the targeted savings for the next financial year.

Mr. Dorrell: Such information is not available. But in the year 1991-92 the direct yield from Inland Revenue counter-evasion work was some £1·4 billion, excluding any future or deterrent effects.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number of people prosecuted for fraud by his Department in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The number of successful Inland Revenue prosecutions for false accounts or returns of income, false claims to personal allowances, deductions or repayments, false PAYE returns, and sub-contractor exemption certificate frauds, in the year 1991-92 was 167.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number of whole-time equivalent staff employed by the Inland Revenue to detect and prosecute fraud; and what is the cost of their employment.

Mr. Dorrell: During the year 1991-92 a total of 3,600 staff units were employed by the Inland Revenue in the detection and prosecution of possible or actual tax evasion, including fraud. The cost of their employment was some £115 million.

Mortgages (Negative Equity)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of mortgages in England with negative equity, and the number who will benefit directly from the recently announced changes in limits to unsecured loans and MIRAS entitlement.

Mr. Nelson: Estimates of the number of households with negative equity have varied considerably. A figure of around 1 million for the United Kingdom was published in the August edition of the "Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin".

The number of those who will benefit directly from the measures recently announced by the Government will depend on a range of factors, including the proportion of them who wish to move; the way in which they choose to go about it; their personal circumstances; the attitude of their lender; and the extent to which mortgage indemnity insurance can be transferred. In practice, the number of potential beneficiaries is likely to be in the tens of thousands.

EC Contributors

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the net contributors to the EC and the amount they each contribute; and if he will list the net recipients of funds from the EC and how much each receives.

Sir John Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor) on 22 June 1992, at column 5.

Research and Development

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated amount currently being spent on all forms of research and development excluding defence; and what were the comparable figures for 1982 and 1972.

Mr. Nelson: The available information for 1990 is given in table 2.2.2 of the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development 1992", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Figures for 1989 were published in the 1991 edition. Information for 1982 and 1972 on a comparable basis is not available.

Housing Associations

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response he has made to representations from the National Federation of Housing Associations about the retention of the £2 billion grant for housing associations; and if he will make it his policy that no cuts in expenditure will be made to the budget for the west midlands.

Mr. Portillo: It would not be appropriate for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor to respond in detail to representations in advance of his autumn statement on 12 November.

Fact-finding Visits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the fact-finding visits made in the last 12 months by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible; and what were the findings resulting from each visit.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executives of the Royal Mint, Central Statistical Office and Valuation Office executive agencies. I have asked each of them to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from W. McLennan chief executive of the Central Statistical Office to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 28 October 1992.

I have been asked to reply direct to question No. 49, which you tabled for answer on 26 October 1992.

Neither I, nor my predecessor, Sir Jack Hibbert, have made any official fact-finding visits in the last twelve months.

Letter from R. R. B. Shutter, chief executive of the Valuation Office Agency to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992

In your question to the Chancellor ref: 3/0470 you ask for a note of the factfinding visits made in the last year by Chief Executives:

The principal factfinding visits made by me are as follows:

Visit	Objective
Visits to Annual Conference and other meetings of the Trade Unions representing Agency staff.	To hear staff views on pay, conditions of service and other issues, and to make "state of affairs" speech at the Conference.
Visits to regional meetings of managers and staff in the network	To give an account of issues facing the Agency and to hear staff views.
Visits to meetings of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors, other professional bodies and management seminars.	To give an Agency view on technical and management matters; to present prizes and awards and give advice to students.
Visits to meetings of other Chief Executives.	To give an Agency view on public sector management issues and to hear views of colleagues.
Visits to (and with) various Management Consultants.	On customer relations (attitude survey of VO customers), on Council Tax (tendering arrangements and also financial appraisal of tendering firms) and on pay and performance management (in preparation for new pay agreement with Unions).

I am at your disposal if further assistance is required.

Letter from A. D. Garrett, chief executive of the Royal Mint, to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1992.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to respond to your Written Questions.

I can confirm that I have made no factfinding visits and have published no papers in the last 12 months.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executives of the Royal Mint, Central Statistical Office and Valuation Office executive agencies. I have asked each of them to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from R. R. B. Shutler, chief executive of the Valuation Agency, to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992.

In your question to the Chancellor ref: 3/0458 you ask for a note of the papers given or published by Chief Executives during the last year.

Apart from speeches to professional bodies, the only articles or papers written by me are:

"Keeping an eye on the recession" GTI Surveying Journal (advice to students)

"Spread of experience" GTI Surveying Journal
(article for students on career progression)
(GTI = Graduates to Industry)

Valuation Office, Business Plan 1992-93
(my plans for the Agency, the current year)

Annual Report 1991-92
(my appreciation of the outturn for last year)

Please let me know if I can assist further.

Letter from W. McLennan, chief executive of the Central Statistical Office, to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 28 October 1992.

I have been asked to reply direct to question no. 75 which you tabled for answer on 23 October 1992.

2. A paper titled Official Statistics in the UK: is there cause for concern, by my predecessor Sir Jack Hibbert, was published in Statistical News No. 96, Spring 1992.

Letter from A. D. Garrett, chief executive of the Royal Mint, to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1992

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to respond to your Written Questions.

I can confirm that I have made no factfinding visits and have published no papers in the last 12 months.

Tax Revenue

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the loss in tax revenue, based on average income figures and direct taxation, resulting from unemployment in the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell: The loss in tax revenue would depend on the particular circumstances of the people concerned. It is not possible to provide a meaningful estimate.

Inland Revenue (Information Technology)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for the provision of Inland Revenue information technology services in response to the White Paper "Competing for Quality", Cm 1730.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have authorised the Inland Revenue to proceed with a competitive tender to test the benefit available from a strategic contract with a major private sector computing supplier. If the tender reveals benefit to the Inland Revenue the aim will be to have a contract in place by the end of 1993.

Taxpayers Charter

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations were undertaken with service users in the course of the production of the taxpayers charter (Inland Revenue) and the taxpayers charter (Customs and Excise).

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 26 October 1992]: The taxpayers charter was issued to provide a public statement of the standard of service at which the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise aim. There were no formal consultations.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Road Building

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the revised timetable for construction of the proposed Comber bypass; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the revised programme for the Forter Green road junction scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Any revised timetable for the implementation of these schemes will only be known after the outcome of the current annual review of the Government's expenditure plans has been determined.

Forensic Science Laboratory, Newtownbreda

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to re-open Newtownbreda road following the recent bomb explosions at the forensic science laboratory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: The explosion at the Northern Ireland forensic science laboratory cratered the road which was subseqently closed in the interests of public safety and to facilitate forensic examinations. These examinations have now been completed and the road is currently being repaired.

Maghaberry Prison

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why no crèche facilities are provided for vistors to the women's section of Maghaberry prison; and why the visiting room is smaller than the men's section.

Mr. Mates: The provision of a crèche facility in the female visits area is presently under consideration. The decision will await the result of an efficiency scrutiny into childcare services in Maghaberry prison.

The size of the visits room reflects the overall requirements of Maghaberry prison—317 male prisoners and 42 females at 26 October 1992. Major improvements are, however, under way to construct a second visits room on the female side.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why the men's section of Maghaberry prison is subject to different evening exercise arrangements from the women's section.

Mr. Mates: Unlike the male section of Maghaberry prison, where the exercise yards are immediately adjacent to the living accommodation, allowing easy access and supervision, the exercise yards in the female section are slightly apart. For security reasons, the yards on the female side are not available for evening association periods during the winter months.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why there are fewer recreational facilities available for women in Maghaberry prison than there are for men.

Mr. Mates: Both male and female prisoners have access to the gym on a regular basis and participate in a wide range of recreational pursuits. An exercise bike and pool table for each association room in the female section of Maghaberry prison is under consideration.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why evening classes have been withdrawn from the women's section of Maghaberry prison, while remaining available to prisoners in the men's section.

Mr. Mates: Reassessment of evening classes showed that the classes were too small to be viable. However, the day programme for female prisoners has been enhanced to take account of the non-provision of evening classes.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why no inter-wing association beween women prisoners in Maghaberry prison is permitted, as compared with men.

Mr. Mates: The privilege of inter-wing association was withdrawn from female prisoners in July 1991 for operational reasons. However, it has now been reintroduced for some prisoners and will be kept under review.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the number and ranks of officers presently serving in the RUC fraud squad; what formal qualifications such officers have in accountancy and law; and what further expertise in these fields would normally be available to them.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 27 October 1992]: I understand that at present the established strength of the squad is 17 officers. Their ranks are as follows:

	Number
Chief Inspector	1
Inspector	2
Sergeant	5
Constable	9

Fraud squad officers are not required to have formal qualifications in accountancy or law, although one officer has a degree in accountancy; but those in and selected for the squad must have an aptitude for this type of investigatory work. All officers attached to the RUC fraud squad receive the training necessary for their duties and members of the squad regularly attend comprehensive training courses organised at United Kingdom level.

Expertise from other relevant professional organisations,including the accountancy and legal professions, is drawn upon whenever necessary to ensure the fullest possible investigation of suspected fraud.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Indonesia

8. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Indonesia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom maintains friendly and constructive relations with Indonesia. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State paid a successful visit there earlier this month.

Latin America

21. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit Latin America to discuss regional security in that area.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs looks forward to visiting Latin America again soon and to discussing a wide range of issues.

East Timor

23. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement about the state of human rights in East Timor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We continue to monitor the situation in East Timor. During my right hon. Friend the Minister of State's visit to Indonesia earlier this month, he stressed the importance we attach to full respect for human rights in East Timor. We welcome the resumption of dialogue between Indonesia and Portugal about East Timor.

Libya

24. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reconsideration he has given to the imposition of sanctions against Libya, and the issue of the origins of the Lockerbie crime.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Security Council reviewed the sanctions against Libya on 12 August, and agreed that there was no justification for lifting them. The Lockerbie investigation continues, but no evidence has come to light which would justify the issue of further warrants.

Yugoslavia

25. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current circumstances surrounding the peace-keeping role of the United Nations in the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: UNPROFOR, the United Nations peacekeeping operation in the former Yugoslavia is mandated to carry out a number of specific tasks. These include ceasefire monitoring in Croatia—Security Council resolution 743—overseeing the demilitarisation of the Prevlaka Peninsula—SCR 779—reopening and securing Sarajevo airport—SCR 764—support for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees' efforts to deliver humanitarian relief throughout Bosnia—SCR 776—and monitoring compliance with the ban on military flights in Bosnia—SCR 781. The United Kingdom is contributing forces to UNPROFOR operations in both Croatia and Bosnia.

"An Agenda for Peace"

26. Mr. Dalis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he received a copy of the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations, "An Agenda for Peace"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Secretary-General's report, "An Agenda for Peace" was published on 17 June this year. In my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs' speech to the United Nations General Assembly on 22 September he welcomed the report on behalf of the EC and its members as a very important collection of proposals which all United Nations bodies, but notably the General Assembly and the Security Council, should follow up swiftly. I have asked for a copy of this speech to be placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

Cyprus

27. Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet the Turkish Cypriot leader, Rauf Denktash, to discuss the situation in Cyprus.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to meet the Turkish Cypriot leader, Mr. Denktash, who claims to be the head of a state which we do not recognise. We have regular contacts with him at senior official level.

29. Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the talks on Cyprus recently held in New York under the auspices of the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

31. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the talks on Cyprus recently held in New York under the auspices of the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the talks on Cyprus recently held in New York under the auspices of the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest position with regard to the talks on Cyprus.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: President Vassiliou and Mr. Denktash held a series of separate meetings with the United Nations Secretary-General from 15 July to 11 August. Sufficient progress was made to allow a change of format to direct negotiation between the two, under the Secretary-General's chairmanship, from 12 to 14 August.

These talks reconvened in the new format in New York on 26 October. Security Council resolution 774 makes plain that the international community expects this round to lead to the agreement of an outline settlement on the basis of the United Nations Secretary-General's "set of ideas" as set out in his report of 21 August.

32. Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In line with Security Council resolution 541, we do not recognise the so-called "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus". Nor does any state other than Turkey. We support the efforts of the United Nations Secretary-General in seeking a solution to the Cyprus dispute on the basis of a single, federal, bizonal and bicommunal state.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the talks on Cyprus recently held in New York under the auspices of the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Mr. Hurd: Direct negotiations, under the United Nations Secretary-General's chairmanship reconvened in New York on the 26 October. Security Council resolution 774 makes plain that the international community expects this round to lead to the agreement of an outline settlement on the basis of the United Nations Secretary-General's "set of ideas" as set out in his report of 21 August.

Maastricht Treaty

28. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to review with his counterparts in the European Community the methods by which member states are ratifying the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None. Article R of the treaty states that member states shall ratify the treaty in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements. These requirements differ from one member state to another.

India

30. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding relations between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of India.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our relations with India are excellent.

Central America

33. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with the countries of central America.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom enjoys good relations with all the countries of central America. We support their efforts to consolidate democracy and promote economic development, primarily through our active participation in the San José dialogue between the European Community and its member states and the central American countries.

Occupied Countries

34. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge Israel to withdraw from all of the territories it has occupied since 1967 as part of a lasting and binding peace settlement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have constantly restated our policy that Israel should withdraw from territories occupied in 1967 as part of a comprehensive peace settlement, and meanwhile administer them in compliance with international law and human rights standards.

Western Sahara

35. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Morocco on the western Sahara.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have taken every opportunity to underline the need for the parties to the dispute to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in the implementation of his settlement plan. This continues to offer the best hope for a fair and lasting solution.

Languages

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Council of Ministers encouraging the inclusion of the main European lesser-used languages within the Lingua programme.

Mr. Forman: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have no plans to encourage an increase in number of the languages covered by the Lingua programme.

Kashmir

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement as to what diplomatic measures he is taking to force India to implement the resolutions of the United Nations and the European Parliament calling for a peaceful settlement in Kashmir; and if he will consider imposing (a) economic sanctions and (b) an arms embargo.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are deeply concerned to see a resolution to the Kashmir dispute and are ready to help if both sides would like us to play a role. We take every opportunity to urge India and Pakistan to agree a peaceful means of resolving the dispute as they committed themselves to do in the 1972 Simla agreement. The United Nations resolutions of 1948 and 1949 set out a possible framework, but neither side fully implemented those resolutions and they have, to some extent, been overtaken by events.

United Nations (Members' Participation)

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements his Department has made to assist right hon. and hon. Members to participate in the working of United Nations institutions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcome the participation of parliamentarians in the work of the United Nations. There are particular areas in which the extensive experience and tradition of democracy of the hon. and right hon. Members of this House can be of benefit. I am thinking of the growing significance of the United Nation's role in election monitoring and in providing support to emerging parliaments. We are pleased to see an example of this in the assistance the Inter-Parliamentary Union has given to the United Nations Development Programme. We remain willing to assist hon. Members of this House to participate in such areas. In addition, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office arranges an annual visit for Members of Parliament to the United Nations General Assembly. The next visit will take place early in 1993.

Aku Suki Maru

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will inquire of the Governor of Hong Kong the reasons for the invoking of legislation prohibiting the plutonium ship Akat Suki Maru from entering its territorial waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Hong Kong Government have not invoked legislation prohibiting the ship Akat Suki Maru from entering Hong Kong waters. Hong Kong is aware of its international obligations as regards navigation through its waters. There is no reason to expect that the ship will enter Hong Kong waters.

European Single Market

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 October, Official Report, column 409, which aspects of the common commercial policy of the European Community are not contained within its policy for a single market; and what aspects of the single market programme are not contained within the EC common commercial policy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The common commercial policy was established by a separate chapter—articles 110 to 116—of the treaty of Rome. It governs the Community's trade relations with third countries, as distinct from the single market provisions, which deal with intra-Community trade.

Although the functioning of the single market depends, among other things, upon the existence of a common customs tariff, the articles of the treaty, as amended by the Single European Act, which govern the establishment of the single market have no direct bearing on those governing the common commercial policy.

Southern Africa

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his most recent assessment of the economic and political situation in southern Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Despite tragic setbacks, the countries of the region are still going through potentially a most hopeful period of political and economic change. This difficult process is worsened by the worst drought in living memory. However, we remain optimistic.

WALES

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what policy considerations will govern the choice of priorities for capital projects in his departmental budget in the year 1993-94 (a) if the Barnett formula is continued and (b) if it is discontinued;

(2) what evaluation he has carried out of the priority to be given to all of the capital expenditure projects in his departmental programme in relation to the proposed impact of the Barnett formula agreements.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 19 October, Official Report, column 149. In due course, I shall allocate the resources of the Welsh Office block to individual programmes and projects according to my assessment of priorities.

Environmental Network

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the companies from (a) north Wales, (b) south-west Wales and (c) south-east Wales which have joined his Department's environmental network to date; and if he will list both the events organised to date by the network and proposed events for the future.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Since the launch in July, 51 organisations have joined the environmental managers network. Of these, 15 are from north Wales, six are from south-west Wales and 30 are from south-east Wales, as detailed in the list. I expect many more to join shortly and arrangements are in hand for updated lists of the network's members to be placed in the Library of the House every three months.

Welcome Host Scheme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people have undertaken training under the welcome host scheme to date.

Sir Wyn Roberts: To date 3,564 individuals have undertaken training under the welcome host scheme.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the effect the plan to eliminate surplus school places in Wales will have upon the Government commitment to support parental choice in education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government remain committed to the principle of parental choice. The elimination of surplus places will release resources that may be deployed elsewhere in the education service to improve facilities and raise educational standards in schools, both of which are key considerations in parents' exercise of their choice of school.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what criteria he will apply in considering the removal of surplus school places by implementing school closure.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My criteria for considering proposals for school closures by local education authorities are set out in Welsh Office circular 20/88, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will grant additional resources to the Welsh Development Agency specifically to develop urban regeneration programmes in conjunction with local authorities in the south Wales valleys.

Mr. David Hunt: I have already approved a record budget for 1992-93 of £19 million for the WDA's urban development programme. This represents a 90 per cent. increase on the previous year's budget.

Birds

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites in Wales currently qualify for protection under the EC birds directive; and how many of these sites have been designated to date.

Sir Wyn Roberts: To date, eight sites in Wales have been designated as special protection areas (SPAs) under the EC directive on the conservation of wild birds (79/409/EEC). In addition, a further six sites are proposed SPAs and as such are afforded similar protection to designated SPAs.

Housing (Disabled People)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total local authority housing stock in each local authority area in Wales; and if he will indicate the proportion of the stock which is (a) wheelchair standard and (b) mobility standard in each instance.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The total local authority housing stock is given in the table. Information on the stock of local authority dwellings which are (a) wheelchair standard and (b) mobility standard is not available.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average time taken by each local authority social services department in Wales to (a) assess and (b) implement and deliver applications for house renovations to disabled persons' households.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Hip and Knee Joint Operations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the request made in September for quotations from the South Birmingham health authority for artificial hip and knee joint operations for residents of South Glamorgan.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have had no consultations with South Glamorgan district health authority regarding this matter.

Examination Results

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what weight will be attached to examination performance in assessing whether a school should be closed.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Each case is considered on its merits taking all relevant considerations, including examination performance, into account.

Cadw

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of the Cadw (Welsh Historic Monuments).

Sir Wyn Roberts: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments under its chief executive, Mr. John Carr. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given. A copy of his reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Letter from Mr. J. Carr to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated October 1992:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent PQ which asked if he would list for the last 12 months the titles of papers that I have published as Cadw's Chief Executive.

The principal document published by me in this period has been Cadw's first Annual Report and Accounts for the years 1991-92. I attach a copy. A copy is also available in the Library of the House.

In addition to its Annual Report the Agency has produced a wide variety of publications ranging from guidebooks in respect of monuments in the care of the Secretary of State to lists of buildings afforded statutory protection under the provisions of the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990.

If you would like details of any of these I would be glad to provide this.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for the last 12 months the fact-finding visits the chief executive of the Cadw (Welsh Historic Monuments) has made; what were his findings; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Responsibility for the subject of the question had been delegated to Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments under its chief executive, Mr. John Carr. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given. A copy of his reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Letter from Mr. J. Carr to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated October 1992:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question which asked if he would list for the last 12 months the fact finding visits that I have made and my findings.

You will have seen that the Agency's first Annual Report which I have sent you sets out the mission statement of the Agency which is to protect, to conserve and to promote the built heritage of Wales. As part of my responsibilities as Agency Chief Executive I made a number of visits in Britain and occasionally overseas to help further promote these objectives. As the Annual Report highlight, a key responsibility I have as Chief Executive is to encourage greater numbers of visitors particularly from overseas to visit the monuments of outstanding international importance that are in Cadw's care. In December 1991 I made a visit to the United States, and participated in a workshop sponsored by the Council of Europe in Romania in September 1992.

In the day to day conduct of my responsibilities I have not as such undertaken fact finding missions but as Chief Executive of the Agency since April 1991, and Director of Cadw prior to that, I have established close associations with other built heritage managers and with others involved in Britain's tourism industry.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Development Policy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy at the Development conference on 18 November to seek the amendment of the EC White Paper on development to ensure that the chief aims of the development policy are the elimination of poverty and the fostering of sustainable development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We hope to see adopted by Ministers on 18 November a resolution setting out as the central objectives of development co-operation policy, the sustainable social and economic development of the developing countries, and more particularly the most disadvantaged among them; the smooth and gradual integration of the developing countries into the world economy; and the campaign against poverty in developing countries.

Rain Forests

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations the Government have made in the United Nations with regard to securing a coherent and sustainable long-term policy supported internationally to preserve rain forests in those countries where they are now under threat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: At the United Nations conference on environment and development in June we played a leading role in getting agreement to a statement of principles on the sustainable management of the world's forests. This is the first international consensus on their value. We are working to ensure that it is followed up by an effective international review process. We are proposing in the United Nations General Assembly that this should be through the sustainable development commission.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he, another Minister or Foreign Office official intend to visit the area of the former British Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Neither the Foreign Secretary nor other Ministers have any plans at present to visit the area of the former British protectorate of Somaliland. The British ambassador to Ethiopia is likely to do so in the near future, though no date has yet been set.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the performance of the UN and its agencies, the EC and Her Majesty's Government in response to the crisis in Somalia; and whether he has any proposals for improvement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development have visited Somalia recently as part of EC Troika missions. While there is general recognition, including by the UN itself, that the relief effort was slow to get off the ground, both were generally impressed by the excellent work being done in extremely difficult and often harrowing circumstances by the UN agencies and non-government organisations. The most urgent need is to improve the security situation. We have continued to press the UN to take the further action necessary to ensure the prompt distribution of relief supplies and the safety of aid personnel. The Government have given almost £27 million to the relief effort.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the decision was taken by the United Nations Security Council to send 500 troops to Somalia; and when these troops were actually deployed in Mogadishu.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The UN Security Council agreed in principle to the deployment of troops in Mogadishu on 24 April 1992, subject to further discussion between the UN and local military factions. The Security Council on 14 August agreed that deployment should proceed. The first troops arrived on 14 September.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action (a) the World Health Organisation and (b) the Food and Agriculture Organisation have taken in Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: During the first half of 1992 the World Health Organisation (WHO) funded medical and health supplies to a value of US$1·744 million for international and local non-government organisations in Somalia. WHO is raising an additional US$6·1 million to strengthen and expand its activities. The Food and Agricultural Organisation is providing an emergency supply of seeds, tools and pesticides and assistance for animal health projects.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions were given to his Department's staff in Nairobi about visits to Somalia; and what were the reasons for those instructions in the period since the end of the civil war.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since January 1991, the Foreign Office has advised British nationals against visiting Somalia. British officials have been required to follow this advice, and have only visited Somalia when there was a specific need to do so. Humanitarian aid issues have been fully dealt with in Nairobi, Geneva and elsewhere. A member of the British High Commission staff in Nairobi has special responsibility for liaison with non-governmental organisations in the south of Somalia, and visits as necessary.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the UN conference on Somalia held in Geneva; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development attended the conference of donors to Somalia held in Geneva on 13 and 14 October. The conference formally established the UN 100-day action plan to accelerate the relief effort to Somalia. The Government strongly support the plan. The new pledge of £7·5 million of humanitarian aid for Somalia which we announced in September is being used to support the aims of the plan.

EC Overseas Development Budget

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what decisions have been taken recently by the EC on the size of its future overseas development budget; and what are the real and constant price change from the budget for the current year and in 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: EC Development Aid is financed partly by the European development fund and partly by the EC budget. The draft 1993 EC budget, including the provisions for development cooperation, is still under discussion. We expect a final decision by the end of the year. The information for 1991 and 1992 is as follows:

	1991	1992
Current prices (mecu)
Commitment	1,477	1,770
Percentage increase		19·8
Constant (1991) prices
Commitment	1,477	1,689
Percentage increase		14·3

Note: In 1991, 500 mecu aid was also provided for countries most affected by the Gulf crisis.

UN Conference on Environment and Development

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the assistance given to assist other countries to fulfil their obligations arising from agreements made at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: The biodiversity and climate change conventions were each signed by over 150 countries at Rio. We have contributed over £40 million to the global environment facility, the interim funding mechanism for the conventions. Our contribution was separate from and additional to our aid programme for developing countries. We want to see the GEF established as the permanent funding mechanism for both conventions.

Poland (Know-how Funds)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to spend the balance of the know-how fund for Poland; for what purposes it will be spent; what sum of money is involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the inception of the know-how fund for Poland in 1989, expenditure has amounted to £24 million of our £50 million know-how fund pledge. On current plans the large part of the remainder will be spent by the end of the 1994-95 financial year. The bulk of the money is committed in the priority areas of banking and financial services (including accountancy and privatisation), management development and assistance with economic and industrial restructuring. There are also substantial initiatives in the areas of energy efficiency and local government.

Famine in Africa

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with other EC ministers regarding the famine in Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We discuss the continuing crisis in Africa and humanitarian needs regularly with other Community Ministers. We were prominent in discussions culminating in the Community's decision to launch this year's special food aid programme and have recently led EC troika fact-finding missions to Africa, including Somalia. EC Ministers will review the situation on 18 November at the Development Council, which will be chaired by my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development.

United Nations World Population Conference

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what preparations have been made for the United Kingdom input to the 1994 United Nations world population conference; which Government Department will be responsible for these preparations; and what plans there are to draw on non-governmental organisations contributions to this conference on the lines of the NGO involvement in the June 1992 Earth summit.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We will participate fully in preparatory meetings for the United Nations 1994 international conference on population and development. We will also participate in the European population conference in March 1993 which will provide a European regional contribution to the preparations. The questions of which Government Department will take the prime responsibility for the preparations and the arrangements for drawing on NGO contributions are under consideration.

DEFENCE

Sea King Helicopters

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has agreed a contract with Westland for the additional six Sea King helicopters announced by the then Minister of State for Defence Procurement on 19 February.

Mr. Aitken: Following the successful conclusion of negotiations with Westland Helicopters Ltd., a contract for six new Sea King MK3 helicopters has been placed today. The contract is worth some £60 million.

Euroflag

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he intends further involvement in the Euroflag consortium in relation to United Kingdom tactical military transport requirements; and if he will act to ensure the involvement of United Kingdom companies in potential projects resulting from the work of the consortium.

Mr. Aitken: We will continue to follow developments on the European future large aircraft project, and will consider aircraft which may result from the Euroflag consortium alongside other available options when we need to update our transport fleet.

Research Programmes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of personnel in, the number of projects in and the value of MOD contributions to LINK and EC research programmes in the Defence Research Agency for the last three financial years and projected for the current year.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. John Chisholm to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 23 October 1992:

In his written reply of Wednesday 28 October the Secretary of State for Defence informed you that I would be replying directly to the following question:

> To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will list the number of personnel in, the number of projects in and the value of MOD contributions to LINK and EC Research programmes in the Defence Research Agency for the last three financial years and projected for the current year.

The information you requested is set out below:

EC Research Programmes

Year	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Number of Projects	8	9	10	17
Number of Personnel	5·8	11·6	10·5	13·0
Value of DRA Contribution £K	220	550	510	700
LINK Programmes
Number of Projects	0	2	3	6
Number of Personnel	0	2·1	3·1	4·9
Value of DRA Contribution £K	0	150	220	320

Note: The number of projects shown is cumulative so if a project runs for three years it has been shown in three columns.

I hope you will find this helpful.

Filipino Entrants

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Filipino wives/fianceés have entered the United Kingdom with the Gloucestershire regiment which has recently returned from Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no records of any members of the Gloucestershire regiment being married to Filipino women. Records of fianceés are not held.

Romania

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contacts the United Kingdom has with the defence forces of Romania; and what liaison or help is extended over training and exchange visits.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In keeping with the Government's policy of building closer ties with all the countries of central and eastern Europe, the Ministry of Defence has over the past 12 months established contacts with the Romanian armed forces, mostly about hydrography. We have also recently agreed a modest training package which includes English language training and attendance at selected courses run by the three services.

Operation Granby

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the amount of money received to date from each country towards the cost of Operation Granby; if he will give the amounts due from each country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government received generous support from a number of countries towards Operation Granby. Contributions in cash, amounting to some £2,049 million, were given as follows:

	£ million
Belgium	15
Germany	274
Hong Kong	16
Japan	192
Kuwait	660
Saudi Arabia	582
South Korea	18
United Arab Emirates	278
Other	14

In addition to these cash contributions the United Kingdom also received considerable host nation support and various types of assistance in kind from 20 countries, including some countries which also made cash contributions, for operations in the Gulf.

Operation Grapple

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the amount allocated by his Department for Operation Grapple for 1992-93 and 1993-94 and the amount involved in setting up the initial deployment; whether the overall budget for his Department has been increased for 1992-93 for this operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is estimated that the additional cost of Operation Grapple for the first 12 months amounts to some £110 million, VAT exclusive, of which £17·5 million relates to the initial deployment. It is too early to provide an accurate breakdown of costs between financial years. Although costs initially fall to the defence budget they are subsequently refunded by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, which, under the normal rules, has vote responsibility for such operations.

SCOTLAND

Paralytic Shellfish Poisoning

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the projects relating to research into paralytic shellfish poisoning and associated problems to which his Department has contributed in the last three years or plans to support in the present financial year; and if he will indicate the amount contributed or to be contributed in each case.

Sir Hector Monro: Two projects relating to research into paralytic shellfish poisoning—PSP for short—and associated problems are undertaken at my Department's marine laboratory, Aberdeen. They are:

1. Monitoring of algal blooms and microbiological factors in respect of fish and shellfish monitoring.
2. Nitrogen cycling in coastal ecosystems.

The full economic costs met, or to be met, by my Department between April 1989 and March 1993 amount to £132,000 for the PSP toxin monitoring component of the first project, and £1·321 million for the second project which deals with the basic processes which give rise to algal blooms.

Feus

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to change the law relating to the rights of feu superiors when a feu has been bought out.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Law Commission is currently reviewing property law in Scotland. As part of this review, the commission published a discussion paper in July 1991 seeking comments on various proposals for reform of the feudal system. The commission is now analysing the responses to the discussion paper and will submit a report in due course. I will wish to have an opportunity to consider the report in detail before determining whether any change in the law may be required.

Hospitals

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of plans to replace East Fortune hospital with a new unit for continuing care at Roodlands hospital in Haddington.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer of 27 October 1992]: The progress of plans for the replacement of East Fortune hospital is a matter for Lothian health board.

Roads

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effects of the traffic calming measures at Gateside, Fife.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer of 27 October 1992]: Traffic speed surveys carried out prior to and following installation of the traffic calming measures at Gateside indicate a slight decrease in the speed of traffic. It is signifiant, however, that in the three-year period before the traffic calming measures were introduced there were two serious injury accidents and 12 non-injury accidents at this location whereas in the year since the traffic calming measures were completed there has been one slight injury accident and one non-injury accident. Early indications, therefore, are encouraging although the situation will continue to be monitored.

Council Tax

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the expected annual costs of administering the council tax in each local authority in Scotland; and what costs have been incurred to date.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 October 1992]: It is for local authorities themselves to determine the expenditure required to administer the council tax, although the Government expect the costs involved to be significantly less than those for administering the community charge. Overall authorities budgeted to spend £7·5 million in the current financial year preparing for the tax. Their budget estimates for 1993-94 will not be available until next spring.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost to date of the consultation exercise for local government reforms in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 October 1992]: The costs incurred to date by the Scottish Office on the current consultation exercise on local government reform amount to approximately £170,000.

Competitive Tendering

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are to halt the loss of the jurisdiction of the Commissioners for Local Administration in Scotland following the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering and the provision of local government services by outside agencies.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 October 1992]: Although the commissioner has no jurisdiction over the activities of private companies undertaking local authority services, the ultimate statutory responsibility for the provision of such services rests with local authorities. In such circumstances the powers of the commissioner to investigate complaints by members of the public are not diminished. The Government keep the commissioner's powers under regular review.

Forth Valley Health Board

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will dismiss the chairperson of the Forth Valley health board.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 October 1992]: No.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment and Training

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will state the individual programme costs at constant prices, for each of the years 1987-88 to 1991-92 for employment training and its predecessor programmes youth training and the enterprise allowance scheme and the numbers out of work for each of the years during the same period; and if she will make a statement on the Government's future intentions for Government employment and training measures.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is contained in the tables:

Great Britain training expenditure (cash prices)[1]

£ million

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
YT[2]	1,008	1,020	1,002	844	846
ET[3]	380	615	1,107	1,076	842
Enterprise allowance scheme/business and enterprise support[4]	193	250	212	184	184

[1] The figures quoted are cash prices. The data necessary to adjust these figures for inflation (ie retail prices index—all items) can be found in table 6.4 of the Employment Gazette for April 1992 and in table 26 of the annual supplement to Economic Trends for April of earlier years. These publications are available in the Library.

[2] Youth training includes expenditure on training credits from April 1991.

[3] ET was introduced from September 1988. Figures for the period prior to that date include expenditure on training measures which were replaced by ET, but do not include employment measures such as the community programme.

[4] It is not possible to distinguish expenditure on EAS from other enterprise and business support programmes delivered since 1987-88.

Average seasonally adjusted unemployment figures

Great Britain Thousands

	Number
1987-88	2,554·9
1988-89	2,030·4
1989-90	1,599·4
1990-91	1,660·3
1991-92	2,346·8

The Department's employment and training programmes are aimed at supporting economic growth by promoting a competitive, efficient and flexible labour market. Our commitment to helping unemployed people through the opportunities provided will continue to be met through the employment service and through the training and enterprise councils.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of constituencies in Northern Ireland, Wales, Scotland and England has lower percentage unemployment than in June 1987; and what proportion of constituencies that have had coal mines closed in the past six years has lower percentage unemployment now than in June 1987 compared with other constituencies.

Mr. McLoughlin: Unemployment rates are not available below the level of travel-to-work area (TTWA). In September 1992, the latest date for which claimant unemployment figures are available, the proportions of travel-to-work areas that had lower percentage rates of unemployment than in June 1987 were as follows: 100 per cent. in Northern Ireland, 97 per cent. in Wales, 97 per cent. in Scotland and 51 per cent. in England.

Information categorising coal mine closures by their TTWA is currently available only for the past four years; 95 per cent. of TTWAs which have had coal mines closed over the past four years had lower unemployment rates in September 1992 than in June 1987. The corresponding proportion for other TTWAs was 62 per cent.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will publish the average percentage rate of unemployment for 1991-92 for each travel-to-work area in the United Kingdom;

(2) if she will publish the average percentage rate of unemployment during the five-year period commencing August 1987 to August 1992 for each travel-to-work area in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Disability (Training)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will take steps to make disability equality training a compulsory component of training undertaken by careers advisers, careers officers and teachers responsible for careers information.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Local education authorities are required by statutory guidance given under the Employment and Training Act 1973 to make arrangements to identify the training needs of their careers service staff and make arrangements to meet those needs.

This guidance requires careers officers to obtain the diploma in careers guidance. The diploma covers equal opportunities training, including provision for people with disabilities.

The training of careers teachers is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Education and for Wales as appropriate.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what efforts are currently undertaken by her Department to ensure that all publicity material produced by her Department concerning training programmes relating to disabled people promotes positive images of disabled people.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Employment Department no longer produces national publicity material on training programmes. This is now the responsibility of individual training and enterprise councils (TECs). TECs are responsible for the planning and delivery of training programmes and are contractually bound to ensure equality of opportunity for all trainees.

The Employment Department, however, produces advisory material on a range of issues for TECs, and others. Material concerning people with disabilities is quality checked by a specialist team in the Department.

Fraud

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people were prosecuted for fraud by her Department in the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) what is the number of whole-time equivalent staff employed by her Department and its agencies to detect and prosecute suspected fraud; and what is the cost of their employment;

(3) how much her Department has saved from the investigation of fraud in the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the targeted savings for the next financial year.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 28 October 1992:

As the Employment service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden the Agency's Chief Executive to answer Parliamentary Questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your questions to the Secretary of State for Employment:

i. how many people were prosecuted for fraud by the Department in the latest year for which figures are available,

ii. what is the number of whole time equivalent staff employed to detect and prosecute suspected fraud, and what is the cost of their employment,

iii. how much the Department has saved from the investigation of fraud in the latest year for which figures are available, and what are the targeted savings for the next financial year.

The latest year for which figures are available is that of the financial year ending 31 March 1992 during which a total of 2,265 people were prosecuted for fraud. We currently have 1,300 people, of whom 780 are Inspectors, employed in the detection and prosecution of benefit fraud. The total cost of our fraud operations amounted to £13·34 million. The net savings from our investigations into benefit fraud amounted to £34·34m. We do not set targets for benefit savings accrued from benefit fraud investigation. Our performance is measured by the number of claims withdrawn following investigation by Inspectors and our target is for 58,000 such claims to be withdrawn by the end of the present financial year.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Engineering Construction Industry Training Board

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many appeals by firms against paying the industrial training levy demanded by the Engineering Construction Industry Training Board were heard by an industrial tribunal in (a) 1988, (b) 1989, (c) 1990 and (d) 1991, respectively; and how many were (i) successful and (ii) unsuccessful.

Mr. McLoughlin: Prior to July 1991, engineering construction was covered by the Engineering Industry Training Board (EITB). That board was re-named the Engineering Construction Industry Training Board (ECITB) on 23 July 1991 when the engineering manufacturing sector moved its training arrangements to a non-statutory basis.

In 1988 one appeal against the EITB was heard and was successful. No further appeals have been heard against either the EITB or the ECITB.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will place in the Library a list of all the companies who paid the Engineering Construction Industry Training Board levy in (a) 1989, (b) 1990 and (c) 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not available to me. It is held only by Engineering Construction Industry Training Board and I have no power to require the board to supply me with such information.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what future plans she has for the Engineering Construction Industry Training Board.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend, the previous Secretary of State, appointed the Engineering Construction Industry Training Board in July 1991 for a three-year period up to 22 July 1994. As with all non-Departmental public bodies, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State shall review the need for its continuance before any decision is made on its reconstitution.

Financial Services

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on trends in employment in the financial services sector between now and the end of 1993.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not publish predictions of employment in particular sectors.

Disabled People (Careers Guidance)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what monitoring is currently undertaken by her Department on the quality of careers guidance given to disabled people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The careers service inspectorate of the Department undertakes inspections of LEA careers services and pays particular attention to the quality of careers guidance given to people with special needs.

"Hard Labour"

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration her Department has given to implementing the recommendations of the 1990 report of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, entitled "Hard Labour".

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government have considered the recommendations of this report. We have already announced our intention to introduce legislation to confer additional rights on individual employees, including extending the right to receive written particulars of employment terms to all employees working at least eight hours a week, which is in line with the report's recommendations.

Wages Councils

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will estimate the range of employment effects of abolishing wages councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave him on 14 July 1992, Official Report, column 626.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many respondents to the 1988 consultation document on the future of wages councils then supported the retention of wages councils, either wholly or in some form; whether the Government have recently contacted these respondents to inquire whether their views have altered; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the 1988 consultation 320 respondents favoured the retention of a wages councils system. Over 60 per cent. of employers and employers' organisations, who responded, supported abolition of the councils. There has been no exercise to contact those who responded in 1988, but employers have continued to make clear the damage done by the councils.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the oral answer of the Minister of State on 7 July, Offical Report, column 169, if she will publish evidence to show that two-thirds of the people covered by wages councils are paid more than the minimum wage set by the councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: The estimate is based on an analysis of employers' wage records checked by the wages inspectorate.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list those individuals or organisations who have written to her concerning the proposed abolition of wages councils indicating which are for the proposal and which against.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received 71 written representations about the future of the wages councils from April to September 1992. Of these, 17 favoured abolition, 50 supported retention and four did not come down clearly on one side or the other. It would not be appropriate for me to publish the names of those who have written to the Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the number of people with disabilities whose employment is covered by a wages council order.

Mr. McLoughlin: I regret that the information is not available.

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list all the names of public appointments that she has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees, and what remuneration each currently receives.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not held centrally within the Department. We will, however, collect the information and my noble Friend Viscount Ullswater will write to the hon. Member.

Youth Training

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training places are currently available in the Doncaster area; and what was the figure (a) six months and (b) 12 months ago.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested.

At 13 September 1992 there were 3,865 young people on youth training in the Barnsley and Doncaster area. Six months and 12 months previously, the figure was 3,676 and 4,403 respectively. These figures reflect seasonal fluctuations and the demographic downturn in school leavers.

Barnsley/Doncaster TEC is confident that the Government's guarantee of a training place to eligible young people will be met.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she will now introduce legislation to remove Crown immunity in respect of infringements of the Health and Safety at Work Etc. Act 1974.

Mr. McLoughlin: No decisions will be made about introducing legislation until the Health and Safety Commission has considered the review of current procedures and put any proposals to Ministers.

Wages Inspectorate

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to increase the enforcement powers of the wages inspectorate.

Mr. McLoughlin: None. The wages inspectorate has adequate powers to enforce wages council orders effectively.

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each region and for Great Britain as a whole how many agreements have been made with employers to operate the job interview guarantee scheme since it was extended nationally in April 1991; how many unemployed people have taken part in the scheme in each area; and how many participants have secured full-time employment with their sponsoring employer.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms. Clare Short, dated 28 October 1992;

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the Job Interview Guarantee (JIG) initiative. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

You asked for each Region and for Great Britain as a whole how many agreements have been made with employers to operate the job interview guarantee scheme since it was extended nationally in April 1991, how many unemployed people have taken part in the scheme in each area, and how many participants have secured full-time employment with their sponsoring employer.

We no longer ask regions for information on the number of agreements made with employers as we do not require it to monitor the success of the programme.

Information on people taking part in the scheme, and those securing full-time employment is shown at Annex A. The information is broken down by region. At a national level we do not collect information by area.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Job Clubs

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each region and for Great Britain as a whole since April 1991 how many people have joined job clubs, and how many have left; how many leavers got jobs, and how many entered another positive outcome; and if she will give the information broken down by the ethnic origin and gender of participants.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Ms. Clare Short, dated 28 October 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer Parliamentary Questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Employment about how many people have attended a Restart Interview since 1 April 1991; and what were the results of those interviews.

Mike Fogden last wrote to you on this subject on 25 February 1992. However we have changed the way we collect some of our statistics which means that although the information on the number of people joining and leaving Jobclubs is available up to September 1992, the breakdown by ethnic origin and gender of participants is only available up to March 1992. The figures for 1992-93 will be collected at the end of the operational year.

Table 'A' attached shows for each region and nationally the numbers who have joined Jobclubs between 1 April 1991 and 27 March 1992 together with the same period of those members leaving. Leavers who are shown as going into other positive outcomes have gone on either to training, full-time education or self-employment.

Table 'B' attached shows the estimated performance between 1 April 1991 and 27 March 1992 for male and female Jobclub members and by ethnic origin separated on a regional basis and for Great Britain as a whole. This has been derived from the quarterly surveys which were carried out during the period.

Table 'C' shows similar statistics to 'A', but covers the period 30 March 1992 to 25 September 1992. On the ethnic background and male/female characteristics of Jobclub leavers is now collected on an annual sample survey basis. As a result of this change, Service programmes and which should improve accuracy, the breakdown of male and female membership and ethnic origin is not yet available for the 1992-93 period.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Actively-seeking-work Test

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether claimants or their representatives are entitled to a copy of the UB672 form completed by Employment Service officials when there are doubts about an unemployed person's availability for work or whether they are actively seeking work; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Ms. Clare Short, dated 28 October 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer parliamentary questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Employment about whether claimants or their representatives are entitled to a copy of the UB672 form completed by ES officials when there are doubts about an unemployed person's availability for work or whether they are actively seeking work.

Form UB672 is an internal document used by the Employment Service when acting on behalf of the Secretary of State, to refer a claim for benefit to the independent adjudication authorities for a decision on entitlement. As a matter of policy the form is not supplied to a claimant at that stage. If however the claim is disallowed and the claimant appeals against the adjudication officer's decision, a copy of the form would be included in the appeal papers copied to the claimant by the Appeals Tribunal.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Employment Service

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress the employment service has made in meeting the targets outlined in the 1992-93 agency agreement; and if she will show for the latest possible date the (a) total unemployed job placings and variance from target, (b) long-term unemployed job placings and variance from target, (c) people with disabilities job placings and variance from target, (d) inner-city job placings and variance from target, (e) number of claims not pursued following initial contact and variance from profiled annual reference level, (f) number of claimants moved from unemployment benefit to another benefit and variance from annual reference level and (g) number of people who withdrew their claim to benefit after contact with fraud investigators and variance from annual reference level.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am informed by the chief executive of the Employment Service that in the period April to June 1992, the Employment Service placed a total of 350,000 unemployed people into jobs, against an annual target of 1·425 million. 24·6 per cent. of these placings were long-term claimants, 2·8 per cent. were people with disabilities and 33 per cent. were unemployed people in inner cities against annual targets of 19 per cent., 2·5 per cent. and 36 per cent. respectively. Over the same period new claims not pursued following initial contact were at the annual target level of 10 per cent. The number of people who withdrew their claim to benefit after contact with fraud investigators was 17,100 against an annual target of 58,000. The number of claimants helped to move from unemployment benefits to a more appropriate benefit is not a reference level under the annual performance agreement for 1992-93.

Unemployment

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action she is taking to reduce long-term unemployment.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have in place a wider than ever range of measures to help unemployed people find jobs as quickly as possible. We are firmly committed to helping long-term unemployed people in particular get back to work, and offer special help for them, including help with finding a job through job clubs and the job interview guarantee, training, and opportunities to undertake temporary work of benefit to the local community.

State Redundancy Fund

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will provide total spending figures from the state redundancy fund for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. McLoughlin: The redundancy fund was merged with the national insurance fund in February 1991. Total spending under the redundancy and insolvency provisions of the employment protection legislation amounted to £144 million in 1990-91 and £283 million in 1991-92.

HEALTH

Health Service Mergers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding proposals to merge (a) Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority and Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley health authority and (b) Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale community health council and Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley community health council; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have received no such representations. Any merger proposals would be the subject of public consultation.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are laid down by her Department regarding the necessary consultation procedures involved in (a) mergers of community health councils and (b) mergers of health authorities; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: My hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell) wrote to regional chairmen last year stating that where district health authorities are being merged regions should not consider merging community health councils (CHCs) without first consulting them and other local community interests. Regions should consider whether maintaining the existing CHCs will help promote better accountability, local sensitivity and local responsiveness and so outweigh any advantages to be gained from merging. Although the region's decision will be final, it is expected to take the CHC's views fully into account.

Where the merger of district health authorities is envisaged, there is agreement that regional health authorities consult, first informally, then if the Secretary of State agrees, formally with all relevant parties. Formal consultation normally runs for about three months, and should provide opportunities for public debate.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will amend community care proposals to allow local authorities to make direct payments to disabled people.

Mr. Yeo: There are no plans to do so.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received from local authorities seeking power to make direct payments to disabled people.

Mr. Yeo: No such representations have recently been received.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring procedures have been established by her Department to check on the application of section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970, by local authority social services departments.

Mr. Yeo: Prime responsibility for monitoring the implementation of the Act rests with local authorities themselves, to ensure that their policies are compatible with their legal obligations. The Department receives regular returns on certain services provided by local authorities under the Act, as well as information from other sources including the social services inspectorate. We follow up specific cases, referred to the Department, where it is alleged that a local authority is in breach of its statutory duties.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will now publish her Department's report on the effect of advertising on tobacco consumption; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The report by the Department of Health's economics and operational research division is being published today as a discussion document. Copies are available in the Vote Office.

The report raises a good many questions which interested parties will want to consider. I am therefore inviting comments on the methodology, analysis and content of the report over the next three months. We shall take all comments into account as we work towards the tough targets for reducing smoking set out in the White Paper "The Health of the Nation".

Information Technology

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the actual and budgeted annual expenditure, by region, on the training of NHS staff in the use of information technology systems in each year since 1989.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many skilled computer staff are employed in each national health service region and in total by the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: Detailed information as requested is not held centrally. Based on sample information of staff receiving automatic data processing allowances, we estimate that there was a total of 3,800 skilled computer staff directly employed in the NHS in Great Britain at June 1992.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to monitor the number of NHS staff receiving information technology training each year.

Mr. Sackville: No.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which pilot projects for hospital information support systems have now been evaluated; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: All hospital information support systems (HISS) projects include a project evaluation framework as part of the standard project management processes. Evaluations are conducted at appropriate project stages. These regular evaluations include a general review of timeliness and budgetary compliance, as well as relevant detailed assessment of, for example, quality and completeness of data capture, adequacy of procedures and training, and system outputs.

No end of project evaluation has as yet been possible, since all sites are still, as planned, in the implementation phase. Mid-stage assessments have been conducted, and have in some instances resulted in changes in scope, phasing or resourcing of the project. The end of implementation evaluations will include assessment of timescales, total costs, benefits already realised, further potential benefits, organisational impact, technical adequacy and lessons learned.

The economics and operational research (EOR) division of the Department of Health is considering some of the work already conducted on evaluation by the three original HISS projects at Darlington memorial hospital, Greenwich district hospital and Nottingham city hospital NHS Trust, with a view to developing national guidance material on project evaluation.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to monitor the expenditure on computer hardware and software and related management salaries and consultancy fees for trust hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: The National Health Service Management Executive does not intend to monitor expenditure on computer hardware and software or associated consultancy fees separately from the general arrangements for accounting for capital expenditure in trusts. Trusts determine their own capital investment strategies but have to make business cases to support them which are reviewed by the NHS Management Executive to ensure they are appropriate and affordable by purchasers. Trusts account for actual capital expenditure in their annual accounts which are subject to audit and published. I am satisfied that these arrangements provide a suitable framework for ensuring that all capital investment by trusts is properly controlled.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on consultancy fees in connection with the purchase of information technology systems by each regional health authority in each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of whether the purchasing procedures and audit mechanisms operating in the NHS are adequate to ensure the efficient and effective use of NHS funds for the purpose of purchasing and developing information technology systems; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: All national health service bodies have standing orders and standing financial orders to follow to ensure that they comply with best practice in public procurement policies. To ensure better use of national health service resources for purchasing and developing information technology systems, the existing advice on procurement has been reviewed and updated by NHS Supplies. This thorough assessment has resulted in the development and introduction of new guidelines, procurement of information systems effectively (POISE). These will be issued to those responsible within the NHS for IT procurement and will help hospitals, trusts, units and health authorities match systems accurately to their individual needs in a cost-effective manner. These guidelines, in addition to others encompassing information management and technology, will be launched later this year and will improve further the NHS's utilisation of information technology.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the costs of hardware, software, and consultancy fees for the CARE information system purchased by Guy's hospital in London.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Peter Griffiths, the chief executive of the Guy's and Lewisham NHS Trust.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the costs of hardware, software and consultancy fees for the GIANT information system purchased by Guy's hospital in London.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Peter Griffiths, the chief executive of the Guy's and Lewisham NHS Trust.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the contracts for the supply of information technology systems to the NHS of a value of more than £2 million in each year since 1987-88 by region, title of the project and supplier.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress made towards the implementation of the targets for the development of information systems in the NHS established in the document, "Framework for Information Systems: The Next Steps".

Mr. Sackville: Good progress has been made in taking forward the wide ranging objectives set out in "Framework for Information Systems: The Next Steps".

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the anticipated expenditure on computer hardware and software in each NHS region, in each of the years from 1992-93 to 1994-95.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities are required to produce annual accounts which are submitted to the Department. These accounts do not incorporate details of anticipated expenditure.

The monitoring of health authorities' anticipated expenditure is restricted to broad measures, in which computer expenditure is not separately identified.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health information support systems projects have been initiated; and what is the cost of each project to date.

Mr. Sackville: A large number of hospital sites have been implementing computer systems that provide integrated facilities. It is estimated that some 40 sites have either procured, or are in the process of procuring health information support systems (HISS) solutions. In addition, there are perhaps another 60 or so sites who have already achieved a degree of integration amongst their operational systems. Often, this reflects regional initiatives, and the situation is therefore localised rather than evenly spread.

Information as to the cost of HISS within the national health service at large is not held centrally. Under EC legislation, however, there is a requirement for all purchases made under competitive tendering rules to be published in the Official Journal of the European Community within 48 days of contract award.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions since 1985 the purchase of information technology systems by regional and district health authorities and hospital trusts has been the subject of audit inquiries by the district audit service, the National Audit Office or other auditors appointed by Her Majesty's Government or regional or district health authorities for that specific purpose; and whether she will list (a) those published and (b) those yet to be published.

Mr. Sackville: Auditors selectively review expenditure, including that on information technology, as part of their annual certification process. It is therefore not possible to provide figures on the number of inquiries carried out. Where inquiries by statutory auditors have led to formal reports, these have been recorded centrally. Reports in which procurement of information technology was identified as a main criticism were issued in respect of the following health authorities:

North Western RHA
Tunbridge Wells HA
Wessex RHA
South Western RHA
The former Leeds Eastern HA

The list refers to statutory audit reports issued in respect of financial years 1985-86 to 1991-92. In some cases, the auditor issued more than one report on the same authority. Reports by internal auditors are excluded.

The National Audit Office published a report entitled "Managing Computer Projects in the National Health Services" in November 1990. This included a review of procurement arrangements in a sample of health authorities.

We do not have comprehensive information on matters under examination by statutory auditors.

Wessex Regional Health Authority

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will make a statement on the report of the district audit service on the purchase of the regional information systems plan by the Wessex regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville: The district audit service undertook an investigation of the regional information systems plan at the request of Wessex regional health authority. Its report acknowledged that the regional health authority has taken both comprehensive steps to deal with the consequences of past decisions and remedial actions to improve its budgetary, financial and management arrangements.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the regional health authorities and hospital trusts which have transferred operational responsibility for, information technology systems to private or arm's-length companies.

Mr. Sackville: Five regional health authorities have wholly transferred the operational responsibility for their information technology systems to private or arm's-length companies. They are Northern, Yorkshire, Trent, East Anglian and Wessex. Six regions—North East Thames, South East Thames, South West Thames, South Western, Oxford and North Western have set up separate NHS trading arms to operate their information technology systems. North West Thames, West Midlands and Mersey regions have transferred only part of their operational responsibility to private companies. We do not hold information centrally for NHS hospital trusts.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS staff in each year have been trained in the use of information technology systems since the launch of the NHS training authority strategy in 1989.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she has taken to remedy the low level of existing information technology skills and knowledge, especially among senior managers in the NHS, which was identified by the National Audit Office in 1990; and if she will make a statement on the level of such skills and knowledge amongst NHS staff.

Mr. Sackville: There are a number of measures currently being taken to address the IT training and awareness needs of national health service senior managers. One example is the information management and technology for managers programme. This has been developed and is now being delivered by the Institute of Health Service Management, the NHS training directorate and the information management group of the management executive, working closely with NHS staff at all levels. The programme is successfully reaching chief executives, general managers and chairs through briefing events, focused learning sets and training courses.

Another example is the development and dissemination of NHS specific computer-assisted learning (CAL) packages designed to equip managerial and clinical staff with knowledge and skills in information management and systems.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to publish the information strategy for the NHS; how much it will cost to implement; and what additional funds will be made available to the NHS to cover the cost of implementation.

Mr. Sackville: The information management and technology strategy for the national health service will be published very soon and follows an extensive period of consultation both within the NHS and with suppliers. The implementation of the strategy will be a local responsibility. A major thrust of the strategy will be to ensure that maximum benefit is gained from existing levels of local investment in information management and technology. The availability of any additional funds to support priority areas is dependent upon the outcome of PES negotiations with Treasury.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether she will list those contracts associated with the Wessex regional health authority/regional information systems plan project which have been identified by the district auditor as having been associated with overcharging, having exploited weaknesses in the management of the Wessex regional health authority, or having undertaken work under contracts which were possibly unlawful or not validly authorised;

(2) how much was the annual expenditure on the Wessex regional health authority/regional information systems plan project in each of the years from 1985-86 to 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Robin Buchanan, the Wessex regional health authority chairman for details.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she is satisfied that Wessex regional health authority has taken all necessary steps to recover funds from all companies which undertook work on the regional information systems plan project and have been identified by the district auditor as having been associated with overcharging, having exploited weaknesses in the management of the Wessex regional health authority, or having undertaken work under contracts which were possibly unlawful and not validly authorised; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I understand that Wessex regional health authority has already concluded an agreement with AT&T (Istel) following legal action and subsequent negotiations. Legal action is under way in respect of the WIS contracts. The authority's legal advisers are examining all relevant material to decide whether further steps should be taken.

Islington and Camden Health Authority

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she proposes to announce the new health authority for Islington and Camden; and who will be the new members of it.

Mr. Sackville: The proposed merger of Bloomsbury and Islington health authority and Hampstead health authority is the subject of a public consultation exercise which ends on 30 November. The Secretary of State will consider the results of this exercise before taking any decision on the proposal. The appointment of a chairman of any new authority is a matter for the Secretary of State; non-executive members of a district health authority are appointed by the appropriate regional health authority.

Unregistered Children's Establishments

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of (a) the current number of unregistered children's establishments and (b) the number of children placed in such establishments.

Mr. Yeo: Information on the number of children's homes still to be registered has been collected as part of the Children Act monitoring survey, the results of which are due to be the subject of a report to Parliament in the new year. Some information on the numbers of children placed by local authorities in homes which fall to be registered has now been collected and will be available in time for inclusion in the report to Parliament. Information on the number of children in unregistered establishments is not collected centrally.

Tomlinson Inquiry

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total cost of the Tomlinson inquiry into London's health needs; and what fee has been paid to Sir Bernard Tomlinson and other members of the inquiry.

Dr. Mawhinney: The direct cost of the inquiry by Sir Bernard Tomlinson into London's health services, medical education and research will amount to about £250,000. Within that sum, fees totalling £23,660 will have been paid to Sir Bernard Tomlinson—equivalent to the remuneration of a regional health authority chairman—and fees totalling £8,750 to the team of advisers who have assisted him.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who she plans to consult over the Tomlinson report's proposal to close St. Bartholomew's hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: There will be wide consultation on any proposal for the closure of a hospital site arising from Sir Bernard Tomlinson's report.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what directions she has given to the Tomlinson implementation team regarding ring fencing of moneys saved from hospital closures to community care.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. I have not yet constituted the London implementation group.

Hospice Services

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing the value in cash and percentage terms of the contributions of all NHS purchasing authorities towards the revenue costs of hospice services in 1991-92 and in the current financial year; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 27 October 1992]: Information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the amounts of central funds allocated to regional health authorities in 1991-92 and 1992-93 for the specific purpose of enabling purchasing authorities to increase their contributions to the revenue costs of hospices for adult patients run by voluntary organisations. Additional sums of £3·2 million in 1991-92 and £5·5 million in 1992-93 were allocated to regional health authorities as part of a trial scheme to enable hospices to obtain drugs for their in-patients free of charge.

Purchasing authorities also contribute to the revenue costs of hospices from their main allocations. For 1991-92, it is estimated that combined Department of Health and NHS funds met 41 per cent. of the revenue costs of adult hospices. We remain committed to reaching a position where the value of health authorities' contributions to hospices' agreed revenue costs matches that of voluntary giving.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the value of child support for each child in a standard rate tax paying family, expressed in 1992-93 prices, for each year from 1962 to 1992-93.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table. While child benefit helps all families with children, there is a comprehensive range of other social security benefits which can provide additional help for some families according to their circumstances.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the likely expenditure in 1992-93 on the payment of mortgage interest for households in receipt of income support, the number of households receiving such assistance, and the average monthly payment per household.

Mr. Burt: The latest available information is contained in the Income Support Statistics Annual Enquiry for May 1991. The total amount was £949 million for 411,000 customers. The average weekly amount for those receiving full mortgage interest was £46·34, and for those receiving half mortgage interest (to which payments are restricted during the first 16 weeks of the claim for customers under age 60) was £35·61.

Incomes

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of persons and the percentage of the total population, who were living on incomes less than 60 per cent. of the national average, in (a) 1985, (b) 1990, (c) 1991 and (d) the current year, respectively, or in those years nearest to these dates where information is available.

Mr. Burt: Such information as is available is taken from the Households Below Average Income series. Households Below Average Incomes does not cover 1985 and, at present, only goes up to 1988-89. The available years closest to those requested are 1981, 1987 and 1988-89. The figures, both before and after housing costs, are in the table.

Number and percentage of people in the United Kingdom with less than 60 per cent. of average income.

	1981	1987	1988-89
Before housing costs
Number of people (millions)	10·6	14·6	16
Percentage of people	19	26	29
After housing costs
Number of people (millions)	11·9	16·2	16·8
Percentage of people	22	29	30

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the mean net disposable income for 1979 and for each of the two years 1988 and 1989, at April 1992 prices, of the richest and poorest 20 per cent. of households, based on the equivalised income data collected for the latest households below average income analysis, distinguishing between the mean and the median.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 16 July 1992, Official Report, columns 946-47.

As recommended in the Households Below Average Income stocktaking report, only the median is used as the average measure for subdivisions of the income distribution.

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 13 July, Official Report, column 454, if he will list the factors which prevent the publication of 1990-91 data from the households below average income analysis before mid-1993; and how much delay is accounted for by each factor.

Mr. Burt: 1991 Family Expenditure Survey data is received by the Department in a form suitable for HBAI data preparation in October 1992. Some four to five months are then needed to set up consistent data files and a further four to five months to produce accurate and robust results, tables and analysis.

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the full value of free and subsidised school meals affects calculations of the mean, and the median, net disposable income of the poorest 20 per cent. of (i) all households and (ii) households with children in each of the single years 1979 and 1989, using the information collected in the latest housholds below average income stocking report at April 1992 prices.

Mr. Burt: As recommended in the Households Below Average Income stocktaking report only the median is used to represent subdivisions of the income distribution and 1988 and 1989 are always combined. For part (i) of the question I therefore refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 16 July 1992, Official Report, columns 947-48. The table answers part (ii) of the question:

Average equivalised income at April 1992 prices for the bottom 20 per cent. of individuals in households of families with children

	1979 £	1988-89 £
Before housing costs:
Excluding free school meals	96	96
Including free school meals	99	98
After housing costs:
Excluding free school meals	78	74
Including free school meals	82	76

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was, for each type of household in the Family Expenditure Survey, the average disposable income at April 1992 prices, including the value of free and subsidised school meals, of the poorest 10 per cent. and poorest 20 per cent. of households, equivalised for household size and composition, after taking account of housing costs, for each of the two years 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 16 July 1992, Official Report, columns 947-48.

Disability

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he can give about trends in the levels of disposable income of the 6 million people with disabilities, taking account of the latest households below average income stocktaking report.

Mr. Burt: The latest and most reliable information about the incomes of people with disabilities is contained in the reports of the OPCS surveys of disabled people carried out between 1985 and 1988, copies of which are in the library.

The Family Expenditure Survey, the principal data source for Households Below Average Income, does not record whether an individual has a disability.

Unemployment

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has for the number of persons seeking employment and not entitled to unemployment benefits in each month during 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Burt: The table shows the Employment Department's seasonally adjusted Great Britain unemployment figures for each month of the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92, together with the numbers of unemployed claimants for each quarter receiving neither unemployment benefit nor income support.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total numbers of (a) unemployed job seekers eligible to claim unemployment benefit and (b) persons seeking employment in each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Burt: The table shows the Employment Department's seasonally adjusted GB unemployment figures for each of the financial years from 1979 to 1991 together with the average numbers of persons receiving unemployment benefit:

No details are available of the numbers of job seekers who do not register unemployed or whether they are eligible for unemployment benefit.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what were the administrative costs for paying out national insurance unemployment benefits for each year since 1987-88;

(2) what were the administrative costs for paying out social security benefits to unemployed families during each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Burt: Details of the administrative costs of social security benefits, of which unemployed families may be in receipt are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The administrative costs of paying unemployment benefit for the years 1987-88 to 1990-91, the latest year for which figures are available, are as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	166

Disability Allowances

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if applications for mobility allowance and attendance allowance, preceding the introduction of disability living allowance, are dealt with under legislation applicable at the time of application.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if applications for Mobility Allowance (MobA) and Attendance Allowance (AA), preceding the introduction of Disability Living Allowance (DLA), are dealt with under legislation applicable at the time of application.

I can confirm that all such claims made before 16 March 1992 were dealt with under the legislation appropriate to those benefits. Claims made on or after 16 March 1992 have been dealt with under the same legislation but using the new adjudication structure for DLA. All claims outstanding at 6 April 1992, regardless of when they were received, were dealt with under the new adjudication provisions, although the MobA and AA criteria apply.

I hope this reply will be of help to you. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many applications were refused for (a) attendance allowance, (b) mobility allowance and (c) disability living allowance in 1992, to 30 September;

(2) how many outstanding (a) applications, (b) reviews and (c) appeals were ongoing for attendance allowance on 1 April;

(3) how many outstanding (a) applications, (b) reviews and (c) appeals were ongoing for mobility allowance on 1 April;

(4) how many persons were employed dealing with (a) disability living allowance, (b) attendance allowance and (c) mobility allowance on 1 October;

(5) how many applicants for (a) attendance allowance, (b) mobility allowance and (c) disability living allowance have not received payment for a successful claim six months after their application, from 1 October 1991 to 1 October 1992;

(6) how many persons were employed dealing with (a) disability living allowance, (b) attendance allowance and (c) mobility allowance on 1 April;

(7) how many persons have claimed (a) attendance allowance, (b) mobility allowance and (c) disability living allowance in 1992 to 30 September;

(8) what was the training budget for personnel involved in (a) disability living allowance and (b) disability working allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability benefits is a matter for Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Disability Living Allowance (DLA), Attendance Allowance (AA) and Mobility Allowance (MOBA).

It will perhaps be helpful if I explain a little about the changes which took place with the onset of the new adjudication structure. With the introduction of the DLA from 6 April 1992, all outstanding AA claims, reviews and appeals in respect of people under 65 were transferred to DLA for processing under the new adjudication system introduced at the same time. This was because any award of AA spanning 6 April for people under 65 would automatically become the Care Component of DLA at that time.

Cases in respect of people aged 65 or over would not be subject to the change to DLA, but would continue to receive or apply for AA. The change in the adjudication system which applied to DLA was however also introduced for AA.

Outstanding AA and MOBA claims, reviews and appeals

The major transfer of work to DLA with its introduction in April involved in excess of 70,000 cases.

Of this total there were approximately 23,000 claims to MOBA which were transferred to the DLA Unit for processing under the new rules, with a further 11,500 or so reviews and appeals.

In the region of 20,000 claims to AA from people under the age of 65 were also transferred to the new adjudication structure along with just over 16,000 reviews and appeals.

In addition to those cases which fell to be considered as DLA, there remain those cases from people aged over 65, which are still administered as AA. At the beginning of April, just over 101,000 such claims were outstanding in the DBCs, with around 30,000 appeals and reviews at the Fylde AA Unit.

Number of claims made and refused

I should first explain that claims to DLA are administered by ten Disability Benefit Centres (DBCs) around the country and the DLA Unit at Fylde. Claim forms are specially designed to direct customers to return the claim to the DBC nearest their home address. The Centre is then responsible for the claim, obtaining any other relevant information and making the decision on entitlement.

In addition there are also applications from people currently getting either AA or MOBA but who may also be entitled to an additional amount under the DLA rules. These applications, known as "Top-up" claims, are dealt with at a special unit at Preston.

The following table shows the number of claims received and the number refused from February to September:

	AA	DLA	Top-up
Number of claims made	386,000	303,000	195,000
Refusals	88,000	86,000	23,000

Staffing and Training

As part of the preparation for the launch of DLA and the introduction of the revised adjudication structure for AA, there was a major comprehensive training programme in 1991-92. Manpower costs for this programme were in the region of £2 million. For Disability Working Allowance, the comparative figure was just below £200,000.

Although the Agency had expected the initial launch of the new benefits to generate large numbers of claims in the early months, the success of the advertising campaign and the widespread interest from disabled people meant that the numbers we received in total, exceeded our expectations in the early stages.

This sudden surge coupled with the extensive recruitment and training programme, for staff who were still adjusting to the new benefit processes, meant that a backlog of cases built up in the weeks following the launch.

In direct response to this situation, extra staff have been deployed, and overtime is being worked to a considerable extent. The staff in post numbers for all DLA and AA operations at the Fylde and DBC offices have therefore been increased from around 3,300 in April to over 4,600 at the beginning of October. These figures include all AA staff for dealing with claims reviews and appeals etc. from people over age 65 and work for MOBA and AA (below 65) which of course were subsumed within DLA from its introduction.

Delays in payment

You asked about the numbers of applicants who have not received payment for a successful claim six months after their application. This information is not available in the format you requested. I should explain, however, that payment authorization is despatched within 24 or 48 hours of the decision on the case being recorded.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response his Department makes to a complaint from an applicant concerning failure to respond to an application for mobility allowance or disability living allowance, where the applicant gives notice that he or she will contact his or her hon. Member if no response is received within 28 days.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Alun Michael dated 27 October 1992.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the response made to a customer who gives notice that they will contact their honourable member if their claim for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) or Mobility Allowance is not processed within 28 days.

I wrote to all MPs on 19 October explaining in detail the significant problems encountered with the launch of DLA and the measures introduced to deal with the backlog which resulted.

The extent and speed of the response to the launch of the new benefit has meant that we have been unable to process claims as quickly as we would have liked. In order to keep customers informed of any delays we automatically send notification of progress 6 weeks after the claim is registered. I understand that customers may sometimes feel that contacting their MP will help to speed up the processing of their claim and whilst we appreciate their frustration, it is our policy always to deal with claims as quickly as possible.

I regret that customers are experiencing delays and I am by no means complacent about the number of applications still to be processed. I am currently monitoring the situation closely and I am confident that we will have reached a steady state shortly for new claims and by the end of November for "top-up" claims.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the number and percentage of requests for a medical examination by people claiming (a) disability living allowance and (b) attendance allowance since the introduction of the new self-assessment claiming system;

(2) when he expects the target clearance rate for new disability living allowance claims to be met; what targets have been set for reviews of decisions on (a) new disability living allowance, (b) outstanding mobility allowance or (c) attendance allowance; and when he expects each of these targets to be met;

(3) what was the total number and percentage of claims for disability living allowance where the adjudicating officer required further evidence; and what were the number and percentage requiring (a) an EMP report, (b) evidence other than an EMP report and (c) both;

(4) how many requests for reviews of disability living allowance have been received by his Department; and what number and percentage of these (a) resulted in an increase in the amount of benefit payable, (b) resulted in an original award being maintained, (c) resulted in a reduction in benefit and (d) remain outstanding;

(5) what is the number and percentage of (a) new claims and (b) top-up claims for disability living allowance to date that have either (i) resulted in an award or (ii) been rejected, broken down by whether (1) EMP evidence was provided and (2) the claim was decided solely on the statement of disability evidence provided by the claimant;

(6) how many (a) new and (b) top-up claims for the disability living allowance have been received by his Department to date; if he will provide a breakdown by (i) the number and percentage of these that resulted in an award, (ii) the number and percentage of these that were refused broken down by grounds for refusal and (iii) the number and percentage of these that are awaiting a decision; and if he will provide totals for the country as a whole and by each of the regions covered by the 10 disability benefit centres;

(7) what are the national average clearance times for (a) new and (b) top-up claims for disability living allowance for (i) each month since February and (ii) the period from the beginning of April to September inclusive; and if he will provide a breakdown by disability benefit centre.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about claims to Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and requests for review of DLA and Attendance Allowance (AA) claims. I will deal with each of your points in turn:

Numbers and percentage of requests for a medical examination by people claiming DLA and AA

One of the primary aims of the introduction of DLA and AA for people aged 65 or over was to reduce the need for medical examinations. New self assessment procedures place more reliance on information provided by customers. The DLA and AA claim packs do not direct applicants to request an examination. The information you require as to the number of cases where people have opted to undergo a medical examination is therefore not available.

Claims adjudicated upon on receipt and those requiring further medical evidence

From February to the end of September almost 190,000 decisions on new claim were made, over 117,000 of the decisions made were awards with around 72,000 unsuccessful. A breakdown of the numbers of decisions based upon the information provided on the claim form and those requiring further medical evidence or opinion is at Annex 1.

Number of claims made, decided and outstanding

You asked for the number of new claims and "top-up" claims that have been made to DLA, together with the number and percentage of awards and refusals. A breakdown of claims received, decided and the numbers outstanding at each of the Disability Benefit Centres (DBCs) is given at Annex 2. I should explain that it is not possible to show the figures for "top-up" claims in the same format as new claims as they are processed at a special unit in Preston. Figures for "top-up" claims are shown at Annex 3.

National average clearance times

The Benefits Agency introduced a standard performance measure across benefits some time ago. This is expressed in terms of clearance targets days rather than average clearance times as was previously the case.

Since the launch of DLA in February 1992 the performance to date has shown a 31% clearance rate against the primary target of 30 days. The latest performance for the month of September also shows 31% of claims cleared within 30 days. The table at Annex 4 shows the clearance times for each DBC between February and September inclusive for new DLA claims, but not those made under the special rules, for both the primary target (60% in 30 days) and secondary target (95% in 55 days). The clearance of "top-up" claims is shown at Annex 5.

The success of the advertising campaign and the policy initiatives surrounding the launch of the benefits, attracted a much larger number of applicants in the early stages than was expected. Backlogs of work arose as a result and this has undoubtedly affected our ability to meet the clearance targets which are intended to represent the on-going situation.

Significant inroads have now been made into these backlogs and whilst there will always be a certain number of cases in action at any one time, I would expect this to reduce to manageable proportions shortly.

Reviews of decisions on DLA, and outstanding MobA and AA.

You asked how many requests for review of DLA have been received, the outcomes of those determined, and the numbers still outstanding. Since the benefit's launch in February, just over 18,000 requests for review have been received, with less than 15,000, which represents approximately 80%, remaining outstanding at the end of September.

I should explain, however, that over 6,500 were received in September alone. These review requests relate to decisions on new DLA/AA and MobA claims and to requests for reviews of existing MobA and AA awards. The targets for clearance of all types of reviews are to clear 60% in 55 days and 95% in 75 days. For the continuing AA scheme, the comparable figures are 60% in 61 days and 95% in 81 days. Reliable information is not yet available about the outcome of applications for reviews. These targets are intended to represent the situation in stable running; currently much effort is being channelled into clearing these unadjudicated cases outstanding at April 1992. As I said in my letter of 19 October to all Members, these cases will be cleared by the end of December, and I would expect that clearance times of applications for reviews will improve thereafter.

All figures quoted are provisional and may therefore be subject to amendment.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what were the average fees paid by his Department to doctors for (a) mobility allowance and (b) attendance allowance claims; what was the total amount spent by his Department on payment of such fees to doctors; and what were the numbers of cases involved in each of the previous three years;

(2) how many doctors are currently employed by his Department for dealing with disability and attendance allowance claims; and how many doctors were employed by his Department for dealing with mobility and attendance allowance claims in each of the previous three years;

(3) what is the average fee paid by his Department to doctors for an examination required by a claim for disability living allowance or attendance allowance; and in how many cases an examination has taken place and the total amount spent on such fees to date.

Mr. Scott: The use of doctors to examine claimants and the cost of gathering medical evidence for social security benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning doctors employed by the Department who are dealing with claims for Disability Living Allowance (DLA), Attendance Allowance (AA) and Mobility Allowance (MobA). I will answer each of your points in turn.

Average fees paid to doctors for MobA and AA claims.

The average fees paid for combined MobA/AA examinations including an average for travelling expenses is as follows:

	Over 2·5 hours £
1989	88
1990	81
1991	75

The total amount spent on fees in 1991-92 was £27 million. It is not possible to identify the specific administrative costs incurred in paying these fees. Similarly, the figures for the number of cases involved in each of the last three years are not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Average fees paid to doctors for examinations on DLA or AA claims.

The average fee paid for DLA/AA65+ examinations is £83 per 3·5 hours which includes an average for travelling expenses.

To date the total amount spent on such fees is £4 million and examinations have occurred in approximately 52,000 cases.

Number of doctors employed

There are currently 66 doctors employed by the Agency for DLA/AA65+ claims. The number of doctors employed for AA/MobA claims at the end of each of the previous three years is as follows:

	Number
1989-90	39
1990-91	39
1991-92	41

The reason that full-time Medical Officer requirements increased for DLA/AA65+ was partly due to the higher workload forecast compared to AA/MobA, and partly by the use of full-time Medical Officers instead of fee paid doctors. I should explain that this has resulted in a net saving of £865,000.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number and percentage of all inquiries received by the benefits inquiry line related to disability living allowance and attendance allowance in each month since February; and how many calls were recorded but not able to get through on this line over the same period.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance and attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what additional resources, excluding any redeployment of existing resources the Benefits Agency has at its disposal, have been made available to the Benefits Agency to enable it to clear the backlog of disability living allowance claims and reviews and any outstanding reviews and renewal claims for mobility allowance and attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what additional resources are available to clear the backlog of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) claims and reviews and any outstanding reviews and renewals claims for Mobility Allowance (MobA) and Attendance Allowance (AA).

The Agency launched DLA in February, with an extensive publicity campaign. As part of this campaign, we wrote to all existing MobA and AA beneficiaries, in the region of 1 million, explaining the changes and, where appropriate, inviting them to claim extra money under the new DLA rules. In the meantime other take up campaigns were being run outside the organisation to encourage claims.

We had expected the initial launch of the new benefit to generate large numbers of claims in the months surrounding the benefit's introduction, and we calculated that around 2,000 staff would be required to process the claims for DLA. However, whilst we had planned for some increase in applications, the success of the advertising campaign and the widespread interest from disabled people, attracted a much larger number of applications in the early stages than was expected. There was also a huge increase in the numbers of claims to AA during the same period.

This sudden surge coupled with extensive recruitment and training programmes of 2,000 staff who were still adjusting to the new benefit processes meant that a backlog of cases built up in the weeks following the introduction of DLA. The transfer of outstanding MobA and AA renewal claims, reviews and appeals from 6 April to a completely new adjudication structure, was in itself, a major exercise.

As a result, over 800 extra staff have been recruited and trained and are now in place dealing with DLA and AA. There has been extensive overtime working across the ten Disability Benefit Centres and the DLA Unit at Fylde. As I am only given the resources to cope with the forecast workload, and this has in total been exceeded, I have had to find these resources from elsewhere in the Agency.

In addition the backlog of cases has generated further enquiries from customers seeking advice and information about their claim. Extra staff have therefore been taken on to handle telephone enquiries received at the DLA Central Enquiry Handling Service at Fylde.

As a result of these and other measures, significant inroads have been made into the backlog of work. Of course, there will always be a certain number of cases in action at any one time, but I am now confident that this will shortly have reduced to manageable proportions.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims to date for the disability living allowance have been completed (a) with the assistance of telephone calls and (b) with the assistance of visits made by the forms completion service staff in the disability benefits centres.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many claims to date for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) have been completed (a) with the assistance of telephone calls and (b) with the assistance of visits made by the forms completion service staff in the Disability Benefit Centres.

Since the launch of the benefit on 3 February until 25 September 1992, nearly 43,000 claims were completed with the assistance of telephone calls and approximately 1,650 visits had been made by the Forms Completion Staff in the Disability Benefit Centres.

This information differs from that I provided in my letter to you of 13 July 1992.

I hope that you will find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will hold an inquiry into the extent to which the administrative delays experienced by applicants for mobility allowance, attendance allowance and disability living allowance are incompatible with the citizens charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No. The chief executive of the Benefits Agency is responsible for the assessment of claims, reviewing entitlements to and arranging payments of social security benefits. He wrote to all hon. Members on 6 July and again on 19 October setting out the progress that has been made in this area by the agency.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what additional capital resources have been made available to introduce disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The provision of capital resources for the Benefits Agency is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what additional capital resources have been made available to introduce Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

A total of £19m has been made available for the introduction of DLA. This sum takes account of expenditure on the purchase of computer equipment, telecom equipment, office machines and furnishings and the refurbishment or redevelopment of the ten locations throughout the country within which are housed the staff administering DLA.

Agoraphobia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements are made for those who suffer from agoraphobia to apply for sickness benefit provided they satisfy the benefit eligibility rules; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of sickness benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Max Madden, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what arrangements are made for those who suffer from agoraphobia to apply for sickness benefit providing they satisfy the benefit eligibility rules.

There are no specific arrangements for dealing with customers who are agoraphobic. Existing procedures allow for claims to Sickness Benefit to be dealt with through the post, although home visits can be made upon request. Every effort is made to make home visits to those customers who, for one reason or another, are unable to leave their homes. Any customer who is agoraphobic should receive a home visit from one of our staff if requested.

Customers who are agoraphobic normally need to complete a self certificate (form SC1) which can be obtained from Benefits Agency offices by post, or from their doctors' surgery. If they need to obtain a Doctors' statement, then they will need to arrange to see their Doctor in the normal way.

I should explain that it is the aim of the Agency to identify and respond, wherever possible, to its customers' needs. Our Customer Charter states that we want to make it easier for our customers to contact us, whether they choose to call in at one of our offices, phone or write. The Charter states that "Where it is necessary for you we can visit you at home".

Deaf Claimants

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance has been issued, or is planned to be issued to the Benefits Agency in respect of provision of appropriate communication support/technical device to assist deaf and hard of hearing claimants attending local benefit offices.

Mr. Scott: The provision of service in local benefit offices for deaf and hard of hearing customers is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning guidance in respect of provision of appropriate communication support/technical devices to assist deaf and hard of hearing claimants attending local benefit offices.

The Agency is committed to an equal opportunities policy. For our customers with disabilities, this means that wherever possible we will ensure that their dealings with us should not be limited by reason of their disabilities. Training packages on customer care take account of awareness of the needs of disabled people.

We have set up an effective liaison with the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, and we are looking at a number of their services with a view to publicising them through our network of District Information Officers and Customer Service Managers in local benefit offices. For example, we hope staff will be able to make use of the RNID's Deaf Awareness Courses.

We are compiling a database of customer service initiatives, and this will be made available to all local offices. For example, some offices have sent staff on training courses to learn sign language. In one office nine members of staff have completed a 20 week course (two hours a week), and refresher meetings have been arranged. The scheme has been so successful that a further seven volunteers have come forward. The office has informed all local welfare groups and advice centres about the initiative. In another office, two volunteers have attended a local school for the deaf, while some offices have run their own training sessions about sign language.

The Manchester South District, which falls within your constituency, has made particular progress in this area; all the receptionists have attended night school classes in signing.

Other initiatives are being taken forward at a local level to improve service to people who are deaf or hard of hearing. For example, many offices—including those in the Manchester South District—have installed induction loop systems. This provides a link between the interviewer and the customer, and eliminates background noise. Most hearing aids can easily be switched over to the loop.

The Agency subscribes to the Sympathetic Hearing Scheme, and information packs have been distributed to all offices. Some offices have an electronic visual display unit which, sited in the reception area, has proved useful for getting messages over to the hard of hearing. Others use a portable terminal with a display screen and a memory facility for creating and storing messages.

We have issued a video for the deaf and hard of hearing giving information about benefits.

We are also interested in the Minicom system, although this is only available at present in a small number of offices, together with our freephone Benefit Enquiry Line service for disabled customers. The RNID advocate Super-tel, an advanced Minicom system. As a long term aim, we would like to be able to offer this facility at local offices, although clearly resources are a factor.

Research is currently under way into the service and information needs of disabled customers. The findings and recommendations will be fed into our overall equal opportunities strategy.

As the Agency's Customer Charter makes clear, we are committed to providing a service which is accessible for all our customers. We recognise that disabled people may have particular needs and we will continue to look for ways to make our service easier to use.

Benefits, Newham

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the latest annual figures for the London borough of Newham for the number of recipients of income support, direct payments, social fund, child support and housing benefit; and what were the comparable figures for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Ron Leighton, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, asking what were the latest annual figures for the London Borough of Newham for the number of recipients of Income Support, Direct Payments, Social Fund, Child Support and Housing Benefit; and what were the comparable figures for each of the past 10 years.

The complete range of information is not available except at a disproportionate cost. This is because statistics of a local nature are destroyed at regular intervals in accordance with standing instructions.

I have listed below the information available on each subject requested.

Housing Benefit

The administration of Housing Benefit is a matter for Local Authorities. The tabled information shows the number of cases in receipt of Housing Benefit in the London Borough of Newham. The data has been obtained from the Housing Benefit Management Information System. The figure for February 1990 includes 2,877 customers in receipt of a rate rebate which altered to Community Charge Benefit by February 1991.

Number of recipients of Housing Benefit

February 1990	February 1991	February 1992
32,000	28,193	30,139

Income Support

The figures quoted are for the areas covered by the Plaistow, Canning Town and Stratford offices, which make up the Benefits Agency's Newham District. It is not possible to provide a more detailed breakdown because the District boundary does not correspond with that of the Borough of Newham.

	February 1991	February 1992
Recipients of income support	37,692	41,628
Direct payments made from benefit to third parties	3,116	5,132

Social Fund

Social Fund statistics relate to the number of applications made rather than the number of actual applicants.

	March 1991	March 1992
Number of applications	1,156	2,282
Number of awards	709	1,235

Child Support

Child support statistics relate to the number of Income Support cases in which there may be a liability to child support rather than the actual numbers where child support is actually in payment.

February 1991	2,752
February 1992	3,225

Benefits Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what efficiency savings were made by the Benefits Agency during its first year of operations; and what target for savings has been set for the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Burt: The achievement of efficiency savings in the Benefits Agency is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the efficiency savings made by the Benefits Agency during its first year of operation; and what target for savings has been set for the financial year 1992-93.

The Benefits Agency made a total of £116m of efficiency savings in 91-92, mainly through the implementation of our computerisation programme. This, together with £80m carried forward from previous years, made a cumulative total of £196m compared with the target of £182m set for the Agency.

The Agency has been set a target of £53·7m for 92-93 which we expect to achieve, again, mainly through computerisation.

Fraud

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much his Department has saved from the investigation of fraud in the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the targeted savings for the next financial year;

(2) what is the number of whole time equivalent staff employed by his Department to detect and prosecute suspected fraud; and what is the cost of their employment;

(3) how many people were prosecuted for fraud by his Department in the latest year for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: The investigation of social security fraud is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the investigation of social security fraud.

You asked how much has been saved from the investigation of fraud and how many people were prosecuted for fraud in the latest year for which figures are available; what are the targeted savings for 1992-93; and what is the number and cost of whole time equivalent staff employed to detect and prosecute fraud.

In the year ending 31 March 1992 the estimated savings that accrued from the investigation of fraud totalled £427 million. During the same period there were 4,379 people prosecuted by the Agency which led to 3,916 convictions.

The number of staff employed to detect and prosecute fraud in the year ending 31 March 1992 was 2,873 at a cost of £62.5 million.

The targeted savings from the investigation of fraud for the year ending 31 March 1993 is £460 million.

Terminal Illness

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice he has issued to doctors, required to identify persons under special rules payments, who have not advised their patients of a terminal condition, or duration of a terminal condition.

Mr. Scott: The administration of special rules payments is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 27 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about advice given to doctors in connection with claims made under the special rules procedures.

As you know, the term "Special Rules" refers to the arrangements under which persons who are terminally ill can claim Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA). The procedures ensure that people with a limited life expectancy of six months or less are automatically awarded the highest rate of the care component of DLA or the higher rate of AA.

A claim for payment under the special rules procedures may be made by the sick or disabled person or by a third party on their behalf. The claim form requires the person applying for the benefit to indicate that the claim is being made under Special Rules procedures and to ask their local doctor to complete a form DS1500, which provides factual medical evidence in order to streamline the process and avoid delays in payment.

Doctors were advised of these arrangements when they were introduced. The DS1500 report is brief and easy to complete asking only three questions, it does not mention terminal illness nor does it ask for an opinion on prognosis. No specific advice is given to the doctor about what he should tell his patients about their illnesses. This must be a matter for his own judgment.

It is appreciated that this is an area which causes considerable distress to patients when they realise that Special Rules apply to people with a limited life expectancy. It is also difficult and distressing for the relatives and the doctor involved. The Benefits Agency in consultation with the Department has accordingly tried to make the claims process as easy and as sensitive as possible within the necessary legal constraints.

In order for Special Rules cases to be recognised at the outset and therefore processed quickly it is essential that the claim form identifies that the claim is made under these Rules and is accompanied by a DS1500 from the doctor treating the terminally ill person. If the claim has not come in as a Special Rules claim, or in some cases, a Special Rules claim is not accompanied by a form DS1500, it is necessary to contact the doctor concerned to obtain confirmation as to whether or not the patient is terminally ill and whether they are claiming under Special Rules.

I can assure you that the aim of both medical and lay staff is to deal with these cases in a caring and prompt manner.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of the reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many foreign fishing vessels are currently applying to be registered as British.

Mr. Norris: Twelve.

M25

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement regarding his plans for the widening of the M25.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Implementation of the general strategy announced on 6 September 1991 is continuing. Announcements of progress with the development of individual schemes for widening the existing carriageway to dual four-lane standard within existing boundaries are made at appropriate stages. Proposals for link roads between junctions 12 and 15 are the subject of public consultation. Decisions on the need for and feasibility of supplementary carriageways on other sections of the route remain to be taken when the studies are completed.

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees and what remuneration each currently receives.

Mr. Norris: Details of public appointments made by my right hon. Friend since 10 April 1992 are set out in the table.

Name of appointee	Body to which appointed and remuneration		Period of the appointment
Mr. A. H. C. Broadbent[1]	Dover Harbour Board		1 May 1992—30 April 1995
Mr. A. Worthington	Deputy Traffic Commissioner	—£172 per day	18 May 1992—17 May 1994
Mrs. M. Kendrick[1]	Acting Conservator of the River Mersey	—£8,223 pa	1 June 1992—31 May 1993
Mr. K. Brown[1]	London Transport	—£9,150 pa	29 June 1992—28 June 1994
Mrs. H. Robinson[1]	London Transport	—£9,150 pa	29 June 1992—28 June 1994
Mrs. M. K. Davies	Port of Tyne Authority		1 July 1992—30 June 1995
Mr. R. D. Peters	Dover Harbour Board		27 July 1992—30 April 1993
Sir Peter Baldwin[1]	Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee (unpaid)		1 August 1992—31 July 1993
Mr. J. S. Fair[1]	Dundee Port Authority		1 September 1992—31 December 1994
Mr. B. G. Duncan[1]	Dundee Port Authority		1 September 1992—31 December 1994
Dr. A. K. Watkins	London Transport	—£100,000 pa	1 October 1992—30 September 1997
Mr. M. J. Bealing	Ipswich Port Authority		1 October 1992—30 June 1994
Mr. J. Stephenson[1]	Deputy Traffic Commissioner	—£172 per day	1 October 1992—31 March 1994
Mr. R. W. A. Cake	Poole Harbour Commission		1 November 1992—31 October 1995

[1] Reappointments.

Remuneration of port authority appointees is a matter for the authorities themselves. It is not considered practicable or appropriate to list the many and varied qualifications of individual appointees, but my right hon. Friend will have satisfied himself as to their relevance before making the appointments.

M27

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on his Department's study into the widening of the M27.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Final decisions on the timing of an invitation to consultants to submit bids to undertake this commission have yet to be taken.

Dangerous Substances

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what level of consultation he has undertaken with representatives of emergency services and trades unions concerning European harmonisation governing labelling and safety codes of dangerous substances;

(2) what response he has given to proposals for European harmonisation of United Kingdom hazchem regulations;

(3) what meetings he has had with emergency services' chief officers concerning EEC directives for harmonising current regulations governing the carriage of dangerous goods by road and rail;

(4) if he will make a statement on the implications of the new European agreement concerning the movement of dangerous substances;

(5) what response he has made to concerns expressed by the Fire Brigades Union regarding the replacement of the United Kingdom hazchem system with ADR;

(6) if European harmonisation of hazchem will exclude current domestic safety codes and procedures for the protection of fire brigade personnel and the general public;

(7) if ADR will be achieved without undermining the current system of labelling dangerous substances within the United Kingdom;

(8) if the introduction of ADR, as a replacement of the United Kingdom hazchem system, satifies current safety criteria for civilian evacuation;

(9) what effect ADR introduction will have on risk minimisation within the operation of emergency services.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are no EC directives requiring the harmonisation of road and rail regulation for the transport of dangerous goods. However, our intention is that United Kingdom regulations for the domestic transport of dangerous goods by road will be harmonised with the European agreement concerning the international carriage of dangerous goods by road—ADR—from 1 January 1995. This should result in no lowering of existing safety standards. The regulations will be drafted by the Health and Safety Executive which will consult all interested parties.

As a result of representations from the Fire Brigades Union and others, the United Kingdom is currently negotiating the inclusion of United Kingdom emergency action codes in the hazard warning panel requirements of ADR for road tankers carrying dangerous goods. These codes give an immediate indication to the emergency services of how they should react at the scene of an incident and whether evacuation of people nearby is advisable.

Travellers Charter

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, as part of his quality of service objectives, he will require the publication of the responses of all bodies consulted in the preparation of the travellers charter.

Mr. Freeman: The Central Transport Consultative Committee, the statutory consumer body which represents the users of British Rail services, were consulted in the course of the preparation of the passengers charter. Its comments on the charter are summarised in the committee's annual report for 1991-92, published on 4 August. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

Preserved Railways

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of his consultations concerning implementation of the Transport and Works Act 1992 in so far as they relate to preserved railways.

Mr. Freeman: We have consulted widely on all the rules, regulations and orders needed to implement part I of the Transport and Works Act. The many responses received, including those from the railway preservation movement, have been taken into account in finalising subordinate legislation.

Schedule 7 of the Applications and Objections Procedure Rules will set out the table of fees for applications for orders under part I. The proposed fees for transport projects, such as preserved railways, which do not involve the compulsory acquisition of land are:

£750 where the area of the proposed works does not exceed 1 hectare;

£750 plus £250 for each 0·5 hectares (or part thereof) in excess of 1 hectare.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if, as part of his quality of service objectives, he will require the publication of all reports relating to the numbers of people eligible for legal aid commissioned since 1985 using public money.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Estimates of numbers of people eligible for civil legal aid were contained in the document "Review of Financial Conditions for Legal Aid: Eligibility for Civil Legal Aid: a Consultation Paper" which was issued in June 1991. There is no fixed upper financial eligibility limit for criminal legal aid.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the totals of individuals in each relevant category in the past year for which figures are available who have used their right to appeal against refusal in cases for which the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill would require a mandatory refusal.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Immigration and Asylum Appeal Bill does not require mandatory refusal of any immigration-related applications. It follows that in the last year no appeals can have been lodged on any such refusals.

Clause 10 of the Bill removes the right of appeal in those cases where dismissal of the appeal is mandatory. No separate records are kept of such mandatory dismissals and details of such cases could only be obtained at disproportionate expense.

Clause 9 of the Bill, however, removes existing rights of appeal against refusal of entry clearance in the case of visitors, short-term and prospective students and their dependents. In the year ending 30 September 1992 there were a total of 12,643 appeals registered against refusal of entry clearance for temporary purposes of all kinds except those by husbands, wives and fiancé(e)s. No breakdown is made of the types of appeal falling within this category, but by applying proportions obtained from a sample of cases approximately 9,607 visit visa and 1,712 student visa appeals were included in the total.

Criminal Justice Act 1991

Mr. Michael: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what guidance the Judicial Studies Board will be offering to judges and magistrates on the interpretation of sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Judicial Studies Board has already issued guidance on the Criminal Justice Act 1991 to both the professional and the lay judiciary. Judges of the Court of Appeal and the High Court were given a briefing in the Lord Chief Justice's court. Judges, recorders and assistant recorders sitting in Crown courts received an 81-page guide to the sentencing provisions of the Act as part of the "Crown Court Bench Book on Sentencing" and attended conferences at which there were lectures and discussion on the Act. The board produced an 18-page introduction to the Act and a copy of this document was sent to each magistrate. A comprehensive training pack was also produced to assist those, usually the justices clerks, who train the magistrates.

Duress

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has for reforming the law relating to the defence of duress in criminal cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

We have no proposals for reforming this area of the criminal law.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 29 October.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 29 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Cells

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many convicted prisoners and how many remand prisoners are currently being held in police cells in England; and how many of these are in the north-west region;

(2) what steps he is taking to ease the problem arising from holding convicted and remand prisoners in police cells; and when he expects a reduction in the numbers of such prisoners;

(3) what steps he has taken to alleviate problems caused to families and legal representatives in gaining access to prisoners held in police cells; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 26 October, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 497 prisoners in police cells in England. Of these 346 were in police cells in the north-west, as shown in the table.

Police force	Number of prisoners in police cells on 26 October 1992
Cheshire	1
Cumbria	1
Greater Manchester	233
Lancashire	37
Merseyshire	74
Total	346

Information collected centrally does not differentiate between remand and convicted prisoners, but surveys have confirmed that most such prisoners are on remand. There has been a very substantial reduction in the number of prisoners being held in police cells. On 31 March, 1,882 prisoners were held in this way in England and Wales as a whole. The total number on 26 October was 524. A new joint initiative involving close co-operation between the police and prison service management has proven to be very effective in achieving reductions in police cell use against the background of a fall in the total population in custody.

The police are aware of the importance of legal and family visits for prisoners in police cells. The vast majority of legal visits take place without difficulty, although practical constraints may arise at individual police stations from time to time. Liaison prison governors are available to advise the police. Facilities for family visits at some police stations are limited, and there may also be special security considerations which have to be taken into account. Guidance to the police provides that preference should be given to unconvicted prisoners to receive visits more frequently than convicted prisoners if a choice has to be made.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, following the retrial and subsequent release of Kiranjit Ahluwalia, he will arrange for a similar process to apply in the cases of women victims of domestic violence currently in prison for killing their partner; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I understand that Mrs. Ahluwalia was released following a retrial ordered by the Court of Appeal as a result of her original appeal to that court.

My right hon. and learned Friend had no involvement with any of these proceedings. He is always ready to consider representations that in a particular case there has been a miscarriage of justice, and to take such action as may be appropriate including, where something new appears to touch the safety of a conviction, using his power under section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 to refer a case to the Court of Appeal; but he has no plans to initiate a general review of the cases of women who have been imprisoned after conviction for the murder of their partner.

Animal Experiments

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will apply the code of practice for the Housing and Care of Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to breeding establishments;

(2) if he will bring forward proposals for stricter controls of the standards for the housing and care of animals in breeding, supply and research establishments.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have no current plans for amending the Home Office code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures or for applying the code as it stands to breeding and supplying establishments. However, we are considering whether the guidelines issued by the Laboratory Animal Breeders Association, currently used by the Home Office inspectorate in respect of breeding and supplying establishments should, updated as necessary, be given a more formal basis in the context of the operation of the 1986 Act.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the rights of appeal which apply to visitors, settlers and asylum seekers to the United Kingdom and other categories of applicant; and what information he has on the comparable provisions in each EC country;

(2) if he will list the current rights of appeal which apply to visitors, settlers, asylum seekers and other immigration and nationality department categories; and what changes he proposes.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Part II of the Immigration Act 1971 confers rights of appeal against virtually all categories of adverse immigration decisions. The main rights of appeal which apply to visitors and persons seeking to settle in the United Kingdom are against refusal of an entry clearance at a British post abroad; refusal of leave to enter at a United Kingdom port—a person refused leave to enter is not entitled to appeal until he has left the United Kingdom unless he holds a current entry clearance or work permit—and refusal to vary a person's limited leave in the United Kingdom—provided that the application was made during the currency of the limited leave. The rights of appeal available to asylum seekers currently depend on their immigration status at the time of their application.

The Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill contains provisions that would give unsuccessful asylum seekers specific new rights of appeal to a special adjudicator, exercisable while in the United Kingdom. The Bill also provides that persons seeking entry as visitors, students enrolled on courses of six months or less, and prospective students would no longer be entitled to appeal against a refusal of entry clearance, or against the refusal of leave to enter if they do not hold an entry clearance; and that persons refused entry clearance, leave to enter or a variation of leave on the grounds that they do not meet certain mandatory requirements of the immigration rules would also no longer be entitled to appeal.

The Bill does not affect the rights of appeal of persons refused entry clearance for settlement, or in categories leading to settlement; of persons refused leave to enter when in possession of an entry clearance or work permit; or of illegal entrants or persons subject to deportation decisions.

Rights of appeal in other member states of the European Community are a matter for the Governments concerned. I understand, however, that no other member state has a specialised system of immigration appeals.

Correspondence

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Mr. Aame-Diga Aakpa's file has been located; and when the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford can expect to receive a reply to her letter of 8 October 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Mr. Aakpa's file has not yet been located. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as it is possible to take a decision.

DNA

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will introduce legislation to give a DNA profile the same status as a fingerprint for the purpose of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984; and what response he intends to make to the comments made by the registrar in his annual report on DNA profiles.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Royal Commission on criminal justice has been asked to examine the issues surrounding the collection, storage and use of DNA material obtained by the police during the course of an investigation. My right hon. and learned Friend will consider the need for legislation in the light of the royal commission's recommendations.

The retention of DNA profiles for research purposes by the Metropolitan police, which the Data Protection Registrar refers to in his report, is a matter for the Commissioner.

Primary Purpose Rule

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 June, Official Report, column 524, to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden), how many spouses have been admitted to the United Kingdom under the primary purpose rule.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is the number of persons accepted for settlement as a spouse under the immigration rules, given in table 3 of the Home Office statistical bulletin issue 29/92 "Control of Immigration: Statistics—First and Second Quarters 1992", a copy of which is in the Library.

Drug Prevention Initiative

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of state for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to draw on the successful elements of the 20 drug prevention projects currently sponsored by his Department under the drug prevention initiative in order to make adequate provision of such services in each town and city in England and Wales which has a drugs problem.

Mr. Jack: The work of the 20 local drugs prevention teams and of the central drugs prevention unit is being evaluated. Given the innovative nature of this work, it is at present too early to consider a possible broadening of the drugs prevention initiative.

Probation Committees

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional resources his Department has provided for the probation service in England and Wales and to each probation committee to meet the costs of new responsibilities under the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Jack: The Home Office annual report published in February set out the actual and projected resources for the Probation Service in England and Wales as follows:

	1990-91 (actual)	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94	1994-95
Central Government support (£ million)	228	272	290	314	338
Total staff provision	12,851	13,641	14,234	14,713	15,100

Resources, which are now subject to cash limits, are allocated to the 55 individual probation areas through an agreed formula and the overall increase of 25·7 per cent. for 1992-93, compared with 1990-91 outturn, was not spread evenly because the allocation formula adjusted the proportion of national provision allocated to each area according to objective indicators of need and work load. The lowest increase was 20·8 per cent. while the highest was 30·3 per cent.

Prisoners (Licences)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional prisoners will be supervised on licence as a result of changes contained in the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Jack: We are expecting a gradual build-up of cases as offenders are sentenced and released from prisons under the Act and a corresponding decrease in the numbers released under the former parole arrangements. Current best estimates are that when the transitional period comes to an end in 1996, some 5,500 more ex-prisoners will be supervised on licence. Extra probation officer resources have been provided to allow for the increased caseload and to enable longer and more intense periods of supervision with offenders on licence. The numbers under voluntary supervision are expected to fall sharply.

Voting

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will conduct a national survey into the accessibility of polling stations to disabled people with the aim of identifying problems which they encounter;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that all electors who wish to vote at their polling stations have the ability to do so.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A national survey would not be a good use of our resources in this area, which are better directed towards providing financial support. Councils have a statutory obligation to designate as polling places, wherever practicable, only places which are accessible to disabled people. We have provided guidance for returning officers to remind them of their obligations, and shall continue to do so. It is our long-term aim that all polling stations should be accessible to disabled electors but, where it is not possible to use a building affording easy access, we make grants available towards the cost of providing temporary ramps.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what local government funding is earmarked for the implementation of the Representation of the People Act 1983 towards disabled persons access to the voting system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Details of local authority spending on access for the disabled to the electoral process are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been undertaken to identify the number of disabled people who failed to vote in the 1992 general election; and if he will conduct an inquiry into potential obstructions presented to the disabled at polling stations and by alternative voting methods.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the number of electors who are disabled is not collected centrally. We are conducting a full review of electoral law and practice in the light of experience at the general election in April. That review will include all aspects of access for disabled people to the electoral process.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to review the postal vote system;

(2) if he will simplify postal vote application forms and review the timetable for postal voting.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A full review of all aspects of postal voting procedures is being conducted in the light of experience at the general election. We have held preliminary meetings with the political parties and the local authority associations. A working group of Home Office officials and local authority representatives to look at absent voting arrangements will begin work shortly. Another working group will look at forms.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he will ensure that disabled voters have equal privacy to able-bodied voters when exercising their right to vote at polling stations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Returning officers are required to provide each polling station with a sufficient number of compartments in which electors can vote screened from observation. A number of manufacturers provide compartments or polling screens which are suitable for people in wheelchairs. We provide 80 per cent. grants towards the purchase of special polling screens.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what expenditure was devoted to publicising the right of elderly and disabled people to obtain a postal or proxy vote, during the last available financial year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We spent £11,210 in 1991-92 on a poster and leaflet campaign to let elderly and disabled people know about their right to an absent vote. In the period leading up to the general election we also spent about £1·5 million on television and newspaper advertising to tell people how to obtain an absent vote.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many disabled people are reliant on the postal vote system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the number of disabled people on the postal voters list is not collected centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many electors, in the 1992 general election, voted by postal vote; and how many persons lost their vote due to late return of ballot papers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the number of people voting by post will be published in the "Return of the Expenses of each Candidate at the General Election" later this year. Information on the number of postal ballot papers returned after the close of the poll is not collected centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the number of disabled persons voting at national and local elections has altered since the 1979 general election.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the number of disabled people voting at national and local government elections is not collected centrally.

Asylum

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have applied for asylum; how many have had their applications accepted; how many have been granted exceptional leave to remain; and how many have been returned to safe third countries, giving the figures in each case since 1985, by year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on asylum applications and decisions in 1985-90 is given in table 1.2 of Home Office statistical bulletin issue 12/92 "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1990-91", a copy of which is in the Library. Figures for refusals on safe third country grounds are not separately identifiable prior to 1991. For information for 1991 and the first three quarters of 1992 I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 20 October 1992, at columns 261-62.

[1] Provisional figures rounded to the nearest 5, percentages rounded to the nearest whole per cent.

[2] 1990 figures may understate and 1991 decision figures are likely to be incomplete because of delays in recording.

[3] See footnotes 2 and 3 to Table 2.1.

[4] Excluding South East Asian refugees: see Tables 3.1 and 9.1.

[5] Includes refusals on third country grounds, and those under paragraph 101 of the Immigration Rules: see footnote 1 to Table 3.3.

[6] Including dependants who applied with the principal applicant and those who arrived subsequently but before the principal application was decided.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances he uses his discretion to allow asylum applications in the country of the applicant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The 1951 convention relating to the status of refugees defines a refugee as someone who, owing to a well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion is outside the country of his nationality and is unable, or owing to such a fear, is unwilling to avail himself of the protection of that country. Where a person falls within this definition and has such close ties with the United Kingdom as to make it the most appropriate country of refuge for them, we are prepared to grant entry clearance for the purpose of their applying for asylum in the United Kingdom. Entry clearance for this purpose would not normally be granted to a person who remained within their own country and did not, therefore, fall within the definition of a refugee.

Colombia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what dates he visited Colombia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The visit between 8 and 11 September took place in an itinerary over 6 to 14 September which also included Venezuela and Peru.

It was principally concerned with drugs and had three main objectives: to see local problems at first hand; to explore the scope for further effective bilateral co-operation; and to consider the implications for policy in the United Kingdom.

In each of the three countries, I discussed with the President and senior Ministers the many aspects, domestic and international, of the drugs problem. In Colombia, I was able to see for myself some of the valuable results of our programme of assistance to the Colombian Government in their fight against drugs. In Peru, in addition to drugs issues, I took the opportunity to raise other matters such as human rights and the forthcoming elections.

Police Inquiry

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what salary, per diem, or other emoluments the chairman and other members of the inquiry into the role of the police officer will be entitled to receive as a consequence of the membership of the inquiry committee.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The chairman and other members of the inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards are entitled to receive fees in accordance with the appropriate daily rate set by HM Treasury. But the chairman and each of the members of the inquiry have waived their entitlement to remuneration.

Immigration

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many short-term and would-be students refused (a) entry clearance and (b) entry to the United Kingdom, by country, have lodged appeals against refusal in each quarter since January 1991; and in each category how many such appeals were (i) withdrawn, (ii) granted and (iii) dismissed;

(2) how many visitors refused (a) entry clearance and (b) entry to the United Kingdom by country, have lodged appeals against refusal in each quarter since January 1991; and in each category how many such appeals were (i) withdrawn, (ii) granted and (iii) dismissed.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This subject is a matter for the Lord Chancellor's Department; my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, will write to the hon. Member.

Ireland (Travel Documents)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has put to the European Commission for amending the common travel area between the Republic of Ireland and the United Kingdom under the single market from next year; whether EC nationals will be required to show their passports and to submit to spot checks prior to entry into Great Britain; whether all travellers from the Republic of Ireland into the United Kingdom will be required to carry passports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have made no proposals for amending the common travel area arrangements.

Squatting

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the consultations on changes to the law on squatting; and when he expects to introduce legislation to change the law.

Mr. Jack: As my hon. Friend knows, the Government have a commitment to strengthen and improve the law against squatting, and the Home Office published a consultation paper on this subject last October. We are still considering the best way forward in the light of the responses received and we will announce our conclusions in due course.

Sheehy Inquiry

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the paid employments of members of the Sheehy committee of inquiry into the role of the police officer.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Sir Patrick Sheehy, chairman of the inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards, is chairman of BAT Industries. The other members of the inquiry are Mr. John Bullock, joint senior partner of Coopers Lybrand, Professor Colin Campbell, vice-chancellor of the University of Nottingham, Mr. Eric Caines, director of personnel for the national health service and Sir Paul Fox, lately managing director of BBC Television.

EDUCATION

Hertfordshire College of Art and Design

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make an order under section 16 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 to incorporate Herefordshire college of art and design into the new further education sector on 1 April 1993.

Mr. Forman: Herefordshire college of art and design will be among the colleges joining the new further education sector on 1 April 1993. A corporation will be established for the college by means of an order under section 16 of the Further and Higher Education Act as soon as possible. A draft order was issued for consultation on 26 October.

WALES

Public Footpaths

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to offer financial compensation to farmers who are actively involved in improving public footpaths through their land.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Responsibility for the maintenance of public rights of way rests with county highway authorities, not with my right hon. Friend. Farmers have certain duties in relation to the maintenance of paths which cross their land and are entitled to grant assistance from the highways authorities for fulfilling part of those duties. The Countryside Council for Wales is, however, piloting projects in Wales which include an incentive payment to farmers to undertake maintenance of footpaths where it is in the public interest and it is cost effective to do so.

Education Reform

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received from district councils in Wales to date concerning the proposed changes in education; and how many representations (a) expressed objection to the extension of grant-maintained status for schools and (b) expressed objections to changes proposed for the Welsh Joint Education Committee.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Representations have been received from 12 district councils and from the Council of Welsh

Districts. Of these, five commented on our proposals for grant-maintained status and three referred to the proposals relating to the Welsh Joint Education Committee.

Disabled Trainees

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the training providers within each training and enterprise council in Wales, indicating the number of training places offered, and the number of disabled trainees currently granted placement;

(2) if he will list the large company unit schemes offering training within each training and enterprise council area in Wales indicating the number of trainees on each scheme, and the proportion of disabled trainees on each scheme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available centrally. Local training provision is the responsibility of individual training and enterprise councils which are under contract to make sufficient suitable places available to meet the demand from disabled persons.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the total numbers of disabled trainees currently on (a) employer led training schemes and (b) voluntary sector training schemes within each training and enterprise council area in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally. The type of training provision made available locally is the responsibility of individual training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the total number of trainees on youth training schemes within each training and enterprise council in Wales; how many disabled trainees there are within each area; and if he will indicate the numbers of disabled trainees according to training occupational classification.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of trainees on youth training at 13 September in each TEC area in Wales is set out in the table.

Information on the numbers of disabled young people in training and their occupational routes is not collected separately but over the six months to September, 1·2 per cent. of those commencing youth training were disabled.

Numbers on youth training on 13 September 1992

TEC	Number in training
Gwent	2,456
Mid Glamorgan	2,548
South Glamorgan	1,685
North East Wales	1,355
North West Wales	1,851
Powys	533
West Wales	3,803
WALES	14,231

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the 1989-90 and the 1990-91 trainee intake on to youth training placements within each training and enterprise council area in Wales are currently in full-time employment; and what proportion of disabled trainees over the same period are currently in full-time employment.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information as requested is not available.

Education Funding

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the basis of his policy to support differential funding for different sectors of the education service in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government's policies for the support of the education service are set out in the joint Department for Education and Welsh Office education White Paper, "Choice and Diversity: A New Framework for Schools", Cm. 2021, published on 28 July, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Hospital Catering

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 150, what consultations he has had with the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the suspension of redundancy notice consultations to in-house catering; when he expects to confirm decisions on the legal issues raised between the health authority and the catering workers' trades unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: South Glamorgan health authority has asked the Department for its views on the legal issues arising and these are now under consideration. A reply will be sent as soon as possible.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 150, what guidance was given by his Department to Gardner Merchant by way of clarification of tender procedures and on the minimum service standards relative to previously achieved standards required to comply with (a) the terms of the contract and (b) relevant European Community law.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department gave guidance on two specific points only in clarification of tender procedures—first, that the authority had amortised redundancy costs over the period of the contract in accordance with current guidelines; secondly, that information provided to all contractors must be accurate and current and sufficient to enable the submission of realistic tenders, that is, that all necessary details should be made readily available.

Visual Impairment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will conduct a review into the supply and cost of low vision aids to visually impaired children and the provision of training on the use of aids within health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: At present, my right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidelines to social services departments in Wales concerning advising parents of visually impaired children on adequate lighting provision in the home.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: General guidance on services for people with disabilities was issued in 1990. It specifically mentioned the possible need to advise the visually disabled, or their carers, about lighting equipment. Local authority social services departments' rehabilitation officers are available to provide advise about lighting requirements appropriate to the individual circumstances of those who are visually impaired.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local authorities in Wales which have appointed a social services officer with specific responsibility for visually impaired people.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: All social services authorities in Wales have such officers.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what efforts are currently undertaken by his Department to ensure that health authorities are fulfilling their statutory responsibility of providing information to parents of a visually impaired child concerning possible sources of assistance from other statutory agencies and voluntary organisations.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Existing guidance on services for people with disabilities draws attention to their information needs. It encourages the training of staff to give clear and accurate advice on how services provided by other agencies can be obtained. It is for health authorities where appropriate to reflect that guidance in their local strategies for health which are submitted to the Department for approval.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidelines to health authorities in Wales on the issuing of information, medical advice, and counselling to parents following the discovery of visual impairment in their child.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: General guidance on services for people with disabilities was issued in 1990, as was the report of the working group on co-ordinating services for visually handicapped people. In 1991, the Welsh Health Planning Forum issued advice to the NHS in Wales on physical and sensory disability in the form of a protocol on health gain.

Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of new build local authority and housing association dwellings have been built to appropriate standards for people with disabilities in Wales in each year between 1979 and 1991.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The percentage of new local authority and housing association dwellings built for people who are chronically sick or disabled is shown in the table. Figures for 1979 are not available.

Year	Percentage
1980	0·7
1981	1·2
1982	3·0
1983	7·6
1984	7·2
1985	4·8
1986	6·7
1987	21·8
1988	6·5
1989	1·9
1990	3·8
1991	4·1

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what aspects of responsibility currently held by local education authorities in Wales will be transferred to the proposed funding agency.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Details of the duties of the proposed Schools Funding Council for Wales are contained in the White Paper "Choice and Diversity: A New Framework for Schools", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

NHS Employees

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to protect the right of free speech in relation to employees of the national health service concerning the quality of patient care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department has recently issued, for consultation, draft guidance which clarifies the rights and duties of NHS employees in raising matters of concern about patient services and the responsibilities of local management. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Community Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local authorities in Wales whose draft community care plans include references to services for multiple-disabled people.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Although all local authorities' social care plans include services for physically and/or sensorially disabled people, only West Glamorgan makes specific reference to people with multiple disabilities.

Education White Paper

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the evidence on which he based the proposals set out in the White Paper, "Choice and Diversity: A New Framework for Schools", that a greater quality of educational provision in Wales will result from a greater diversity of type of school.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The reforms that we have already implemented—more parental choice, rigorous testing, external inspection of standards in schools, local management of schools, grant-maintained schools, and the national curriculum—are helping to shape a more open, a more responsive, and a more demanding system of education. The White Paper seeks to build on these solid foundations.

Central Control of Schools

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new central powers he will gain over the direct control of schools when the new arrangements for education governance are in place.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The White Paper, "Choice and Diversity: A New Framework for Schools" is not about increasing the powers of the Secretary of State but about rationalising certain arrangements to ensure best use of limited resources for the benefit of children and the education service generally. There are no proposals to give the Secretary of State new powers with regard to direct control of schools.

Electronics Companies

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has made of the percentage of components purchased by electronics companies in Wales which are produced in Wales; and what information he has in respect of individual companies.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not collated by my Department. Information held on individual companies is commercially confidential.

Nurses

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of nurses who have achieved state registered nursing qualifications in 1992 to the latest available date within the Merthyr Tydfil and Cynon health district; and how many have been employed by the health districts.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: So far this year, 38 student nurses from the Merthyr Tydfil and Cynon Valley health district have qualified. Of these, 26 have subsequently been employed by the Mid Glamorgan health authority; information about the remainder is not available.

Diabetes

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated cost of (a) a visit by a health visitor to administer insulin to a diabetic and (b) self-administration using a Novopen, including the cost of the Novo needle.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the cost of a visit by a health visitor is not held centrally. The cost of a Novopen and needle is commercial-in-confidence. However, many diabetics use disposable syringes to inject themselves with insulin and these are already prescribable. The use of injection pens and needles entails a real additional cost to the taxpayer. This factor has to be taken into account when considering whether to authorise their prescribing by general practitioners.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy that Novo needles shall be available on prescription for people who suffer from diabetes and require insulin treatment.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We are continuing to consider the case for authorising general practitioners to prescribe both insulin injection pens and needles, and a final decision will be reached bearing in mind all other priorities.

Unitary Councils

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will set out in detail the costs of establishing the new unitary councils in the areas of (a) personnel including recruitment and relocation, (b) property costs, (c) transference to new information technology systems and (d) shadow councils and extra election costs;

(2) if he will set out in detail the one-off costs of setting up the new unitary councils in the Principality.

Mr. David Hunt: I have engaged Touche Ross management consultants to advise me on the nature and magnitude of transitional costs which might arise in moving to a structure of unitary authorities in Wales. I will publish the consultants' report when it is available.

Deeside Industrial Park

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency concerning the earliest likely date on which permanent employment on the Deeside industrial park will reach 10,000.

Mr. David Hunt: I regularly meet the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency to discuss a wide range of issues.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in relation to the proposed Severn bridge toll increase in January 1993 (a) generally and (b) in relation to future validity of books of season tickets available for sale at the present time.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Pit Closures

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what duties of policy co-ordination he has given to the relevant training and enterprise councils in Wales in relation to job creation in the areas affected by proposed pit closures.

Mr. David Hunt: I have agreed with the chairmen of the TECs affected by coal closures that they should produce action plans or contingency plans as appropriate and that these plans should cover not only labour market issues but, in conjunction with the Welsh Development Agency, proposals for job creation.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Association of Welsh Training and Enterprise Councils in relation to funding earmarked for additional training and enterprise operations in areas affected by proposed pit closures in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I met the chairmen of Mid Glamorgan, West Wales and North East Wales TECs on 19 October 1992 to discuss the situation regarding colliery closures. I have informed the chairmen that £4·8 million is being made available over the next 18 months for retraining and other services and support for enterprise in the areas affected.

I am awaiting proposals from the chairmen on the most effective use of these resources.

Steel

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his statement on 21 October, Official Report, columns 527-28, in relation to the closure of Shotton steelworks heavy end in 1980, what is his most up to date estimate of the numbers of people employed in premises at the Deeside industrial park in each year since 1985, the numbers permanently employed at British Steel Corporation Shotton (a) prior to the 1980 heavy end closure announcement, (b) in 1985, (c) 1990 and (d) at the most recent convenient date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Information on employment numbers at Deeside industrial park is not collected by my Department.

Butetown Link Road

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received, and what consultations he has had, concerning the funding of the annual maintenance costs of the Butetown link road.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No such representations have been received.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Longford Hall

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he has taken to ascertain that Longford hall, Stretford is being maintained in a way which does not prejudice its status as a listed building; when a physical inspection of this property was last conducted; and what were the conclusions.

Mr. Brooke: Officials of the Departments concerned have been in regular touch with the owners, Trafford metropolitan borough council, about the state of the building. I understand that, pending decisions on the building's long term future, the council has authorised the carrying out of repairs, and tenders are due to be submitted by 30 October.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies who were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies who submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. Key [holding answer 27 October 1992]: The information requested is as follows:

(a) My Department has not yet issued any significant tenders for the supply of computer hardware and software. However, it has advertised a single major requirement in the Official Journal of the European Communities and is currently evaluating proposals. It has also purchased a number of personal computers to meet urgent interim needs.

(b) The services required are:

- (i) the supply, configuration, installation, implementation and maintenance of hardware and software to support the office-based functions of the Department;
- (ii) the provision of services including system operation and administration, user support and training, system design and development and migration of existing systems.

The Department plans to implement an integrated information system network, which will provide staff with desk-top access to a variety of services, will support specific business applications and will allow communications with external facilities.

(c) All companies that expressed an interest by the advertised due date were invited to submit proposals in response to an "operational requirement".

(d) Not applicable.

(e) and (f) The contract has not yet been awarded.

(g) 18 months with an option to extend and amend.

Gambling

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will estimate the level of (a) satisfied and (b) unsatisfied unstimulated demand for gambling.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

Net consumer expenditure—estimated at about £3 billion in 1991-92—provides the best indication of the level of satisfied demand for gambling. By its nature, it is not possible to estimate the level of any unsatisfied demand.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees and what remuneration each currently receives.

Mr. Curry: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. However, summary details of appointments made by my right hon. Friend the Minister, including details of remuneration, are contained in "Public Bodies" published annually by the Cabinet Office. A copy of the 1991 edition is available in the Library of the House.

Genetically Engineered Food

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to ensure that all food which contains items that have been genetically engineered are so labelled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Not at present. The Food Advisory Committee—FAC—which is one of the Government's committees of independent advisers, considers the need for special labelling of foods produced using genetic modification on a case-by-case basis taking account of advice from the advisory committee on novel foods and processes and the committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment.

The FAC committee has developed a set of guidelines for the labelling of food produced using genetic modification that are used to assist it in deciding whether special labelling is required. These guidelines are currently being reviewed by the committee and the results of this review will be made public.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the exact ages in years and months of BSE-infected cattle, both clinically diagnosed and confirmed histologically, in the period 1 June to 30 September.

Mr. Soames: During the period 1 June to 30 September 1992, a total of 17,528 cattle were slaughtered or died while clinically suspected of having BSE. Of these, 8,621 have been confirmed at histopathological post-mortem examination and the results of 2,334 are not yet available. The dates of birth and dates of clinical onset of disease of these animals are collected on-farm as part of the ongoing epidemiological study of the disease.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the tissues involved in the cow itself as the infective agent for BSE migrating from the intestine after ingestion to the brain.

Mr. Soames: More than 50 different tissues have been collected from confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathies and are being assayed for infectivity by mouse inoculation. Infectivity has so far been detected only in brain.

The following tissues have given negative results:

Spleen, semen, buffy coat, musculus diaphragma, musculus semitendinosus, bone marrow, placenta, prefemoral lymph nodes, milk and udder, supramammary lymph nodes, mesenteric and carcase lymph nodes.

Other results are awaited.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the amount of infective material required to be eaten to cause BSE in cattle.

Mr. Soames: A study is in progress to address this question.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on new types of BSE identified during the current year.

Mr. Soames: No new types of BSE have been identified in the current year following the histopathological examination that is applied to all confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the age at which BSE-infected cattle first show infectivity in the brain or in any other tissue.

Mr. Soames: A study is in progress to indicate when infectivity can be first detected in the brain and possibly in other tissues.

GATT

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what requests have been received by the Agricultural Council of the European Community from the European Commission concerning its negotiating activities as representing the Community in the general agreement on tariffs and trade; what consultations the Commission has had with the Council on these matters; and what was the last date when they provided the Commission with a negotiating mandate.

Mr. Curry: The Agriculture Council regularly discusses the GATT negotiations. At the Council on 26 and 27 October, the Commission reported that it was continuing to work within guidelines approved by member states, including in particular those laid down by Heads of Government at Birmingham earlier in the month.

Beef (Import Restrictions)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many countries place restrictions on imports of cattle, calves, or beef from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: Certification of health status is a normal requirement for international trade in animals and animal products. Recommended standards are agreed by the Office International des Epizooties, which publishes the international health code.

Scrapie

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on experiments designed to determine whether vertical transmission of the scrapie agent can occur in sheep.

Mr. Soames: Evidence published in the early 1970s confirmed that the foetal membranes collected from scrapie-affected ewes were capable of transmitting infection to sheep and goats following oral challenge. Observations of scrapie incidence in well recorded flocks demonstrate a strong familial pattern of cases in female lines.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fuel Supplies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the EC Energy Commissioner in regard to the implications for European Community fuel supply and energy policy of his pit closure programme.

Mr. Eggar: I have discussed this matter with Commissioner Cardoso e Cunha informally on several occasions.

British Coal

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received in regard to the extent to which British Coal has applied the citizens charter to its operations.

Mr. Eggar: I have received no specific representations on this point. British Coal aims to act in accordance with the principles of the citizens charter by providing all its customers with cost-effective, clean and convenient products and services.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans the Government have for the building of nuclear power stations in Britain which are able to use as fuel the plutonium recovered in reprocessing;

(2) to what uses the plutonium recovered in reprocessing spent fuel from British nuclear power stations at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield will be put; and whether any will be exported.

Mr. Eggar: It is expected that the material will ultimately be burnt in reactors to generate electricity. This could involve fast reactors, as and when they are needed, or plutonium could be used as mixed oxide fuel in conventional reactors—especially light water reactors such as Sizewell B. Studies are continuing as to whether plutonium fuels could be used economically in advanced gas-cooled reactors. While it is not axiomatic that United Kingdom civil plutonium needs to be burnt in United Kingdom reactors, this material will be transferred overseas only if Her Majesty's Government are satisfied that it will not be misused. The conditions for this include the application of safeguards and assurances covering peaceful use, physical protection and controls on re-transfer.

It is not envisaged that fast reactors will be needed for a number of years. Nuclear Electric will not be granted capital expenditure approval for any new nuclear power stations beyond Sizewell B pending the outcome of the 1994 review of the prospects for nuclear power.

Coal Mines (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the deep mine coal pits he and other Ministers in his Department visited during the recent parliamentary recess; and how many coal faces were visited in those pits.

Mr. Heseltine: My hon. Friend the Minister for Energy visited Whitemoor colliery on 17 July when he saw one production face and one development face. My right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Denton, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms, visited Silverwood colliery on 28 August when she saw one production face.

Orimulsion

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will review urgently the use of orimulsion by PowerGen and proposed use of that fuel by National Power at Padiham and Peabroke for the generation of electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The use of orimulsion must meet the requirements set by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The review announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will, in considering the energy policy implications of the prospects for the pits concerned, need to examine the economic implications of importing fuel for electricity generation.

Coal Imports

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations have been made by the European Commission to him concerning complaints of the dumping of Colombian coal in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Following the standard practice for anti-dumping complaints the Commission consulted member states including the United Kingdom as to whether they should open an investigation into British Coal's complaint, which concerns imports from Colombia, the United States and China. The Government have told the Commission that we have no objection to their doing so.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give figures for the average price of imported coal (a) prior to 15 September and (b) currently; and what is the percentage change.

Mr. Eggar: The latest available information on the average price of imported coal is for August 1992, when the average price was £28·4 per tonne, including the cost of insurance and freight. Figures for September and October will not be available until the publication of the monthly overseas trade statistics by the Central Statistical Office on 12 November and 11 December respectively.

Parcelforce

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what level of VAT will be charged to customers of the Post Office's Parcelforce business following privatisation.

Mr. Leigh: Following my right hon. Friend's announcement on 15 July of his intention to privatise Parcelforce, VAT is one of the many issues which is being looked at.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what amount his Department took into account of the likely effects of the loss of value added tax exempt status before announcing plans to privatise Parcelforce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My right hon. Friend's announcement to the House on 15 July was of his intention to privatise Parcelforce and took account of the key issues involved in that decision. Detailed work is now under way to establish the best way to privatise Parcelforce.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on the competitive framework for Parcelforce following privatisation.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 28 October 1992]: As would be expected with a planned privatisation, a number of interested parties have made their views known to the Department on a wide range of issues. All such points are being given full consideration in the current study into the method of timing of sale.

Miners Pension Fund

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the average pension paid out by the miners pension fund; and if the Government will ensure that the surplus in that fund is used for the benefit of the miners.

Mr. Eggar: These are matters for the trustees of the miners pension fund.

Electricity

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken, pursuant to his undertaking of 19 October, Official Report, column 236, to place in the public realm his memorandum of 9 June containing his response to the conclusions and recommendations in the report of the Fourth Select Committee on Energy (HC 113 of 1991-92) and the associated memorandum of the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 26 October 1992]: These Memoranda are already in the public domain. They were announced by parliamentary question, placed in the Library of the House and released to the press on 9 June, and have been made available to the public on request by my Department and the Office of Electricity Regulation.

Coal Exports

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will arrange for consideration to be given to the potential for the sale and supply of United Kingdom coal to generate electricity in the Republic of Ireland and elsewhere in the European Community; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will undertake discussions with appropriate Ministers representing the Government of the Republic of Ireland regarding the sale and supply of United Kingdom coal to generate electricity in the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 27 October 1992]: Sales of coal by British Coal are a matter for the corporation. I understand that British Coal exported some 175,000 tonnes of coal to Eire in 1991-92.

Departmental Tenders

Mr. Pendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies who were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies who submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 2[illegible] October 1992]: The Department undertakes a wide range of computer projects, some of which may result in single purchases of low value off the shelf products and others requiring major procurements following EC/GATT procedures, possibly involving development of software as well as purchase of goods.

The provision of a tabulation covering all tenders for administrative computer systems and software cannot be made available within the existing cost limits for answering parliamentary questions. However, a more limited tabulation covering tenders for purchases exceeding £20,000 is set out as follows. For reasons of commercial sensitivity contract values are not shown. Procurement procedures do not allow for bids to be considered unless in response to an invitation or EC Journal advertisement. All contracts are for supply only except where stated.

Project number	Type of services	Number of companies invited to tender	Company awarded contract	Duration of contract

Agencies and Trading Funds

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, columns 276-77, if he will state the final outturn figures for 1991-92 for the agencies and trading funds responsible to his Department.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 27 October 1992]: Annual reports and accounts containing full financial details for 1991-92 for the agencies for which my Department is responsible have been published and copies have been placed in the Library of the House. Some financial details are also available in the Department's appropriation accounts 1991-92—volume 4: classes IV and V—trade and industry and energy. I shall be preparing a consolidated table of their results in the next trade and industry expenditure plans report, which is due for publication in February 1993.

Postal Services

Mr. Bowis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to clarify the application of article 13a(1)(a) of the EC sixth VAT directive to private and privatised postal services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 28 October 1992]: It is not apparent that such legislation is necessary. If required, it would be a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Central Bank

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to article 30 of the protocol to the Maastricht treaty on European central banks what is the maximum sum in pounds sterling that the United Kingdom would be requested to contribute to the European central bank, under present conditions, under article 30 of the protocol to the Maastricht treaty on European central banks.

Mr. Nelson: No contribution of foreign reserve assets would be made unless the United Kingdom were to participate in stage 3 of economic and monetary union. The United Kingdom share of any initial contribution if we did participate could only be calculated nearer the time, under articles 30.1 and 29.1. This amount could also be increased subsequently under article 30.4.

Executive Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to paragraph 161 of the Treasury Minute Cm 2074, what proposals he has for amending the statutes of those executive non-departmental public bodies, where the Comptroller and Auditor General does not have the primary duty of audit nor a reserve duty of regularity and propriety audit, in order to provide such rights.

Mr. Dorrell: Establishing inspection rights for the Comptroller and Auditor General in such cases need not involve the amendment of statutes. Sponsor Departments will use their best endeavours to secure such rights by agreement.

Business Expansion Scheme Lettings

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many new lettings from investments under the business expansion scheme there were in (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92 in (i) the south-east and (ii) the United Kingdom; and what percentage these figures represent of (1) all privately rented property and (2) all rented property.

Mr. Dorrell: Provisional estimates for new lettings under the business expansion scheme in 1990-91 and 1991-92 are as follows. A reliable estimate of the proportion of new lettings in south-east England in 1991-92 is not available.

	Total number	New lettings as a percentage of: all privately rented property per cent.	all rented property per cent.
1990-91
South East England	2,500	0·42	0·11
United Kingdom	5,700	0·33	0·07
1991-92
United Kingdom	8,500	0·49	0·11

Balance of Payments

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual balance of payments position of each Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country at the last available date.

Mr. Portillo: Data on OECD countries' current account balances for 1991 are in the OECD's "Economic Outlook", June 1992.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the United Kingdom's balance of payments position on manufacturing goods in each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Information on the balance for manufactured goods is published in the Central Statistical Office's "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" and is also available on the Central Statistical Office databank which may be accessed through the Library of the House.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies who were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies who submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 27 October 1992]: The Treasury has completed three tender exercises since 9 April 1992. Some of these were started before 9 April but were awarded after that date. The table does not include tenders that were let by CCTA on Treasury's behalf or tenders let by CCTA and Chessington computer centre for their own purchases. These tenders will be part of the Office of Public Service and Science's reply to this question.

Tender subject	Number of tenders	Winning company	Approximate value £	Years
Supply of microcomputers	68	Tandon/Compstand	800,000	3
Asset Management System	2	Ground Modelling Systems	80,000	1
Sun Computer System	6	Productivity Computers	30,000	1

In all these tenders, the companies that submitted a bid were invited to tender.

Parcelforce

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he intends to ensure that Parcelforce, when privatised, will be on an equal value-added tax footing with its competitors.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 28 October 1992]: The various options for achieving the privatisation of Parcelforce are still under consideration. One of these considerations is the desirability of achieving greater parity of VAT treatment between competitors in the postal sector.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the value-added tax status of Parcelforce following privatisation.

Sir John Cope [holding answer [illegible] October 1992]: My right hon. Friend has received no direct representations on this subject, but I have received representations from the Association of International Courier and Express Services proposing that the privatised Parcelforce should be "fully registered" for VAT.

Postal Services

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had or intends to have with EC finance Ministers and the Commission on article 13 a (1) (a) of the EC sixth VAT directive on exemption to public postal services; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 29 October 1992]: My right hon. Friend has had no discussions with EC Finance Ministers or the Commission about the VAT exemption for public postal services. Although the EC Commission, like the Government, is currently considering the impact of this exemption on competition within the postal sector, it is too early yet to say if and when any discussions at ministerial level will take place.

Magnetic Tape (VAT)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rate of VAT applies to the supply of magnetic tape and related apparatus to the Royal National Institute for the Blind, the National Listening Library and other similar charities.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 28 October 1992]: Supplies to the Royal National Institute for the Blind, the National Listening Library and other similar charities, of specially adapted magnetic tape, related apparatus, and special pre-recorded tapes for use by the blind and severely handicapped are zero-rated for VAT.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to encourage businesses to provide information on tape for use by the blind or severely handicapped by ensuring that such tapes are taxed in the same way as the supply and production of such information in printed form.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 28 October 1992]: There is already a wide measure of VAT zero-rating relief for the purchase of specialised equipment for use by blind and severely handicapped people. In addition, supplies of pre-recorded tapes to the Royal National Institute for the Blind, the National Listening Library and other similar charities are zero-rated.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees, and what remuneration each currently receives.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The details requested are as follows:

[1] When members are appointed to this board they are also appointed to the Crown Agents Holding and Realisation Board.

[2] Excluding pension contributions.

Note: For Crown Agents and Commonwealth Development Corporation, figures are taken from 1991 published accounts.

Information on the exact period for which each appointment was made and the relevant qualifications of the appointees is not held centrally.

There are five appointments vacant across three committees.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when a decision is to be taken on an entry clearance application made by Noreen Akhtar, born 7 February 1974 (Ref. IMM/B1438), at the post in Islamabad;

(2) when a decision is to be taken on an entry clearance application made by Azhar Iqbal, born 1 January 1968 (Ref. IMM/93512), at the post in Islamabad.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information about these cases, I have asked the high commission in Islamabad for a full report. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

European Parliament

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate has been made of the cost of the European Parliament not having a single seat.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Clearly the costs of the present arrangements for the European Parliament are higher than they would be if it had a single seat. We are not, however, aware of any single, official estimate.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he is making to the proposal of the hon. Member for Northampton, North for the provision of independent scrutiny of the Government's proposed leaflet on the Maastricht treaty before its publication.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. The Government's pamphlet will set out in objective fashion the benefits of Community membership, how the Community operates and the changes introduced by the Maastricht treaty.

Caribbean

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the review of policy and management of the Caribbean dependent territories.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have reviewed our policy towards, and the management of, our business with the Caribbean dependent territories—Anguilla, British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Montserrat and the Turks and Caicos Islands.

Our record in assisting the economic development of these territories is good, but their economies are weak. They need to attract more sound private investment, and to develop their infrastructures, so as to stand more securely on their feet. Sustained economic progress will only come through the strengthening of good government.

I have decided that we should make changes in our existing arrangements for these territories. As the Minister responsible, I will chair a ministerial board of management for the territories to bring together those Government Departments and agencies which have a part to play in the territories' affairs to improve co-ordination within Whitehall. A new secretariat for the territories will be set up in the region to co-ordinate all official funding programmes and provide on-the-spot support and advice for Governors and territory Governments.

We wish to encourage the elected Governments of the territories to work closely with us in a spirit of partnership and common enterprise. Our Governors will play a vital part in achieving that aim.

I also propose to introduce jointly agreed country policy plans for each aid-receiving territory. The Governments of the territories will have an important say in drawing up these plans, in discussions with governors and the regional secretariat. Together they will agree the priorities for development and improvements needed in the administration of the territories over a three-year period, to be reviewed annually. These plans will represent a joint public commitment by the British and dependent territory Governments to the future development and good government of the territory.

I believe that these measures will significantly strengthen our ability to assist the Caribbean dependent territories in their efforts to develop their economies and societies in an increasingly challenging environment.

Solo Greenpeace

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken to secure the release of Helena Sierakowski and the other crew members of the NV Solo Greenpeace ship arrested by Russian authorities in the Kara sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 22 October 1992]: The Greenpeace ship Solo was intercepted by the Russian authorities in the sea of Kara on 12 October. The ship's dinghy had allegedly entered Russian jurisdiction. The Solo was escorted into a naval bay north of Murmansk, arriving on 18 October. In accordance with Russian law, the ship was held for three days while the Russians decided whether to press charges. On 21 October, the ship was released with all crew members on board. No charges were laid.

The Netherlands consular representative was the only consular official permitted to board the vessel, which was registered in the Netherlands and captained by a Netherlands national. He did so on 18 October, and reported to the British consulate general in St. Petersburg that all crew members were safe and well.

European Economic Area

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when it is intended that the European economic area agreement signed on 2 May will come into force.

Mr. Heseltine: I have been asked to reply.

The agreement establishing the European economic area provides for it to come into force from 1 January 1993. Before it comes into force it will require ratification by all the EC and EFTA member states and the assent of the European Parliament. To this end the Government introduced a Bill to the House of Lords on 22 October. Subject to parliamentary progress, the Government intend to ratify the EEA as soon possible.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Public Bills

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many amendments have been proposed to public Bills in Committee this session by (a) the Government and (b) the Opposition; and how many have been agreed to.

Mr. Newton: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Payroll Giving

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members currently take advantage of the payroll giving scheme by deduction from their Parliamentary salaries.

Mr. Newton: There are currently 41 Members who have authorised deductions from their parliamentary salaries under the payroll giving scheme.

ENVIRONMENT

Groundwater Protection

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to encourage the widening of the scope of the proposed European Community directive on groundwater protection to include management of water catchments.

Mr. Maclean: The EC ministerial declaration at the Hague in November 1991 invited the Commission to elaborate proposals to improve the management and protection of groundwater in the Community. These proposals are awaited.

EC Environment Policy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if, during the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Community, he will seek to encourage the European Community to take environmental considerations into account in its structural funds monitoring procedure; and if he will introduce a new article into the structural fund regulations guaranteeing freedom of information;

(2) if he will make it his policy during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC to encourage the European investment bank to integrate environmental assessment into its decision-making process;

(3) if he will make it his policy to promote the amendment of structural fund regulations so that (a) any actions affecting land use and resource consumption must promote conservation and sustainable use of natural resources in order to receive funding and (b) payments under the fund are cancelled where there is clear evidence that EC laws have been breached;

(4) if he will make it his policy during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC to secure (a) the establishment of a European environmental agency (b) evaluation by environmental audit of each directorate general (c) environmental assessments of all new EC initiatives and regulations, with regulations to be accompanied by an environmental statement and (d) rapid progress with the proposed directive on environmental assessment for programmes and plans;

(5) if he will take steps to ensure that the European Community's fifth action programme on the environment addresses fishery issues;

(6) what efforts will be undertaken by his Department to ensure that the EC's fifth action programme on the environment (a) addresses trade issues and (b) contains clear targets and timetables, including targets for transports.

Mr. Maclean: In the EC, the fifth action programme itself, as well as the initiation and enforcement of measures such as the structural fund regulations are primarily a matter for the Commission. It has undertaken, in putting forward proposals, to assess their environmental impact and the Community as a whole will promote sustainable growth which respects the environment. As presidency, we are playing our part in giving effect to the treaty obligation that environmental protection shall be a component of the EC's other policies. We are doing this through, for example, a Council resolution on the fifth action programme which will highlight the importance of the integration of the environment into other policies and of the need for effective review; in our approach to the revision of the structural fund regulations; and through discussion of the environment in a number of other policy areas. We are also seeking the early establishment of the European environment agency. The Community as a whole is committed to greater openness.

10 Downing Street

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost of the refurbishment currently being carried out at No. 10 Downing street; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: There is no refurbishment currently being carried out at No. 10 Downing street. Works to improve security at Nos. 10, 11, and 12 Downing street are nearing completion. Their cost is estimated at £7·6 million.

EC Habitats Directives

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being undertaken to accelerate the designation of protection areas under the European Community birds directive; and if he will bring forward legislation to implement the European Community habitats directive during the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Community.

Mr. Maclean: The Department and the statutory nature conservation bodies are affording high priority to the designation of special protection areas for birds and are working together on an accelerated designation programme. As a result, 21 special protection areas have been designated in the past 12 months, bringing the United Kingdom total to 61 sites. The Government are currently considering the measures necessary to implement the habitats directive; the legal framework for which is required to be in place by June 1994.

EC Habitats Directives

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has made to the EC to secure that agro-environmental schemes utilised by the EC are interlinked with the objectives laid out in the birds and habitats directives.

Mr. Maclean: My Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food worked together closely in pressing for the integration of agricultural and environmental objectives within the common agricultural policy during the recent reform negotiations. The reform package includes an agri-environment measure that requires all member states to operate programmes to encourage environmentally friend farming. The preamble to the agri-environment regulation—Council regulation EEC No. 2978/92—says that measures must contribute towards certain specific environmental goals set out in Community legislation, while article 4.5 provides a link between agri-environmental aid schemes and other Community provisions.

Government Cars

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who won the tender to supply vehicles for the Government's secure car scheme fleet; how many organisations submitted tenders; and when the tender will next be advertised.

Mr. Baldry: The Government car service vehicles are generally purchased through Government call-off contracts with the vehicle manufacturers concerned. The advertising of the tenders for these contracts is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of vehicles by make and type that are currently in the Government's secure car scheme fleet.

Mr. Baldry: The GCS car fleet comprises some 180 vehicles which is made up of the following car makes and types:

Car makes and types	Number
Jaguars	14
Rover 800 Series	47
Ford Sierra Sapphire 2.0 litre	33
Rover Montego 2.0 litre	23
Rover 400 Series	48
Range Rover	1
Daimler Limousine	2

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for the last 12 months the number of times a vehicle from the Government's secure car scheme fleet has been used by Government Ministers for private use.

Mr. Baldry: Ministers, except where it is justified on security grounds, do not normally use GCS cars for private purposes. For private use of a non-security nature, Ministers would be charged for the use of the car by their own Department. No central record is maintained.

Renovation Grants

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the actual amount spent in each region on mandatory renovation grants in 1991-92; and what is the expected outturn by region on mandatory renovation grants for 1992-93.

Mr. Baldry: Expenditure by local authorities on mandatory grants in each standard region of England for 1991-92 under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 is shown in the table.

Mandatory grants: Final payments 1991-92
(Under Local Government and Housing Act 1989)

£ million

Region	Renovation grants	All mandatory grants[1]
North	16·3	18·4
Yorkshire and Humberside	17·1	24·6
East Midlands	18·5	22·2
East Anglia	7·7	9·5
Greater London	15·0	19·8
Rest of South East	26·6	35·4
South West	20·1	25·3
West Midlands	25·5	31·7
North West	37·9	44·8
England	184·6	231·6

Source: As reported by local authorities on the housing statistics return P1D.

Note:

[1] Total of mandatory renovation, Houses in Multiple Occupation, common parts and disabled facilities grants.

Information about mandatory grants paid under the previous system, under the Housing Act 1985, is not available.

Estimates from this year's HIP2 forms, which include local authorities' expected outturns for 1992-93, have not yet been finalised.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds were allocated in each region for mandatory renovation grants in the years 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Baldry: Resources are not allocated to local authorities in each region solely for expenditure on mandatory renovation grants. Each authority receives an overall allowance for specified capital grant, as part of its annual housing investment programme—HIP—allocation, to support private sector renewal work, including house renovation grants. This covers the Exchequer contribution towards the expenditure—75 per cent. in the case of grants. Allocations of specified capital grant to local authorities in each region for 1991-92 and 1992-93 are set out in the HIP allocation tables for local authorities in England for those years, copies of which are available in the Library.

Housing Associations

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to representations from the National Federation of Housing Associations about the retention of the £2 billion grant for housing associations; and if he will make it his policy that no cuts in expenditure will be made to the budget for the west midlands.

Mr. Baldry: The chairwoman of the National Federation of Housing Associations wrote to my right hon. Friends, the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, on 7 September.

In replying on their behalf, my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning said that the Government could not comment on the discussions that are currently taking place about future public expenditure.

Next year, as this, resources will be allocated to the Housing Corporation's regions in accordance with the housing needs indicator.

Drinking Water

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each water company supplying water to domestic customers in England, the supply zones where one or more drinking water inspectorate sample in 1991 exceeded 10 micrograms of lead per litre of water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not readily available in the form requested and could be made available only at disproportionate cost. However I draw the hon. Member's attention to "Drinking Water 1991", the second annual report by the chief drinking water inspector, and to the document, "Nitrate, Pesticides and Lead, 1989 and 1990", published by the drinking water inspectorate in July 1992. These reports contain considerable information about lead concentration in water supplies. I regret that the hon. Member has misinterpreted information from these documents in his report "Poison in the Pipeline?"

Local Government Finance

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to respond to representations concerning local government finance made to him by Sefton borough council on 13 August.

Mr. Robin Squire: I replied to Sefton borough council's letter on 21 October.

Radioactive Waste (Aquatic Life)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has undertaken in order to evaluate effects of low-level radioactive waste on aquatic life.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 28 October 1992]: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 21 October, Official Report, column 320, where in Somalia the 19,100 tonnes of British food aid and 105,000 tonnes of EC food aid were delivered; to whom the aid was delivered and on what dates; and what were the commodities.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Information on United Kingdom food aid for Somalia is given in the table. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman with details of EC food aid to Somalia when we receive the relevant information, which we have requested from the European Commission.

DEFENCE

Royal Navy Supertanker

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is planned to replace or install a command and control system in the Royal Navy supertanker Fort Victoria in 1996; what arrangement for command and control will endure during the intervening period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The ship is designed to be fitted with a command system at a later date. The exact nature of this will depend upon the finally approved equipment fit. The ship will be able to operate its existing weapons in the interim period.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Royal Navy supertanker Fort Victoria was designed to be equipped with the Sea Wolf defence system; if this will now be installed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The ship has been designed to be fitted with the vertical launch Sea Wolf system at a later date, if necessary. The operational requirement to fit the system is currently under review, but no decision has yet been taken.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what protection and computerised control systems will have been installed when the Royal Navy supertanker Fort Victoria goes into service.

Mr. Aitken: The machinery control and surveillance system for the computerised control of the ship and its machinery will be fully operational when the ship enters full service with the Royal Fleet Auxiliary. The ship is designed to be fitted with a command system at a later date.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the original budget for the Royal Navy supertanker Fort Victoria; what is the current budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The original contract for Fort Victoria was valued at £127·2 million at 1985-86 prices. A final settlement has not yet been reached; our estimate of the cost is commercially confidential.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the original expected delivery date of the Royal Navy supertanker Fort Victoria; what it is now; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The original in-service date for Fort Victoria was 1990. Because of problems experienced by the contractor, it is now forecast that the ship will be fully accepted into service in 1993.

Diversification Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his policy to evaluate the benefits of establishing a defence diversification agency to protect jobs in companies currently involved in military equipment and armament production.

Mr. Aitken: No.

European Fighter Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the amounts of money which have been and are estimated to be spent on (a) developing and (b) producing the European fighter aircraft for each financial year, by each country involved in the project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Aitken: It is not my Department's policy to give details of estimated project expenditure, derived from the long-term costing, which is designed for internal planning purposes. Expenditure by the United Kingdom each year since the beginning of the European fighter aircraft project is as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £ million revalued to 1992 economic conditions
1984-85	2
1985-86	3
1986-87	30
1987-88	68
1988-89	127
1989-90	151
1990-91	208
1991-92	366
[1]1992-93	162

[1] The figures for 1992-93 is expenditure to date.

We do not maintain records of the progress of expenditure by our partners. The total cost to the four partner nations of developing EFA is estimated at about £8·5 billion, of which the United Kingdom share is about £2·7 billion.

Sea Training

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will indicate the number of (a) Royal Navy ships and (b) NATO ships that undertake a period of sea training at Portland on an annual basis; and what level of income is generated by these arrangements.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1991-92, a total of 43 Royal Navy, 17 Royal Fleet Auxiliary, and 12 ships from NATO nations undertook a period of sea training at Portland. Over this period cash receipts for training to foreign navies amounted to some £0·1 million. Some nations provide services in support of sea training rather than cash.

Defence Commitments

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the estimated attributable costs of defence commitments for 1992-93 for (a) strategic nuclear deterrent, (b) defence of home base including Northern Ireland, (c) defence of central fronts, including (i) British Army of the Rhine, (ii) RAF Germany and (iii) Berlin and (d) maritime operations including (1) eastern Atlantic, (2) channel, (3) amphibious capability, (4) Allied Command Europe mobile force, (5) United Kingdom mobile force, (6) Belize, (7) Cyprus, (8) Falkland Islands, (9) Gibraltar, (10) Hong Kong and (11) operational HQ costs.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is no longer possible to provide the information in the form requested. Table 1.3 of "Defence Statistics 1992" shows a breakdown of the defence budget by programme for the years up to 1991-92, but in order to reflect the way in which defence expenditure is now controlled under the new management strategy, this table has been superseded by table 1.3A showing how the defence budget is distributed among top and high level budget holders.

Naval Bases

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all those who are being consulted about the review of United Kingdom naval bases, including both national and international bodies, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no single review of United Kingdom naval bases. A number of measures potentially affecting particular bases are being examined as part of continuing work to match support to a smaller front line. Other Government Departments are consulted as necessary. The trades unions will be consulted on any proposals, and local authorities will have the opportunity to give their views so that all relevant factors can be considered before final decisions are announced.

The provision of support facilities is a national responsibility. NATO authorities are, however, aware of our strategy for ensuring cost-effective support of the Royal Navy.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the therapeutic earnings rule to enable people undertaking a specified and limited amount of voluntary work to continue obtaining invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance.

Mr. Scott: People receiving invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance may undertake work, including work for a voluntary organisation, if it is likely to benefit their health; and as long as their earnings do not exceed £40·50 a week. We have no plans to amend these conditions.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements he intends to implement to reduce the number of occasions on which responses are unavailable on an application for disabled living allowance because the file has been lost.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Alun Michael, dated 28 October 1992.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about what arrangements he intends to implement to reduce the number of occasions on which responses are unavailable on an application for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) because the file has been lost.

I regret that there have been occasions when telephone enquiries could not be answered because the file has been unavailable but I am sure you will appreciate that when vast numbers of cases are being handled it may sometimes be difficult to locate a particular file. When files have been temporarily mislaid, a special search is instigated as soon as possible so that the enquiry can be answered.

The measures we have introduced to clear the backlog of DLA claims have already reduced the number of outstanding cases and location of files should be more straightforward in future. There will always be a steady volume of outstanding work, for instance where further enquiries have to be made, but with the clearance of the backlog this will reduce to manageable proportions.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration his Department has given to implementing the recommendations of the 1990 report of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, entitled "Hard Labour".

Mr. Scott: The Department considered this report in full and replied in detail to the national association explaining how existing and planned procedures addressed the report's concerns.

Income Support Claimants

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether an unemployed person claiming income support may participate in a part-time education or training course; what conditions they have to satisfy; whether people leaving employment training or employment action can immediately take advantage of the 21-hour rule concession; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Unemployed income support recipients can participate in part-time education or training courses provided that the supervised study element of the course does not exceed 21 hours a week and they are prepared to give up the course if a suitable job vacancy becomes available. In order to take advantage of this people have to be aged 18 or older and satisfy the following conditions:

(a) they must have been unemployed and in receipt of unemployment or sickness benefit or income support because of unemployment or sickness, or participating in Youth Training for three months, or at least three months in the previous six if they have been in temporary employment between spells of unemployment, after the terminal date for Child Benefit and before they start the course; and

(b) the course is defined as part-time and does not consist of more than 21 hours a week (based solely on periods of supervised study and course requirements); and

(c) the course is an education course run by a college, school or equivalent recognised institution or is a training course analogous to one for which a training allowance is payable; and

(d) they are prepared to leave the course immediately a suitable vacancy becomes available; and

(e) they continue to actively seek work while attending the course.

People who leave the employment training or employment action programme have to satisfy the qualifying conditions before they can take advantage of the 21-hour rule concession.

Unemployment

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what level of income support payments were made to unemployed families in each year since 1990-91.

Mr. Burt: Expenditure on income support to unemployed families for the years 1990-91 is shown in the table. Statistics for 1992 are not yet available.

	Annual expenditure £ million	Average weekly payment £
1990	899	77·94
1991	1,319	84·04

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the administrative cost for benefit payments to unemployed families, for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 28 October.

Benefits Expenditure

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total benefit payment expenditure, for each social security benefit, for each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Scott: The information is published in the Government expenditure plans for the relevant years, copies of which are in the Library.

Industrial Injury

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many miners, having been diagnosed as suffering from bronchitis and emphysema, have been refused compensation for industrial injury; and how many of them would be entitled to claim if it was recognised as an industrial injury.

Mr. Scott: Since bronchitis and emphysema are not in the list of diseases prescribed for industrial injuries disablement benefit—IIDB. No information on diagnoses is held. The number of potential recipients of IIDB is not known.

Maxwell Pensions

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the latest position over what moneys have been paid out to former employees, now retired, of Maxwell companies; and what further sums are to be paid out.

Miss. Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 26 October, at column 492. Further grants totalling £393,000 are being made from the £2·5 million emergency funding to assist with payment of November pensions. In addition, state additional pensions are being paid and will continue to be paid to members of Maxwell pension schemes who have been brought back into the state earnings-related pension scheme. The Maxwell Pensioners Trust, which is chaired by Sir John Cuckney, has so far made payments of some £17,000 to 47 ex-employees of Maxwell companies who are not members of Maxwell-linked pension schemes. The trustees are considering how best to provide this particularly vulnerable group with long-term financial security.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment

13. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to meet the chairman of the Fair Employment Commission to discuss progress on fair employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: As the responsible Minister, I meet the chairman of the Fair Employment Commission every six months to review the implementation of fair employment legislation and the work of the Commission. I last met the chairman on 22 June 1992; the date of the next meeting has not yet been fixed.

Education Costs

14. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated cost per capita for education of a child in (a) secondary and (b) primary schools in the Province; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: In the 1990-91 financial year £1,179 was the cost of a primary school child and £1,852 for a secondary school child.

Constitutional Talks

15. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had regarding new political initiatives from Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

19. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current talks.

20. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current circumstances surrounding the all-party talks on Northern Ireland.

27. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in resolving the United Kingdom dimension of the constitutional problems of Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) and for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick).

Small Firms

16. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has further to boost the small firms sector.

Mr. Atkins: LEDU, the small business agency, is currenty implementing its strategy for the period up to 1994 and has introduced recently a number of new programmes which are aimed at improving competitiveness and growth in the small firms sector. In December it will launch a further major initiative in the business growth and development programme.

Special Needs Education

17. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils in Northern Ireland schools have been statemented.

Mr. Hanley: At January 1992, 6,365 children were receiving special educational provision in Northern Ireland. Normally I would expect such children to have statements of special education needs. However, a recent report in Great Britain claimed that numbers of children attending special schools in some local education authorities did not have statements. I have therefore asked the five education and library boards for detailed information on the position in Northern Ireland and I will write to the hon. Member when this information has been received.

Cross-border Security

18. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cross-border security.

Mr. Mates: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend).

Job Creation

21. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new jobs need to be created in 1992-93 in Northern Ireland to provide jobs for school leavers in 1993.

Mr. Atkins: About 9,000 school leavers are expected to enter the labour market in 1993. Some of these will take newly created jobs and some will find jobs vacated by others, for example people retiring, changing employment, or moving from Northern Ireland. Those 16 and 17-year-olds who do not find a job immediately are guaranteed a place on the youth training programme.

Abortion

22. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received about abortion in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: In the past six months 30 representations have been received from individuals and bodies, of which four were in favour of the extension of the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland and 26 were opposed to any reform of the existing laws on abortion in the Province.

Drugs Prevention Week

23. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what initiatives he plans for the Province in support of European Drugs Prevention Week between 16 and 22 November.

Mr. Hanley: The range of initiatives planned for Northern Ireland in support of European Drugs Prevention Week include an open forum on solvent misuse to be held on 16 November followed by a conference entitled Young People and Drugs on 17 and 18 November. The opportunity will also be taken during the week to publish a booklet for parents on solvent misuse, to issue fresh guidance to doctors on the clinical management of drug misuse and to announce the findings of a youth health survey on the attitudes amongst young people to drugs.

Belfast Airport

24. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on future plans for Belfast international airport.

Mr. Atkins: On 20 November 1991, my predecessor announced the Government's plans to sell the publicly-owned company which operates Belfast international airport. Legislation is being prepared to give effect to the privatisation and a draft order will be published in May 1993. The timetable envisages the order being made in the spring of 1994 with the sale of the company taking place during the summer of that year.

Security

25. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Since my predecessor answered a similar question on 26 February 1992 there have been 36 deaths as a result of the security situation in Northern Ireland, including 30 civilians, four soldiers, and two RUC officers.

I am sure the whole House will join me in condemning the continuing terrorist crimes. The Government will continue to give their full support to the police and armed forces in upholding the rule of law, striving to protect the community from terrorism, and bringing those who commit terrorist crimes to justice. Up to the end of September this year some 310 people have been charged with terrorist related offences, including 83 with murder or attempted murder.

Tourism

26. Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what growth in the level of tourism he projects for 1992-93.

Mr. Atkins: Firm estimates for 1992 are not yet available but the Northern Ireland tourist board estimates, at this stage, an increase for 1992 of 3 per cent. in total visitors above the record 1991 level of 1·186 million.

Transport Links

28. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the EC Commission on surface transport links between Northern Ireland and Scotland.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Security

29. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost of security operations to counter terrorism in Northern Ireland during the current financial year.

Mr. Mates: The cost of security operations to counter terrorism in Northern Ireland could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Undergraduates

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new undergraduates have been enrolled at (a) the Queen's university of Belfast and (b) the university of Ulster for the academic year 1992-93; how many of these at each of the two universities come from (1) Northern Ireland, (2) Great Britain, (3) Republic of Ireland and (4) other European countries.

Mr. Hanley: Final undergraduate enrolment figures are not yet available for 1992-93. However, it is estimated that:

(a) 2,670 new full-time and 240 new part-time undergraduates have enrolled at Queen's university, Belfast and

(b) 4,092 new full-time and 1,085 new part-time undergraduates have enrolled at the university of Ulster.

The country of domicile for new full-time and part-time undergraduates at each of the universities is estimated as follows:

Country of domicile	Full-time undergraduates New entrants	Part-time undergraduates New entrants
(a) Queen's University Belfast
(1) Northern Ireland	2,343	229
(2) Great Britain	76	1
(3) Republic of Ireland	170	2
(4) Other European countries	15	8
(b) University of Ulster
(1) Northern Ireland	3,215	1,024
(2) Great Britain	126	0
(3) Republic of Ireland	508	61
(4) Other European countries	212	0

Terrorism

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has investigated recent allegations of army involvement with terrorists in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: The inquiry conducted by Mr. John Stevens into allegations of collusion between loyalist paramilitaries and members of the security forces concluded that, while such collusion had occurred, it was neither widespread nor institutionalised. The Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland asked for a report from the Chief Constable of the RUC following the "Panorama" programme on 8 June, and that this is awaited.

Belfast Institute

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many administrative staff were employed in the former Belfast colleges; how many are employed in the new merged institute; and, of these three how many are former teaching staff who were channelled into administrative duties.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 27 October 1992]: The number of administrative staff in the former Belfast colleges was 130. The number in the new institute is 128. No former teachers have been channelled into administration posts in the institute.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the (a) time allowance and (b) travelling expenses of staff travelling between the different sites of the Belfast Institute.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 27 October 1992]: This information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the principal differences between the duties informed by the three vice-principals of the former separate colleges and the duties carried out by the deputy directors of the Belfast Institute.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 27 October 1992]: The senior management structure of the new institute is very different to that at each of the three former colleges. Deputy directors have wider ranging responsibilities, encompassing the duties of the five former vice-principals as well as other duties associated with such a large organisation. The three deputy director posts cover, respectively, corporate services, learning programmes and cross-curricular support.

Computer Projects

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table setting out for the period since 9 April (a) each tender issued by his Department for projects requiring the supply of (i) computer hardware and (ii) computer software, (b) a description of the services required, (c) the number of companies who were invited to tender, (d) the number of companies who submitted a bid without prior invitation by his Department, (e) which company was awarded the contract, (f) the value of each contract and (g) the length of period over which the contract will run.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 27 October 1992]: The business development science (BDS) of the Department of Finance and Personnel, acting as agent for the Northern Ireland Government Departments, purchased the bulk of the information technology equipment acquired by those Departments during the period in question. Details of these projects are given in table 1. In addition some Departments purchased equipment either directly or via the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency in Norwich. Details of these projects are given in table 2. A number of low value items have been excluded since they could be produced in the requested format only at disproportionate cost.

No companies were permitted to submit bids without prior invitation.

All hardware contracts awarded contained a 12 month on-site warranty provision and consequently no service contracts were entered into.

SCOTLAND

Solvent Abuse

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) males and (b) females have been referred to the reporter to the children's panel in each local authority in Scotland under the Solvent Abuse (Scotland) Act 1983 in each year since the Act came into effect.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The table details the number of solvent abuse referrals to reporters by local authority area.

A breakdown by sex is only available for the years 1988 to 1991. The number of children referred is unavailable and the referrals may include some children referred more than once in the year.

Tertiary Education

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are to extend the principles of the citizens charter to cover tertiary education.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Market research has been commissioned to sample the views of students, potential students and people in the wider community in respect of further and higher education in Scotland. The results will inform our ideas on the contents of a charter covering further and higher education.

Post-graduate Awards

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many post-graduate students received an award from the Scottish Education Department for study outwith Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Session 1992-93 to date, the Scottish Office Education Department has offered 324 awards under the postgraduate students' allowances scheme and 67 awards under the Scottish studentship scheme to students studying outwith Scotland.

Scottish Universities

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scots are attending Scottish universities; how many students attending Scottish universities are from other parts of the United Kingdom; and if he will list the regions that all students attending Scottish universities are from.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested on students attending the eight traditional Scottish universities in the academic year 1991-92 is given in the table.

Woodlands

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total woodland area planted in Great Britain in 1991; and what were the comparable figures for the previous 20 years.

Sir Hector Monro: The total area of woodland planted or grant-aided by the Forestry Commission in the year to 31 March 1992, including woodland replanted after felling, was 33,237 hectares. Of this, 11,259 hectares were planted by the Commission and 21,978 by the private sector. This total is close to the average of the previous 20 years, as shown in the table.

Arts and Crafts

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to provide further assistance to graduate artist craftsmen and women in Scotland;

(2) what policy the Government have for the promotion of the applied arts in Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will consider making funds available to organisations which could provide advice for young graduate artist craftsmen and women in Scotland;

(4) if he will list schemes available to assist graduate artist craftsmen and women in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 October 1992]: Through Highlands and Islands Enterprise and Scottish Enterprise we have established Made in Scotland Ltd. which provides marketing support for the crafts sector. In addition, graduate artist craftsmen and women may qualify for any of the business support, training or employment measures available through the enterprise bodies. Details and advice on these can be obtained from local enterprise companies.

These arrangements are kept under review, but we have no plans to extend support in this area meantime.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the capital benefit allocation by the Government for water and sewerage services to each of the regional and island councils in every year since 1979, in cash and in constant 1991-92 prices.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 21 October 1992]: Water and sewerage services form the major part of authorities' water and sewerage programmes which also include flood prevention and coast protection. Allocations to regional and islands councils for their capital programmes in cash and adjusted to constant 1991-92 prices are given in the tables.

White Fish

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will state the quantities of white fish withdrawn from the market under intervention, subsequent to the letter from Lord Strathclyde to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North on 27 January, which have gone for human consumption (a) abroad and (b) via charities;

(2) if he will state the quantities of white fish withdrawn from the market under intervention, in each of the past 12 months and at what cost;

(3) if he will state the quantities of white fish withdrawn from the market under intervention in each of the past 12 months, by port of landing.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 October 1992]: Since 27 January, none of the whitefish withdrawn from the market under intervention has gone for human consumption either abroad or to charities. Full settlement to the producers organisations of compensation payable for fish withdrawn from the market under the European Community's price support system takes place after the fishing year in question, though advance payments are made. Information on the quantities of whitefish withdrawn from the market in Scotland under intervention in each of the 12 months to end July 1992, being the most recent 12-month period for which information is available, on the ports of landing and on the intervention sums paid, is set out in the tables.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps her Department is currently making to publicise the wages councils system.

Mr. McLoughlin: Every employer identified as being covered by a wages council is sent notices of wages council minimum rates, which must by law be posted where employees can see them. The Department also publishes a booklet "Wages Councils and Statutory Pay Rates", which explains workers' rights to statutory minimum pay.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the number of new jobs that will be created following abolition of wages councils; and if she will publish the evidence on which this estimate is based.

Mr. McLoughlin: There is a good deal of evidence about the link between pay and jobs at national level both in the United Kingdom and in other countries. This link has also been detected in several studies specifically about the wages council industries. We do not have the information to quantify the number of jobs that are inhibited by statutory minimum rates; and attempts to do so are not likely to be successful.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current adult male unemployment rate for each of (a) Arsenal, (b) Glyndon, (c) Burrage, (d) St. Mary's and (e) Nightingale wards in Woolwich; how many of these feature in the worst 10 wards in Greater London; and what specific action she has taken or proposes to take to reduce these figures.

Mr. McLoughlin: The smallest areas for which unemployment rates are available are self-contained labour markets known as travel-to-work areas, two of which cover the whole of Greater London.

The Department operates a wide range of measures, including employment and training programmes, which are available throughout Greater London as elsewhere. These include:

Nearly 1 million places will be available on our employment and training programmes in 1992-93, an increase of 100,000 on this year. This is in addition to the usual advice and assistance to which all unemployed people are entitled.

Job Search Seminars, directed at executives and managers, give advice on the best way to search out and apply for jobs are available throughout London.

Specialist Restart courses to help people with literacy, numeracy and language difficulties, ex-offenders, the homeless and people with drug or alcohol problems.

From April to September 1992, 307,568 people were interviewed through Restart and other adviser interviews in Greater London and 47,184 people had positive outcomes.

One hundred and eighty-eight Jobclubs in Greater London offering advice and practical help to people to search for and apply for jobs. From April to September 1992, 19,610 people joined Jobclubs and 10,345 had positive outcomes.

Job Interview Guarantee (JIG) Teams working to equip long-term unemployed people with the confidence and knowledge to succeed at a guaranteed interview. From April to September 1992, 18,441 people have been helped in Greater London by the JIG teams.

Job Preparation Courses which are similar to Restart courses but with employer participation are held throughout the area. Companies taking part include London Buses, British Rail and the Ambulance Service.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which ward has the highest rate of adult male unemployment in Greater London.

Mr. McLoughlin: The smallest areas for which unemployment rates are available are self-contained labour markets known as travel-to-work areas, two of which cover the whole of Greater London.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will show for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, for the latest available period, separately for male and female, for each ethnic group, and for those with a disability or health problem, the number and proportion of employment training trainees who three months after leaving were (a) in a full-time job with their work experience employer, (b) in a full-time job with another employer, (c) employed in their own business, (d) in a part-time job, (e) in voluntary work, (f) on another Government training programme, (g) on a full-time education or training course, (h) unemployed and claiming benefit, (i) unemployed and not claiming benefit, (j) in a job club and (k) doing something else;

(2) if she will show for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, separately for male and female, for the latest available period, the wages earned by employment training trainees who three months after leaving were (a) in a full-time job, (b) in a part-time job and (c) self-employed;

(3) for each region, and for Great Britain as a whole, and for each quarter since 1989, how many employment training trainees had employment status;

(4) for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, separately for male and female, if she will give the best information she has showing how many people have entered employment action and how many were participating in employment action in each month since January; if she will give as much detailed information she has about the destination of those participants who have left employment action; and if she will make a statement;

(5) how many training credits have been issued in the pilot areas to young people; how many young people have taken them up; what other information she has on the take up of credits in those areas; and if she will make a statement;

(6) if she will publish tables showing the latest available results from the employment training leavers survey for each training and enterprise council area in England and Wales and each local enterprise company area in Scotland broken down to show the number and proportion of employment training leavers who were (a) in a full-time job with their work experience employer, (b) in a full-time job with another employer, (c) employed in their own business, (d) in a part-time job, (e) in voluntary work, (f) on another Government training programme, (g) on a full-time education or training course, (h) unemployed and claiming benefit, (i) unemployed and not claiming benefit, (j) in a job club and (k) doing something else;

(7) if she will give the best information she has about the number of people who were participating in (a) employment training (b) the enterprise allowance scheme and (c) youth training in each month since January; and if she will make a statement;

(8) for each region, and for Great Britain as a whole, if she will give the latest results of the youth training scheme/youth training leavers survey, to show for male and female trainees and for each separate ethnic group and for those with a disability those in full-time work with the same employer, those in full-time work with a different employer, those in part-time work, those on a full-time course at a college/training centre, those on another youth training scheme, those doing something else, those who were unemployed, those who had obtained a vocational qualification, the number of questionnaires issued, the usable percentage response rate and the percentage of respondents who were early leavers;

(9) if she will publish tables showing the latest available results from the employment training leavers survey for each training and enterprise council area in England and Wales and each local enterprise company area in Scotland broken down to show the number and proportion of employment training leavers who had (a) been entered for a vocational qualification, (b) obtained a vocational qualification, (c) had failed to obtain a vocational qualification and (d) were awaiting their results; and how many of the employment training leavers in the relevant period had completed the training agreed in their initial action plan;

(10) for Great Britain and for each region, by male and female, at the most recent date, and at one year previously, how many youth training trainees had contracts of employment;

(11) if she will show for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, for the latest available period, separately for male and female, for each ethnic group, and for those with a disability or health problem, the number and proportion of employment training leavers who had (a) been entered for a vocational qualification, (b) obtained a vocational qualification, (c) had failed to obtain a vocational qualification and (d) were awaiting their results; and how many of the employment training leavers in the relevant period had completed the training agreed in their initial action plan;

(12) if she will give for each region, and for Great Britain as a whole, the latest available information she has on the characteristics of those who have entered employment training showing (a) the number of entrants covered, (b) whether male of female, (c) the duration of unemployment, (d) ethnic origin and (e) whether they have a disability;

(13) for each region, and for Great Britain as a whole, and for each year since 1989, what has been the average length of participation that trainees have spent on employment training;

(14) if she will publish tables showing the latest available results from the youth training leavers survey for each training enterprise council area in England and Wales and each local enterprise company area in Scotland broken down to show the number and proportion of youth training leavers who were (a) in full-time work with the same employer, (b) in full work with a different employer, (c) in part-time work, (d) on a full-time course at a college or training centre, (e) on another youth training scheme, (f) doing something else, (g) who were unemployed, (h) who had obtained a vocational qualification, (i) the number of questionnaires issued, (j) the usable percentage response rate and (k) the percentage of respondents who were early leavers.

Mr. McLoughlin: As the information is contained in a considerable number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member.

Enterprise Allowance

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give for each region and for Great Britain as a whole for each year since April 1990 (a) the number of people who were receiving the enterprise allowance scheme and (b) the amount of expenditure on the enterprise allowance scheme; what is the latest information she has on the survival of those businesses; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information, by region and for Great Britain, on the numbers of people receiving the enterprise allowance at the end of the 1990-91 and 1991-92 financial years and the 1992-93 year to date is shown on table 1. Enterprise allowance scheme expenditure for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date is shown on table 2.

There is no information on the survival of the businesses supported in this period.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were receiving the enterprise allowance scheme in each London training and enterprise council in each quarter since they became operational; what was the expenditure on the enterprise allowance scheme in the areas covered by each London training and enterprise council in 1991-92 and the budgets agreed for enterprise allowance scheme with each London training and enterprise council in 1992-93; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The statistical and financial information requested is given in the table.

Two sets of figures are given for the operating year 1991-92. One reflects total expenditure on business start-ups for the year. It includes expenditure by the Training Agency area offices, which ran the enterprise allowance scheme prior to the London training and enterprise councils commencing operation. The second shows expenditure by the training and enterprise councils alone, of whom all except one became operational during that year.

The London training and enterprise councils have built on the success of the national enterprise allowance scheme and increasingly tailored their provision in response to local need. Research has consistently shown that those small businesses with access to appropriate advice and training are more likely to remain in business beyond their first year of operation. The London training and enterprise councils therefore, in common with training and enterprise councils in other parts of the country, have developed their own integrated packages which include training and business counselling.

Employment Service Courses

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether unemployed claimants offered a place at a Restart or other counselling interview have to participate in employment training or employment action, or any of the other programmes provided through the Employment Service, apart from Restart courses, after two years unemployment; if they take up a place on any of these programmes whether they can leave at any time without incurring a benefit penalty; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Ms. Clare Short, dated 29 October 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer parliamentary questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Employment about participation in Employment Department, Employment Training programmes by people who have been unemployed for two years or more.

It may help if I explain that the purpose of Employment Service advisory interviews is for clients to discuss their individual situation and circumstances with one of our client advisers. The aim is to reach an agreement on an appropriate course of action which, if followed, will offer the best chances of finding work. There is no compulsion on people to attend any of the employment and training programmes, including ET/EA, which the adviser may offer.

The only exception to this is the requirement for people who have been unemployed for two years or more to attend a Restart Course if they refuse all other offers of help.

Our advisers would not encourage clients to attend programmes which are not suitable for their individual needs. Indeed, the basis of our advisory interviews is that the client and their adviser should reach an agreement on a suitable course of action for returning to work. However, all unemployed people must show that they are capable of, available for and actively seeking work. Attendance at an employment or training programme is one way in which our clients can show that they are meeting these conditions.

There is also no benefit penalty if someone who has accepted a place on a programme decides to leave it. However, everyone who agrees to attend an employment or training programme and fails to start, or starts on a programme and fails to complete it, is asked to attend a follow up interview with a Client Adviser.

This is to check that the client is continuing to meet the conditions for receipt of benefit and to discuss the reasons for their non-attendance on, or failure to complete the programme.

The adviser will then agree with the client a further, suitable course of action which, if followed, will offer them the best chances of finding work.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Youth Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish for Great Britain and for each standard region the monthly reports of supply and demand for youth training places which have been sent to her since July 1992; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by region, and for Great Britain as a whole, and shown separately for male and female, how many 16 and 17-year-olds were in receipt of extended child benefit and how many were in receipt of bridging allowance for each month since June 1992; how many young people in each region and in Great Britain exhausted their entitlement to youth training bridging allowance; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Ms. Clare Short, dated 29 October 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer Parliamentary Questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Employment about how many 16 and 17-year-olds in Great Britain as a whole and by region, and shown separately for males and females, were in receipt of extended child benefit, how many were in receipt of bridging allowance, for each month since June 1992 and how many in each region and in Great Britain exhausted their entitlement to bridging allowance.

The information you have requested is provided in the attached tables. The period of extended child benefit for 1992 summer school leavers begins in September, which explains the rise in numbers between August and September. Unfortunately, a breakdown of the figures by sex and region is not available.

Terminations of bridging allowance may occur for a number of reasons, for example, a young person may no longer qualify for bridging allowance if they find a Youth Training place or a job; their eight week entitlement is exhausted; or if they are sick.

The figures that are collected each month show only the total number of terminations of bridging allowance in that period. There is no further breakdown of the figures to give particular reasons as to why the claims to bridging allowance have ceased.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of accidents in the youth training scheme, including fatal, major and minor, for the latest available three-month period; and how many YTS placements were closed or not accepted in that period and in the three preceding months.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following table gives the YT accident figures.

Quarter	Fatal	Major	Minor
April-June 1992	1	66	395

Notes:

(a) Employment Department figures for trainees have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive for employed persons. However, the Employment Department's figures include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments, and road traffic accidents, which would not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individuals been employed.

(b) Major injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrence Regulations 1985. These regulations, which came into force on 1 April 1986, reclassified fractured wrists and ankles as major injuries. These were not classed as major injuries in the previous regulations, the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 (NADOR).

Separate figures for closures and rejections of YT placements are no longer kept centrally.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for Great Britain, for each region and for each training and enterprise council or local enterprise company, what is her best estimate of the number of employment training trainees who (a) are lone parents and (b) have entered the scheme under the lone parent eligibility route; how many are receiving child care allowances; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not held centrally. TECs and LECs are required to deliver programmes that meet the needs of all their client groups. It is for the TECs and LECs to determine which trainee groups, such as lone parents, they support with the costs of childcare.

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, how many people have attended a Restart interview since 1 April 1991; and what were the results of those interviews broken down between those who (a) started work, (b) began training under employment training, (c) started a job club, (d) started a Restart course and (e) attended an enterprise allowance awareness day.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Ms. Clare Short, dated 29 October 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer Parliamentary Questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Employment about how many people have attended a Restart Interview since 1 April 1991; and what were the results of those interviews.

The information you asked for is given in the attached annex. As you will appreciate, these figures reflect only the direct results of Restart. We do not know how many people subsequently take up a job or a place on an employment or training programme as a result of the guidance given to them at their interview. It is through these indirect results of the help which advisers give clients in reviewing their options for returning to work that Restart has its effect.

An indication of the scale of that effect is provided by the report "The Restart Effect" which was recently published by the independent Policy Studies Institute. It is based on an analysis of the largest survey of unemployed people in the UK since 1980. This showed conclusively that the programme had a major effect in reducing the time it takes people to leave unemployment, to get a job and to enter Employment Training, particularly for those people who were at a disadvantage within the labour market.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each region and for Great Britain as a whole how many unemployed people have been referred to Restart courses by employment service counsellors since January 1991; how many of them were unemployed for over two years; how many attended and completed the course; what were the outcomes of the participants; how many had benefit penalties imposed for not attending or failing to complete their attendance at the Restart course; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Ms. Clare Short, dated 29 October 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer Parliamentary Questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Employment about Restart Courses.

As you will know from previous correspondence with Mike Fogden, Restart Courses are short courses aimed at helping people who are having the most difficulty returning to work. They are not an alternative to regular job search or other employment or training programmes. Essentially they provide people with the opportunity to explore all the options open to them and give them confidence to take the next step back to work.

Since December 1990 people who have been unemployed for 2 years or more who at their Restart interview refuse or fail to take up a place on an Employment Department employment or training programme are asked to attend a Restart Course.

As your question has raised a number of specific points, I am setting out the information you have asked for in the two tables attached—one deals with all Restart Course attenders, the other just those covered by the requirement to attend. As explained in the previous answer, we collect at a Regional level the number of people who are referred to the course who are also unemployed for 2 years or more. We have however not felt it necessary to keep similar figures for all those referred. The Benefits Agency make the decision on whether an individual's benefit should be reduced for failure to attend or complete the course. Their figures are compiled by their Districts which have different boundaries from those of our Regions. To avoid confusion, I have given the national figure only.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Travel-to-interview Scheme

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if expenses for second interviews are paid under the travel-to-interview scheme;

(2) how many people have claimed help under the travel-to-interview scheme since its inception; what is the cost of the scheme; what proportion of job applicants receive help; what proportion of claims are refused; and what proportion of claims are withdrawn;

(3) if she will amend regulations to permit backdated claims for interview expenses under the travel-to-interview scheme, where claimants are unable to notify the job centre in advance.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Mr. John Battle, dated 28 October 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer Parliamentary Questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your questions about the Travel to Interview Scheme (TIS).

It may help if I explain the background to the scheme. It was introduced in 1986 to help with travel costs for unemployed people to attend job interviews beyond daily travelling distance of their home area, thus widening the applicants' jobsearch, improving their chances of obtaining work and encouraging labour mobility. During 1991-92 the scheme helped 31,000 people at a cost of £933,000. A few basic conditions must be met before assistance can be granted, to ensure that the limited funds available are concentrated on those unemployed people to most need.

You have asked if TIS helps with assistance for second interviews. Whilst we realise it would be popular with jobseekers if help was available through TIS to cover the cost of repeat interviews, it could in practice be very costly. It could, for example, lead to the available funds having to be concentrated on a smaller number of people. We therefore limit the assistance to one interview per job. Where a selection process is a lengthy one we have to rely on the employer being sensitive to the costs likely to fall on the applicant and offer help towards them.

You also ask for the regulations to be amended to allow backdated claims. We normally expect applications for help to be made in advance as we wish to target the limited assistance available on those people who needed this incentive to apply for jobs they would not otherwise consider. However we recognise that on occasions there is insufficient time between arranging and attending an interview and in such cases we would always consider an application if it were made as soon as possible after the interview.

The scheme is currently under review and many of the eligibility conditions are being looked at to see if within the limited resources there are ways of helping more people.

Unfortunately we do not keep records of the number of applications withdrawn. However the attached chart provides the rest of the information you asked for.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administrative Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average response time for ambulances responding to emergency calls in the Greater London area; what assessment she has made of whether ambulances are reaching emergency cases quickly enough; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The table details the latest figures held centrally on the performance of the accident and emergency service provided by the London ambulance service.

Patient Transport Services 1990-91
Quality of service for London Ambulance Service
Response Times

	Number
Total number of emergency calls	456,695
Number where response within 7 minutes	50,390
Percentage of calls where response within 7 minutes	11·0
Number where response within 14 minutes	336,734
Percentage of calls where response within 14 minutes	73·7

Source: KA34 DH Statistics Division 2B 1992

The response time of an ambulance is the time taken from an emergency call being received to the arrival of a fully equipped vehicle at the patient's location.

As these figures illustrate, a significant proportion of accident and emergency ambulances from the London ambulance service are failing to meet the performance standards set out in the patients charter. I have discussed with the London ambulance service its plans for raising its performance including the full implementation of the computer aided dispatch system and new staff rosters and I, together with South West Thames regional health authority, which is responsible for the service, will monitor progress over the coming months.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to improve the performance of the London ambulance service; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A number of measures have been taken and others are planned to improve the performance of the London ambulance service.

These include:

an external inquiry, led by a chief ambulance officer from another metropolitan region into the operation of the Computer Aided Dispatch system;

a support system involving, where necessary, direct voice contact between the control centre and ambulances, building extra safeguards to ensure that ambulances are on their way;

a change in the management structure of the service to ensure that Ministers are kept in proper and regular touch with progress;

increases in the staffing levels in the London ambulance service control room;

an increase of 9 per cent. over 1991-92 in the funding of the London ambulance service in 1992-93 to nearly £70 million.

Epidemiological Research

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money, expressed as an overall figure and as a percentage of health care expenditure, is currently spent on epidemiological research in Britain.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available in the form requested.

Cancer

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the incidence of newly diagnosed cases of (a) cervical and (b) breast cancer per 100,000 population for the age ranges 20 to 29, 30 to 39, 40 to 49, 50 to 59, 60 to 69 and 70-plus years for the Northern regional health authority area, the Oxford regional health authority area, and the United Kingdom area as a whole, for each year since 1983.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table; 1987 is the latest year for which the information is available.

Radon Gas

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients resident in each regional health authority have (a) been treated for, or (b) died as a result of, radon gas exposure in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not available. The effect of exposure to radon gas can be the later development of lung cancer, but there is no way to detect the difference between lung cancers caused by smoking, by radon exposure, or by other factors. On the basis of research studies, the National Radiological Protection Board estimates that exposure to radon in the home may be responsible for about 2,000 premature lung cancer deaths a year in the United Kingdom, but no regional breakdown of this overall estimate is available.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish figures for each six months since June 1987 for inner London of (a) the numbers of people on waiting lists for in-patient hospital treatment, (b) the numbers of people on those waiting lists admitted to hospital for treatment and (c) the numbers of people removed from those waiting lists for other reasons.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the numbers of people waiting by district health authority is given in the publication "Hospital Waiting List, in-patients and Day Cases" published every six months, copies of which are available in the Library. Information on admissions and removals from waiting lists for all district health authorities is not routinely collated centrally. For the relevant information at national level, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 22 October at columns 369–70.

Medical Confidentiality

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will introduce regulations or produce guidelines on medical confidentiality covering the subject matter of the draft National Health Service Functions (Preservation of Confidentiality) Regulations which were withdrawn in 1987; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is preparing draft guidance on the confidentiality, use and disclosure of personal health information which will be issued for consultation shortly.

Doncaster Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to increase the annual salaries and allowances of the chairman and each member of Doncaster health authority; by what percentage; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: A decision will be made in due course about the allowances and expenses paid to chairmen and non-executives.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all financial allocations made by (a) Her Majesty's Government and (b) regional health authorities directly to trusts and the reasons for them; why it was decided not to make them to district health authorities instead; what steps she has taken to ensure that these allocations directly to trusts do not contradict the purchaser-provider market; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: No allocations are made to trusts by either this Department or by regional health authorities. Allocations are made solely to health authorities. Both this Department and regional health authorities do, however, contract directly with trusts where the services concerned are most appropriately purchased at a national or regional level. Central and regional contracts with trusts are entirely consistent with the separate roles of purchaser and provider.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the reasons for her decision that there will be no increase for inflation for voluntary organisations seeking renewal of their grant; whether this is an immutable ruling; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

As part of our review of funding to voluntary organisations under the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 we have been looking at what steps we might take to ensure that the section 64 general scheme budget can be used to benefit a wider range of organisations than has previously been possible. Core funding towards headquarters and administrative expenses currently accounts for approximately 80 per cent. of the expenditure, much of which has been provided on a long-term basis.

We have decided that in future all core grants will be brought into line with those awarded after April 1990 and will not normally be renewed for more than a maximum of five years. Existing arrangements provide that core grants may be renewed in certain circumstances and our annual guidance in August restated previous policy that any renewal awards would not normally include an increase for inflation. In considering any renewal application we will take into account all relevant factors, but the presumption will be that there will not be an automatic increase for inflation. This will enable us to make available a larger proportion of funding for new applicants for core or project grants and to give more to those organisations less able to raise funds from other sources.

Health Service, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of beds in Doncaster hospitals, by category, (a) in 1990-91 and (b) at present.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given in the table. The information for 1990-91 refers to Doncaster Health Authority. The provisional figures for 1991-92 are an aggregation of one directly managed unit and one trust.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the number of out-patients treated at Doncaster hospitals by category, for the latest date for which she has figures available; and what was the figure (a) six months and (b) 12 months ago.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested for 1990-91, the latest available centrally, and for 1989-90, is contained in the Department of Health annual publication, "Outpatients and Ward Attenders". Copies are in the Library.

Abortion

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance is issued by her Department to doctors about the techniques which should be adopted in performing those late abortions which are now available until full term; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what guidance her Department has issued to doctors about the use of potassium chloride injections to perform late abortions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Decisions as to the method by which an abortion is carried out are a matter for the clinical judgment of the operating doctor, taking into account the circumstances of the particular case.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has concerning the methods currently adopted in performing those late abortions which take place beyond 24 weeks; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The notification form which has to be sent to the chief medical officer in respect of each legal abortion requires the practitioner terminating the pregnancy to give details of the method used.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to ensure that RU486 is available only under the provisions of the Abortion Act 1967.

Mr. Sackville: Use of RU486 to terminate a pregnancy outside the terms of the Abortion Act 1967, as amended, would be an offence.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the RU486 pill will be available for general practitioners to prescribe; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will use the discretionary powers in section 37(3) of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 to license additional premises, such as community family planning clinics near hospitals, for prescription of mifepristone; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have no current plans to extend use of this abortifacient drug to places other than national health service hospitals or private sector clinics approved under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967, as amended.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by (a) regional health authority and (b) district health authority the current average budget of general practitioner fund holders.

Mr. Sackville: The current average budget for general practitioner fundholders by regional health authority is in the table. The information by district health authority is not held centrally.

Regional average budget set for first and second wave fundholders combined in 1992-93

Region	Average budget set in £ million
Northern	1·7
Yorkshire	1·7
Trent	1·4
East Anglian	1·7
North West Thames	1·4
North East Thames	1·3
South East Thames	1·3
South West Thames	1·3
Wessex	1·5
Oxford	1·4
South Western	1·4
West Midlands	1·4
Mersey	1·3
North Western	1·4

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner fund-holding practices in each region in England are projecting overspends in the current financial year; how many were allocated additional resources in the first half of the year; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Children's Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce urgently legislation for a comprehensive system of registration and inspection of all children's homes.

Mr. Yeo: Under the Children Act 1989 and the Children's Homes Regulations 1991 private children's homes are subject to registration and inspection by local authorities. Voluntary children's homes are required by the Act to register with the Secretary of State for Health and are inspected by the Social Services Inspectorate. Additionally, guidance issued to local authorities advises that local authority "arm's-length" inspection units should inspect local authorities' own children's homes. Further guidance on inspection of children's homes by local authority independent inspection units is due to be issued shortly.

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the names of public appointments that she has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees, and what remuneration each currently receives.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information about public appointments made by the Secretary of State for Health and the remuneration each currently receives is available from the Cabinet Office publications "Public Bodies" and "Public Appointments: a Handbook for Women's Organisations". Copies are available in the Library. Details of the individuals who hold those appointments could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Chris Chapman

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the impact of her new whistleblowers charter on the case of Dr. Chris Chapman; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Dr Chapman has recently taken his case to an industrial tribunal; it would therefore not be appropriate for me to comment on his case at this stage.

Health Pay Review Boards

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has any plans to suspend the health pay review boards; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Operations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of operations in each health authority in England were cancelled; what proportion of operations were cancelled on more than one occasion; and what proportion of operations were cancelled on the day of admissions in 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally.

Patients Charter

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what number and percentage of patients were assessed immediately in accident and emergency departments in each district health authority area in England under the terms of the patients charter, for the first quarter of 1992-93; and if she will make a statement;

(2) Which targets specified in the patients charter can now be measured by health authorities; and what responses have been received to the monitoring of the charter in the first quarter of 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities will be expected to monitor all aspects of their providers' performance against the rights and standards set out in the patients charter and reflected in contracts. The National Health Service management executive has recently issued guidance on monitoring the charter.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how information collected on the monitoring of the patients charter will differentiate between the performance of trust and non-trust units.

Mr. Sackville: All providers—whether trusts or non-trusts—will be required to supply information on performance against patients charter rights and standards to their purchasers.

Diabetes

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost of (a) a visit by a health visitor to administer insulin to a diabetic and (b) self-administration using a Novopen, including the cost of the Novo needle.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on the cost of a visit by a health visitor is not held centrally. The element of the cost of self-administration attributable to a Novopen and needle is commercial-in-confidence. However, many diabetics use disposable syringes to inject themselves with insulin and these are already prescribable. The use of injection pens and needles entails a real additional cost to the taxpayer. This factor has to be taken into account when considering whether to authorise their prescribing by GPs.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will make it her policy that Novo needles shall be available on prescription for people who suffer from diabetes and require insulin treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are continuing to consider the case for authorising general practitioners to prescribe both insulin injection pens and needles but, in reaching a final decision, we shall need to take into account current public expenditure constraints.

Waiting Times

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the average and (b) the maximum waiting time between a patient's initial referral and the first appointment with a consultant in each health authority in England; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Figures for out-patient waiting times are not collected centrally, but all health authorities are required under the patients charter to publish information on the local standards they have set for waiting times for first out-patient appointments and on performance against these targets.

Emergency Ambulance Calls

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the change in the percentage of emergency ambulance calls being responded to in each district health authority area within the Orcon standard between the first quarter of 1991-92 and the first quarter of 1992-93; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what percentage of emergency ambulance calls were responded to in each district health authority area (a) within eight minutes, (b) within 14 minutes in urban areas and (c) within 19 minutes in rural areas during the first quarter of 1992-93;

(3) what percentage of urgent journeys by ambulance in each district health authority area in England reached the appropriate treatment centre within 15 minutes during the first quarter of 1992-93; and she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Information held by the Department relates to ambulance authorities which may cover more than one district health authority and is collected on a financial year basis and not a quarterly basis. Figures for 1991-92 are currently being assembled for publication and I will arrange for a copy of the summary tables to be sent to the hon. Member as soon as these are available.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities in each region in England have spent (a) up to or (b) over their budgets for extra-contractual referrals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the regional health authority chairmen for details.

Childline

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure the continued operation of the charity Childline.

Mr. Yeo: A Government grant of £100,000 has been given to Childline in each of the last five years, following an initial grant of £50,000 to help launch the organisation. Any further application for financial support will be considered on its merits.

Salford District Health Authority

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will respond to the request made to her by the Salford community health council and the Hope hospital, Salford, support group, for an independent inquiry into the funding and management of the Salford district health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: Responsibility for financial allocation to Salford district health authority is a matter for the North Western regional health authority. The requests received from the Salford community health council and the Hope hospital, Salford, support group were referred to the chief executive of the regional health authority on 27 October.

Council Tax

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the policy consideration underlying the charging of 50 per cent. council tax on the owners of residential care homes; and if he will reconsider this policy.

Mr. Redwood: Further to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Devon, North (Mr. Harvey) on 7 July, col. 157, we have received a number of representations from care homes about the council tax. We are presently discussing these representations with the joint care committee.

Letter from C. R. Flood to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

I am responding on behalf of the Chief Executive of the Met Office (who is abroad) to your Parliamentary Question.

"to ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible."

The answer is as follows:

The Met Office Executive Agency has published various documents including the 1991-92 Annual Review and the Annual Report and Accounts. The 5-year Corporate Plan is not published though the key targets were given in a reply to a Parliamentary Question from Mr. Mans (Hansard 11 June 1992. Written Answers, Column 282). Professor Hunt, the Chief Executive of the Met Office since January 1992, published many scientific papers during the last year, on subjects such as turbulence in fluids, the life and work of L. F. Richardson and wavelets, fractals and Fourier transforms.

Letter from J. A. R. Chisholm to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

In his written answer today the Minister of State for Defence Procurement said that each Agency Chief Executive would be replying directly to your question about papers they had published in the last 12 months.

In the last 12 months I have published:

a. DRA Annual Report & Accounts 1991-92—issued September 1992

b. DRA Rationalisation Strategy Consultative Document—issued September 1992

My key targets were published in a Parliamentary written answer on 2 July 1992.

Letter from Lieutenant Colonel G. H. Wilson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

I refer to your parliamentary question which asked the Secretary of State to list for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible.

The Duke of York's Royal Military School was established as an Executive Agency of the MOD on 1st April 1992. In addition to the Royal Warrant and Framework Document which established the school as an Agency, the Duke of York's has produced a Corporate Plan 1992-97 and a Management Plan for financial year 1992/93. These were published on 26 February 1992.

Letter from Julian D. Hankinson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

I have been asked to answer to you directly the following Parliamentary Question regarding Queen Victoria School.

Date of Order Paper: 22 October 1992

"17. Mr. Martin Redmond (Don Valley), To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the Chief Executive of each Executive Agency for which he is responsible".

Answer: This School has been an Executive Agency since April 1st, 1992, and is thus in its first year as an Agency. We are not yet in receipt of the Treasury Directive and to date this Agency has not published any papers or documents. Nevertheless, through the aegis of MOD (AG Secretariat), this Agency's/School's Royal Warrant and Framework Document have been published and are in the public domain.

I trust this answer supplies the information you require. Any further information can be supplied if you wish it.

Letter from Rear Admiral J. A. L. Myres to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

Hydrographic Office DSA—Parliamentary Question

You recently asked the Secretary of State to list, for the last 12 months, titles of papers published by the Chief Executive of each Executive Agency for which he is responsible. The Minister has asked me, as Chief Executive, to reply in respect of the Hydrographic Office Defence Support Agency.

The only paper published during the last 12 months relates to the agency's Key Targets for FY 1992-93 which were published in Hansard (columns 281-82) on 11 June 1992.

You may also wish to note that the Hydrographic Office Defence Support Agency Annual Report and Accounts for FY 1991-92 will be published shortly and copies will be placed in the libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

I hope this information is helpful.

Letter from I. S. Mitchelson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence in which you asked him to list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the Chief Executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible.

I list below all documents published by the Service Children's Schools (North West Europe) Defence Support Agency since its formation in April 1991:

General Documents

(a) Framework Document—April 1991

(b) First Corporate Plan 1991-94—August 1991

(c) Management Plan 1991-92—August 1991

(d) Annual Report and Accounts 1991-92—July 1992

(e) Corporate Plan 1992-96—August 1992

(f) Management Plan 1992-93—August 1992

Other Professional Documents

(a) "Schools for the Future—A Discussion Document" —October 1991

(b) Individual school (83 schools) brochures—Autumn Term 1991

(c) "Schools News" news letter—Issue One—February 1992

(d) "Schools News" news letter—Issue Two—June 1992

(e) Individual school (80 schools) brochures—Autumn Term 1992

The following documents are currently at the printers and will be published shortly:

(a) SCS (NWE) "Complaints Procedures" brochure

(b) SCS (NWE) Parents brochure—long version

(c) SCS (NWE) Parents brochure—short version

(d) "Schools for the Future—Development Plan"

I hope this information is of assistance but if I can be of further help, please do not hesitate to get in touch.

Parliamentary Question 7223F

You asked the Secretary of State for Defence to provide a list of the titles of papers published by MOD executive agencies during the last twelve months. As Chief Executive of DGDA I have been asked to reply for my Agency. In the last twelve months DGDA publications have been as follows:

(a) DGDA Annual Report and Accounts 1991-92;

(b) DGDA Corporate Plan 1993-98.

In addition the Agency's key targets for 1992-93, which were approved by Viscount Cranborne, USofS, on 16 July 1992, will be announced to Parliament in the near future.

Letter from Dr. Graham S. Pearson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if he will list for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the Chief Executive of each Executive Agency for which he is responsible.

2. The papers that I have published over the last 12 months are:

(a) Annual Report and Accounts 1991-92, CBDE Porton Down, June 1992 (a copy has been placed in the Library of the House).

(b) "Strengthening the BTWC Regime: A Defence View", Chemical Weapons Convention Bulletin, Issue No. 12, June 1991, pp 2-6.

Letter from Major General R. Wood to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

Reply to Parliamentary Question 7223F

The only unclassified document published in the last twelve months by the Director General Military Survey was the Military Survey Annual Report 91/92. Copies were sent to the Minister (AF) and the Parliamentary Clerk (for the House of Commons Library) on 22 October 1992.

Letter from Captain D. Symonds to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

In response to your parliamentary question to the Secretary of State for Defence concerning the papers published by Agency Chief Executives, the following papers have been published by the Chief Executive of the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation (NARO) DSA:

NARO DSA Framework Document which is publicly available.

NARO DSA Corporate Plan which has limited distribution due to the 'Commercial-in-Confidence' nature of its content.

Letter from Paul Altobell to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

Publications by Agency Chief Executives

Minister of State (DP) suggested that I write to you about my publications in the last twelve months.

In the year to 29 October 1992, I have published the following documents:-

Framework Document	—published July 1992
Business Plan 1992/93 to 1994/95	—published August 1992
Key Targets	—published in Hansard, Tuesday 20 October 1992

Our 1992 Strategic Plan is currently with the printers and should be available shortly.

Letter from D. Leadbeater to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1992:

In his written reply of 29 October the Secretary of State for Defence informed you that Agency Chief Executives would be replying directly to your question. The Defence Operational Analysis Centre is a Defence Support Agency formed on 1st July 1992. The agency's framework document has been published. The agency will be publishing a corporate plan and full cost accounts for year 92/93 in July 1993. The agency's business plan will contain more sensitive Defence Studies information and is not to be published.

Letter from Brigadier M. A. Browne to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

Further to your question the House on 22 October to the Secretary of State for Defence concerning papers published by Defence Agencies I am responding as Chief Executive of the Defence Postal and Courier Services—Defence Support Agency.

As a newly formed DSA the only publication to date is my Framework Document which has been passed to the House of Commons Library.

I enclose a personal copy of the publication for ease of reference.

Military Training

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account Her Majesty's Government take of human rights considerations when making decisions on the provision of military training to military personnel of other countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In deciding whether or not to provide military training for a particular country, many factors, including the human rights record of the Government, are taken into account.

Missile Defence System

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has been given by his American and Russian counterparts on the USA-Russia agreement on the global protection against limited strikes missile defence system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United States has kept us in close touch with its dialogue with the Russian authorities on limited ballistic missile defences.

RAF Upavon

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of RAF Upavon.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF Upavon in Wiltshire is at present the headquarters of No. 1 group RAF, a formation which controls the ground attack, support helicopter, air transport and air-to-air refuelling forces of the RAF. No. 1 group is part of Strike Command, the headquarters of which is at RAF High Wycombe.

Following a reorganisation in Strike Command, some staff are being transferred from Upavon to High Wycombe. I also propose, subject to the usual consultations with the trades unions, that the headquarters of No. 1 group should be transferred from Upavon to RAF Benson in Oxfordshire. Some 120 service posts would be transferred out of Upavon, and some 169 service and 80 civilian posts would be removed, as a result of these moves, which would save more than £45 million at current prices over the 25-year cost-appraisal period.

My Department has been looking at possible defence uses for RAF Upavon after the withdrawal of the RAF. I further propose therefore that the bulk of the Army's inspector general doctrine and training directorate will be collocated on a single site. RAF Upavon has been identified as the most cost-effective option and 150 military and 100 civilian posts will relocate from London, Camberley, Beaconsfield, Wilton and elsewhere. Other, minor units will also relocate to Upavon in due course. It is too early to say what the detailed implications will be for the civilian staff currently at RAF Upavon, but some will be employed by the Army.

Full consultation on these proposals will now take place with the trades unions concerned in accordance with agreed procedures.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Women Civil Servants

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress towards achieving equality of opportunity for women staff in the civil service.

Mr. Robert Jackson: In the past year steady progress has been made. For example, there are now more women in the management grades, a wider use of part-time working and flexible working patterns, an expansion of child care provision and more equal opportunities awareness training. This builds further on the achievements of past years. A report on the progress made during 1991-92 towards achieving equality of opportunity for women in the civil service has been published today and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Interpreters

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average fee paid (a) per day and (b) per hour by Crown courts to (i) interpreters utilised by Crown courts in general in the United Kingdom and (ii) interpreters utilised specifically by Crown courts in Wales to undertake interpretation from, and into, the Welsh language.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The amounts allowed to interpreters working in the Crown court in England and Wales are in general at the discretion of the court. Guidance is issued which recommends an allowance of £14 to £24 per hour, with a minimum allowance of three hours for those employed regularly in this capacity. Thus the allowance for three hours is in the range of £42 to £72; or £70 to £120 for a full day.

The amounts payable to Welsh language interpreters in the Crown court in Wales are specified by the Lord Chancellor under section 3(1A) of the Welsh Courts Act 1942. At present the allowances are £50 for a half day and £100 for a full day, which may be increased to £60 and £120 respectively when significant travelling time has been involved.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is responsible for two agencies, namely the Public Record Office (PRO) and the Land Registry.

The chief executive of the Public Record Office, the Keeper of Public Records, has personally published no papers since the PRO was launched as an agency on 1 April 1992. However, an information pack, including the agency framework document and corporate plan, was made publicly available at the time of the agency launch. In addition, the annual report of the Keeper of Public Records on the work of the PRO was laid before Parliament by the Lord Chancellor on 14 July 1992. The chief executive has also contributed an article to an historical journal.

The chief executive of the Land Registry, the Chief Land Registrar, has personally published no papers during the past 12 months. However, a consultation document on proposals to dispense with charge certificates was issued on 26 May 1992. In addition, the annual report of the Chief Land Registrar on the work of Her Majesty's Land Registry was published on 10 September 1992. The chief executive has also contributed articles to legal journals.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Mates: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the following agencies under their respective chief executives.

Training and Employment Agency—Mr. J. Crozier
Rates Collection Agency—Mr. D. Gallagher
Social Security Agency—Mr. A. Wylie
Ordnance Survey Agency—Mr. M. Brand
Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency—Mr. B. Watson
Compensation Agency—Mr. J. Robinson

I have asked them to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he would list for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible.

During the last twelve months I, as the Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency (Northern Ireland) (T and EA), issued the following publications:

Annual Review April 1990-March 1991
Get Your Business into Training
Labour Market Skill Trends Bulletin—November 1991 (Issue No. 1)
Labour Market Skill Trends Bulletin—May 1992 (Issue No. 4)
Directory of Services
Corporate Plan 1992-95
Business Plan 1992-93
Annual Review April 1991-March 1992
Directory of Training Providers
Customer's Charter
Financial Statements April 1990-March 1991
Training Magazine—Issues 8 to 11 (quarterly)

Letter from D. W. Gallagher to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

As I am responsible for the Northern Ireland Rate Collection Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to some Parliamentary Questions recently put down by you. These related to papers published by the Agency during the last 12 months and any fact-finding visits undertaken by myself during the same period.

As you may know, the Rate Collection Agency was established on 1 April 1992. During the last 12 months I have issued the Agency's 1992-93 Business Plan. Our 1991-92 Annual Report will be published shortly.

I would also advise that I have not undertaken any fact finding visits over the same period.

I hope that this information answers your questions but please let me know if I can be of any further help.

Letter from A. Wylie to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

Your recent Parliamentary Question asking for the titles of papers published during the last 12 months by the Chief Executive of each Executive Agency has been passed to me for reply as I am responsible for the Northern Ireland Social Security Agency.

During the last 12 months there have been 4 documents produced by the Agency. The titles are:

Strategic Plan 1992-96 and Business Plan 1992-93 (published May 1992)
Customer Charter (published July 1992)
Customer Survey Report 1991 (published August 1992)
Report of Findings of the Customer Survey 1991 (shorter version of main report)

Under the terms of its Framework Document the Agency prepares each year and submits to the Minister a Strategic and Business Plan. In line with the commitment in the Northern Ireland Citizen's Charter the Social Security Agency published a Customer Charter in July 1992. This sets out what the Agency's customers can expect in terms of a good quality service and the action they can take if things go wrong.

As part of its objective to consult its customers and as stated in its Customer Charter the Agency arranged for an independent survey of customer opinion on the quality of service it provides. The findings of the 1991 survey were published in the form of a main report and an executive summary.

Of the 4 documents only the Customer Survey Report 1991 and the Report of Findings of the Customer Survey 1991 were formally published and available through HMSO. The Strategic Plan 1992-96 and Business Plan 1992-93 and the Customer Charter were publicised and placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

I hope this is helpful to you and I will be pleased to provide any further information you may require.

Letter from J. F. Codd to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

You have asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the Chief Executives of each Executive Agency for which he is responsible.

Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland was launched as a Next Steps Agency on 1 April 1992 and therefore the period covered by this reply begins on that date. The following papers by Mr. J. D. Brand, Chief Executive and Director of Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland have been published:

1. "Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland—Framework Document", April 1992.
2. "Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland—Business Plan 1992-93", October 1992.
3. "Data 'THE' Investment", published in the proceedings of AM/FM International European Conference, October 1992.

Letter from J. B. Watson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

I am responding to your recent Parliamentary Question seeking information on titles of papers published over the last 12 months by Executive Agencies.

The following papers have been published by the Driver & Vehicle Testing Agency:

The Framework Document
The Business Plan.

Letter from J. Robinson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

I refer to your recent Parliamentary Question about the titles of papers published by executive agencies in Northern Ireland. The Secretary of State has asked me to provide the information in respect of the Compensation Agency.

I have published one paper since this Agency was established on 1 April 1992 namely "The Compensation Agency: Business Plan 1992-1993".

ENVIRONMENT

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what preparations his Department has made in readiness for the borehole public inquiry to be held in Cleator Moor civic hall into an application by British Nuclear Fuels plc to construct a site characterisation borehole.

Mr. Maclean: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Planning Inspectorate executive agency under its chief executive, Mr. Crow. I have asked him to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from H. S. Crow to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 27 October 1992:

The Secretary of State for the Environment has asked me to provide the reply to your recent Parliamentary Question to him, as its subject matter has been delegated to the Planning Inspectorate Executive Agency.

You ask what preparations have been made in readiness for the forthcoming inquiry into the planning appeals by British Nuclear Fuels relating to the drilling of exploratory boreholes near Gosforth, Cumbria.

The inquiry into these appeals is due to open on 24 November at the Civic Hall, Cleator Moor, Cumbria. It is expected to last for about 12 days. The Inspector appointed to decide the appeals is Mr. P. Rosser, who held a pre-inquiry meeting at Cleator Moor, with representatives of the parties, on 30 September. At that meeting the arrangements and programme for the inquiry were agreed.

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointee, and what remuneration each currently receives.

Mr. Howard: Information on relevant qualifications is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Details of remuneration are contained in the annual HMSO publication "Public Bodies", copies of which are held in the Library of the House. The following new appointments have been made since 10 April 1992 to the boards of non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department:

Recycling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which have not yet submitted recycling plans to his Department; what enforcement action he intends to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Out of 366 waste collection authorities, 50—14 per cent.—have not submitted recycling plans to my Department. They are listed as follows:

District councils
Alnwick
Amber Valley
Barrow-in-Furness
Blackburn
Bolsover
Chorley
Cleethorpes
East Nottinghamshire
East Cambridgeshire
Eden
Erewash
Fenland
Glanford
Great Yarmouth
High Peak
Hyndburn
Kingston upon Hull
Lichfield
Newcastle-under-Lyme
North Shropshire
North East Derbyshire
Preston
Richmondshire
Shrewsbury and Atcham
Slough
South Ribble
South Cambridgeshire
Tandridge
Teesdale
Wyre
York

Metropolitan districts
Dudley
Gateshead
Knowsley
North Tyneside
Rochdale
Sandwell
Sheffield
Tameside
Trafford
Walsall
Wolverhampton

London boroughs
Barking and Dagenham
Brent
Camden
City of London
Hillingdon
Islington
Sutton
Waltham Forest

A further 26 authorities—7 per cent.—have submitted recycling plans, but the plans have not yet been approved by the council. They are noted as follows:

District councils
Aylesbury Vale
Bassetlaw
Broxbourne
Craven
East Yorkshire
Elmbridge
Hambleton
Huntingdonshire
Mid Sussex
Mole Valley
Oxford
Scarborough
Scunthorpe
Southampton
Stroud
West Wiltshire
Worthing

Metropolitan districts
Barnsley
Kirklees
Liverpool
Rotherham
Wakefield

London boroughs
Bromley
Enfield
Kingston upon Thames
Newham

Most of these authorities have said that they will submit plans shortly; if they do so, no enforcement action will be necessary. However, the Secretary of State will not hesitate to use his powers under section 49(7) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to set a statutory deadline for any local authorities which are unwilling to submit recycling plans within a reasonable time.

Surplus Land (Sale)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the outcome of the consultation on changes to the arrangements under which surplus land is offered for sale back to former owners.

Mr. Robin Squire: Consultation papers issued in England and Wales last December and in April in Scotland proposed that the arrangements, which apply directly to Government Departments and agencies and are recommended to local authorities and other statutory bodies, should be modified as follows:

(a) qualified valuers other than the district valuer should be able to carry out valuations for disposal;
(b) there should be an additional exemption from the offer-back obligation in cases where competitive sale is essential to establish market value;
(c) the periods allowed for former owners to indicate an intention to purchase and agree terms should be simplified by allowing two months in all cases for indicating an intention to purchase, two months to agree terms other than value and a further six weeks to agree the price;
(d) in the case of future acquisitions, a 25 year cutoff on the obligation to offer back to former owners should apply to agricultural land as it already does to other land;
(e) the terms of sale should include clawback provisions in cases where the planning position of a site is unclear.

The response to consultation indicated a measure of support for all the proposals. There was, however, some concern that the changes at (d) and (e) would unduly weaken the position of former owners or their successors. Having given careful consideration to the views expressed, I remain of the view that the changes are justified. There is no logic in the existing situation whereby the offer-back obligation applies to any agricultural land acquired since 1935 but only for 25 years from the date of acquisition in the case of other land.

Moreover, disposing bodies can face insuperable difficulties in trying to trace successors of owners whose land was acquired perhaps 50 or more years ago. As regards the use of clawback, this is the only practicable means of protecting the taxpayer's interest in cases of exceptional planning sensitivity where it would not be appropriate for a disposing Department itself to take action to clarify the planning position in order to establish the value of the land.

I have therefore concluded that it is right to proceed with all the changes referred to above. The new arrangements will take effect from today. My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Wales and the Secretary of State for Scotland are introducing similar changes following consultation exercises there. The revised procedures are set out in letters issued by my Department and the Welsh Office and in a circular issued by the Scottish Office today.

Council Tax

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library, in hard copy and on floppy disk, the data on each local authority's tax base for council tax purposes supplied to his Department on form CTB.1.

Mr. Howard: Information on forms CTB.1 has been received from all local authorities and is currently being processed. I will place the information for each authority in the Library of the House, as soon as it is available.

Local Government Boundaries

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will happen to reviews of local government boundaries and electoral arrangements which the Local Government Boundary Commission has not completed when it is wound up on 31 October.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend made an order on 6 October under section 30 (3) of the Local Government Act 1992 bringing into force, on 31 October 1992, section 24 of that Act under which the Local Government Boundary Commission, LGBC, is wound up. From that date, responsibility for all outstanding LGBC reviews of local government boundaries or electoral arrangements will rest with the Local Government Commission established on 1 July. We are discussing with the new commission the handling of reviews transferred to it.

Fulmer Main Drainage

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a decision on Fulmer main drainage.

Mr. Baldry: Very shortly.

Mining Communities

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of pit closures upon individual families and the housing market in mining communities.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 27 October 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

The social and economic consequences of the proposed pit closures are a cause for deep concern. We have therefore announced a package of measures aimed at economic regeneration of the communities affected and have asked Lord Walker to co-ordinate these measures.

WALES

Disabled Trainees

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of youth training placement trainees have gained qualifications during their training within each training and enterprise council area in Wales in each of the last two years; and if he will indicate the proportion of disabled trainees who have gained qualifications within each training and enterprise council area over the same period.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information relating to the achievement of qualifications on youth training is provided in the tables.

Qualifications obtained during 1990-91

	Full qualification Per cent.	Part qualification Per cent.
Gwent	26	17
Swansea	35	21
Cardiff	29	19
Wrexham	40	23

The figures relate to the four areas of Wales which existed prior to the setting up of training and enterprise councils, TECs. Reliable figures on qualifications obtained are not available for TECs for 1990-91, since TECs in Wales were mostly operational for only a small part of the year.

Table 2
Qualifications obtained April-December 1991

	Full qualification Per cent.	Part qualification Per cent.
Gwent	24	15
West Wales	35	22
Mid Glamorgan	27	19
South Glamorgan	26	15
North West Wales	46	24

These are the latest available figures for TECs, since the follow up of YT leavers is undertaken six months after leaving.

Figures for north-east Wales and Powys are not available owing to the low number of respondents to the follow-up survey in those areas.

Table 3
Qualifications obtained by disabled trainees

	Full qualification Per cent.	Part qualification Per cent.
Wales (total)	16	14

This information relates to qualifications obtained in the period April 1990 to March 1991. Because of the relatively small numbers of disabled trainees involved in the survey, information on the basis of individual TECs is not statistically reliable.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the level of opting for grant-maintained status by schools in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There have been 13 parental ballots in Wales on whether to apply for grant maintained status. Of the 10 in favour, three have been approved; three have published their proposals; and two are in the process of assembling their proposals prior to publishing. The applications from the other two schools were turned down. I expect many more applications.

Disabled Pupils

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local authorities in Wales that currently employ a mobility worker specifically trained to work with disabled children.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Mobility officers are not trained specifically to work with one age group. They work with a range of people who have disabilities, including children, as necessary.

Prince Charles Hospital

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of surgical beds available at the Prince Charles hospital at Merthyr Tydfil in 1991; and what is the number currently available.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is for surgical specialities as shown in the table.

Prince Charles hospital:
Average beds available daily to surgical specialties[1]

	1991	1992
General surgery	89·3	80·8
Trauma and orthopaedics	71·3	73·3
Ear, nose and throat	21·3	19·5
Ophthalmology	17·5	14·6
Oral surgery	10·1	8·7
TOTAL	209·5	196·9

[1] Quarter ending June.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost of restoring the number of surgical beds before the recent reduction at the Prince Charles hospital, Merthyr Tydfil.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. This is a matter which falls within the day-to-day management responsibility of Mid Glamorgan health authority.

Economic Report, Mid Glamorgan

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 395, what conclusions his Department has made following its study of the Mid Glamorgan council economic report.

Mr. David Hunt: The report is a careful analysis of the problems and opportunities facing Mid Glamorgan and my officials have taken careful note of its findings. It is not, however, for me to comment publicly on a report produced for the benefit of Mid Glamorgan councillors.

I am, of course, now considering my future policy for the valleys.

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees and what remuneration each currently receives.

Mr. David Hunt: The names of current appointment holders, showing when their appointment comes to an end, and the remuneration, where received, are listed as follows. All appointments are made on the basis of aptitude and merit.

Water

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, for each water company supplying water to domestic customers in Wales, the supply zones where one or more sample in 1991 exceeded 10 micrograms of lead per litre of water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information about lead concentration in water supplies in Wales is contained in "Drinking Water 1991" the second annual report by the chief inspector of the drinking water inspectorate and in the document "Nitrate, Pesticides and Lead, 1989 and 1990", published by the inspectorate in July 1992.

Primary School Pupils

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the latest available figures for the total number of pupils at every individual primary school in Dyfed and the standard numbers at each school.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The standard numbers for schools are not held centrally.

I will write to the hon. Gentleman giving the number of full and part-time pupils on roll at each primary school in Dyfed, at January 1992.

AIDS

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest figures for reported AIDS cases in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Statistics on the number of HIV—AIDS cases are collected by the Public Health Laboratory Service Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre. Ninety-two cases of AIDS have been notified in Wales since reporting began in 1982. Of those 69 are known to have died. The cumulative total of HIV positive cases in Wales was 287 at the end of September 1992.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many surplus school places there are in Wales; what is the annual cost of maintaining surplus school places; and what action he plans to take to reduce the number and cost of surplus school places.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department estimates that there were 118,000 surplus school places in Wales in 1991, costing local education authorities about £23 million.

Our future plans are set out in "Choice and Diversity: A New Framework for Schools" (Cm 2021) a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cargoes of clinical waste from outside the United Kingdom were incinerated in Wales in each of the past five years; and if he will specify the quantity of waste involved in each year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Council Tax

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discretion councils will have to make differential increases in the council tax applicable to each valuation band.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

The council tax for each of the eight valuation bands will be determined in accordance with a fixed ratio: thus the council tax for a dwelling in band A will be two thirds of that for a dwelling in band D. The ratio is set out in section 5(1) of the Local Government Finance Act 1992.

Neath-Port Talbot Hospital

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will undertake to maintain the proposed time scale for the building of the new Neath/Port Talbot general hospital; when he now expects the main contract to be let; and how much money will be spent in the financial years 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96, respectively.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the right hon. and learned Gentleman to the announcement by my right hon. Friend in the House on 29 October.

Inmos Ltd.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has received concerning financial aid or other inducement offered to Inmos Ltd., Newport to relocate outside Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Such information is commercially confidential.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the contacts he has had with the Commission and individual directorates general of the European Community since June on the future location of Inmos Ltd., Newport.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Alcohol

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being undertaken to halt the sale of alcohol to minors.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

The Licensing Act 1988 strengthened the offence of selling alcohol to young people under 18 by placing a greater responsibility on licensees and their staff. The Act also increased the maximum penalty for this offence and made wholesalers' premises subject to this provision of licensing law. Enforcement of the law is a matter for the police.

TRANSPORT

Rail Services

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been achieved in improving the quality of service on the London, Tilbury and Southend line.

Mr. Freeman: Work on the £50 million resignalling project for the line is progressing, with the survey and design phase now virtually complete. BR believes this project to be the key to improving the reliability of the line.

The rolling stock withdrawn for checking and repair is expected to be fully introduced by the end of November, reducing cancellations and restoring capacity. A new train-washing machine has been installed and will soon be operational.

Closed circuit TV systems have recently been installed at six of the most heavily used car parks on the line to improve security.

A passenger information system—called PRIDE—was installed earlier this year. It uses state of the art satellite communications to transmit messages from the information centre at Southend to the individual PRIDE installations on LT and S stations.

For the year so far, the line has exceeded its passengers charter targets for both peak punctuality and reliability. Punctuality has been particularly good at 90·3 per cent. —12 per cent. higher than the average achieved during 1991.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Jim Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for public consultation on the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: Union Railways (UR), British Rail's subsidiary for the rail link, is in the final stages of its studies to refine the easterly approach route. The Government's brief for the studies is described in a paper entitled "Developing the Route", supported by a paper entitled "Environmental Appraisal", which have been discussed with the local authorities concerned. Copies have been placed in the Library. The studies take account of information provided by local authority officers during confidential consultation on matters such as planning considerations.

Union Railways's report to the Government is expected by the end of December and will contain a reference case route together with sub-route options. The Government will decide and announce as soon as possible the route for consultation. At the same time, Union Railways will publish supporting information and take the lead in a full consultation process, which is expected to last about six months. The consultation will include right hon. and hon. Members, local authorities, environmental bodies and the public.

At the end of the consultation period, the Government will decide on any changes to be incorporated in the route, and will make a further announcement.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to encourage review within the EC of the common fisheries policy covering (a) policies on industrial fisheries, (b) fisheries management and its implications for wildlife, (c) fleet sizes and (d) fishing intensity.

Mr. Curry: The Commission is already carrying out a study of industrial fishing and I am pressing it to produce its report on this. We continue to urge that the Community should take account of the effect of fisheries management on the wider marine environment, and I am pleased that the Council at its last meeting on 19 October adopted a measure aimed at better protection of marine mammals. The Council on 19 October discussed Commission proposals designed to reduce fleet sizes and fishing intensity, and will return to this subject at its next meeting.

Cereals (Moisture Content)

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what maximum moisture content standard will apply to cereals bought into intervention in the United Kingdom in the 1992-93 marketing year.

Mr. Gummer: Harvesting of many cereals was delayed throughout Britain this year because of poor weather and farmers frequently forced to combine in very wet conditions.

In these exceptional circumstances, the moisture content was bound to be much higher than usual, leading to additional costs in drying down to reach the normal intervention standard of 14·5 per cent.

I have, therefore, sought the Commission's agreement to a derogation increasing the moisture content standard to 15 per cent. for cereals sold into intervention in the United Kingdom this season. This will apply to all cereals intervened from 1 November and will ensure that United Kingdom farmers are not disadvantaged in comparison with producers elsewhere in the Community.

EC Cosmetics Directive

Mr. Burden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to support the proposals from the European Parliament and European Commission to amend the cosmetics directive 76/769 with regard to animal testing.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's policy in the negotiations on the proposed sixth Council amendment to the cosmetics directive is to keep animal testing to a minimum consistent with human safety. In recognition of the progress made in developing skin and eye irritancy tests, the United Kingdom has called on the European Community to set 1998 as a target date for the replacement of animal tests in those areas subject to there being validated alternatives. We will continue to press for a reduction in animal testing and we hope that during our presidency member states will agree to the phasing out of testing on animals when they can be replaced with suitably validated non-animal alternatives.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Green Issues

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Attorney-General how many civil servants have been allocated new or additional responsibilities to deal with the management and development of green issues; and what additional allocation of resources has been made to support programmes related to green issues in his Department.

The Attorney-General: The number of civil servants who have been allocated such new or additional responsibilities is as follows:

	Number
Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers	2
Serious Fraud Office	2
Treasury Solicitor's Department	5
Crown Prosecution Service	34

No additional allocation of resources has so far been required.

EMPLOYMENT

Annual Leave

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish estimates from the latest available data of the annual leave entitlement in Britain, showing the number and proportion of employees with (a) no annual leave entitlement and (b) under four weeks' annual leave entitlement, broken down by (i) males, (ii) females and (iii) all employees.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many non-manual workers were unemployed according to official figures in September 1979 and in September of each subsequent year; and what percentage of the work force this represented.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information can be derived only from the labour force survey. Estimates are available only on a consistent basis from 1984 and relate to the spring of each year.

Earnings

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the most recent figures from the 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992 new earnings survey showing the average gross weekly earnings, not affected by absence of full-time 16, 17 and 18-year-olds, given by (a) males, (b) females and (c) all employees.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information available from the new earnings survey for each of the years requested is given in the table.

Union Subscriptions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment pursuant to her answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 500, what action has been taken by her Department to verify the allegations of subscriptions being deducted from non-union members.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not investigate allegations of this kind. It is clear that there currently exists scope for the abuse of "check-off" arrangements. The introduction of the proposed new requirement for the individual written consent of employees to the deduction of trade union subscriptions direct from their pay will help to minimise the scope for abuse.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Works of Art

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the works of art that have been donated to the nation during the last 24 months in lieu of payment of tax; and where the general public can currently view each of these works of art.

Mr. Brooke: The information the hon. Member requests is as follows:

Relocation

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many sites he has considered as a future location for his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My Department has considered an extensive range of sites, taking into account relevant factors such as effectiveness, efficiency, value for money and the accessibility of the site. We are now engaged in detailed negotiations and I shall be making an announcement in due course.

National Lottery

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 437, if he intends to publish the report of GAH Group into aspects of the national lottery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The report of the GAH Group is advice internal to my Department and I do not therefore intend to publish it.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 437, what was the cost to his Department of the consultants GAH Group, who advised on aspects of the national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: The total cost of work carried out by consultants—the GAH Group—in advising my Department on aspects of the National Lottery is £44,985, excluding VAT.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 437, whether the contract for the research work undertaken to advise on aspects of national lottery by GAH Group was the subject of competitive tender.

Mr. Brooke: Yes.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of (a) the annual cost or saving, (b) the numbers of gainers or losers, (c) the average amounts of weekly gains or losses and (d) the maximum amounts of weekly gains and losses in individual cases, which would result from adjustments of the housing benefit taper from 65 per cent. to (i) 50 per cent., (ii) 55 per cent., (iii) 60 per cent., (iv) 70 per cent., (v) 75 per cent. and (vi) 80 per cent.

Mr. Burt: The information requested for (a), (b) and (c) is shown in the table[1].

[1] Figures have been provided from data drawn from the 1987, 1988, 1989 family expenditure surveys and are modelled at 1992-93 prices. These figures are rounded and take no account of those people who would either become eligible or ineligible for housing benefit in the event of a change to the present taper.

Figures for (d) could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest annual figures for the London borough of Waltham Forest for the number of recipients of income support and housing benefit; and what the comparable figures were for each of the last five years.

Mr. Burt: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 29 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what are the latest annual figures for the London Borough of Waltham Forest for the number of recipients of Income Support and Housing Benefit; and what were the comparable figures for each of the last five years.

The complete information you requested is only available at a disproportionate cost. This is because statistics of a local nature are destroyed at regular intervals in accordance with standing procedures.

I have listed below the information available.

HOUSING BENEFIT

The administration of Housing Benefit is a matter for Local Authorities. The following information has been obtained from the Housing Benefit Management Information System.

February	Numbers
1990	[1]22,862
1991	16,487
1992	18,019

[1] This figure includes 5,984 customers in receipt of a rates rebate which altered to Community Charge Benefit by February 1991.

INCOME SUPPORT

The figures quoted are for the areas covered by Ilford, Leytonstone and Walthamstow offices, which make up the Benefits Agency's Lea-Roding District. It is not possible to provide a more detailed breakdown because the District boundary does not correspond with that of the London Borough of Walthamstow.

August	Numbers
1990	40,394
1991	47,262
1992	55,645

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to require that all assessors of housing benefit levels disregard in total all war disablement pensions when assessing individual applications for housing benefit.

Mr. Burt: Local authorities already have the discretion to disregard war disablement pension in excess of the statutory £10 weekly disregard when assessing entitlement to housing benefit. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to introduce any compensation measures for individuals claiming disability living allowance who have been incurring costs in trying to trace the progress of their claims.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 29 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about compensation measures for individuals claiming Disability Living Allowance (DLA) who have incurred costs trying to trace the progress of their claim.

All claims to DLA are acknowledged at the outset and a further letter is sent explaining that there are delays if the claim remains uncleared after six weeks.

My letter of 19 October to all MPs set out the action we are taking to resolve the time it takes to clear the backlog of cases. The action taken has been comprehensive and the effect has been to reduce substantially the claims outstanding.

You asked whether we will introduce compensation measures. The present rules are that compensation can only be considered where, exceptionally, a claim for benefit takes longer than 12 months to process; or in the case of an existing award, there is an interruption in payment of 3 months or more. We would not normally pay costs incurred as a result of enquiries regarding the progress of claims.

I recognise that delays are unacceptable at any stage, but you will appreciate that given the length of time which must elapse before compensation can be paid, few cases will in fact be eligible.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Benefit Claims

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the Walthamstow constituency submitted claims (a) more than three months ago and (b) more than six months ago whose claims are still outstanding.

Mr. Scott: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter to Mr. Neil Gerrard from Mr. Michael Bichard, dated 29 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many people in the Walthamstow constituency submitted claims (a) more than three months ago and (b) more than six months ago whose claims are still outstanding.

The complete range of information you requested is not available except at disproportionate cost. This is because not all claims to benefits are submitted to District Offices. Claims such as Child Benefit, Family Credit and Disability Living Allowance are dealt with at central locations. It would be necessary to examine all claims outstanding nationally to obtain the relevant information.

The information I have outlined in Appendix 1, is for benefits processed locally by Ilford, Leytonstone and Walthamstow offices which make up the Benefits Agency's Lea-Roding District. It is not possible to provide a more detailed breakdown because the District boundary does not correspond with that of the London borough of Walthamstow.

There is no information kept locally to record the length of time a claim has been outstanding. It would be exceptional for claims to be outstanding three or even six months. This can be illustrated by the information which I have given at Apprendix 2, which is a list of local clearance targets for some of the benefits mentioned. It gives account of new claims, the review of claims on a change of circumstances, and the actual performance achieved for the year to date.

I hope this reply is helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Library. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Disability

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what steps he is taking to establish more reliable estimates of the number of people who may be eligible to claim (a) the disability living allowance and (b) the disability working allowance;

(2) what is the latest information he has on the levels of income and severity of disablement of (a) invalidity benefit recipients, (b) recipients of disability living allowance and (c) recipients of other forms of disability benefit.

(3) what steps he is taking to improve information about the incomes received and the incomes needed by those aplying for, and receiving, the disability living allowance and the disability working allowance, as part of the evience required to assess the success of targeting.

Mr. Scott: Information on the income of disability benefit claimants is not generally available from administrative sources, as, apart from the disability working allowance which is income-related, this information is not required to make a decision on the claim. Some information on income levels is available from surveys such as the family expenditure survey (FES). For example, the 1989 survey shows the average gross income of a benefit unit with at least one invalidity benefit recipient was £155, but FES information is not reliable for other disability benefits. The family resources survey, announced in July 1992, will have a larger sample size than the FES and will provide better information in due course. The latest and most reliable information about levels of severity of disablement is contained in the reports of the surveys of disabled people carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys between 1985 and 1988. Our monitoring of disability living allowance and disability working allowance will produce more information.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to offer compensation to claimants of disability living and working allowances whose claims are not dealt with within the target periods set by his Department.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance and disability working allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 29 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about compensation payments to claimants of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Disability Working Allowance (DWA) whose claims are not dealt with within the target periods.

My letter of 19 October to all MPs set out the action we are taking to resolve the time it takes to clear the backlog of DLA cases. The action taken has been comprehensive and the effect has been to reduce substantially the claims outstanding.

For DWA, I should explain that there is no backlog of cases waiting to be dealt with. To date there are 18 cases waiting for initial action and just under 500 cases where the adjudication officer is waiting for further information before a decision can be made.

You asked whether we will make it our policy to offer compensation. The present rules are that compensation can only be considered where, exceptionally, a claim for benefit takes longer than 12 months to process; or in the case of an existing award, there is an interruption in payment of 3 months or more.

I recognise that delays are unacceptable at any stage, but you will appreciate that given the length of time which must elapse before compensation can be paid, few cases will in fact be eligible.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to overcome the backlog with regard to processing applications for mobility allowance and attendance allowance, both under the previous schemes and under the new disability living allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Birchard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 29 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about what steps he is taking to overcome the backlog with regard to processing applications for Mobility Allowance (MobA) and Attendance Allowance (AA), both under the previous schemes and under the new Disability Living Allowance (DLA) scheme.

Various initiatives have been instigated in order to clear the backlog of claims. These include; setting up a senior management task force chaired by me, to oversee the recovery programme; increasing the number of staff devoted to handling claims by over 800—an increase of approximately 25 per cent.;

sanctioning overtime in all Disability Benefit Centres and Units—equivalent to a further 250 more staff;

establishing, staffing and equipping additional processing units in Preston, Newcastle, Wembly and Manchester to handle new and renewal claims and so relieve some pressures on existing units and increase output; conducting a detailed and thorough review of our procedures and organisation to further speed up the process wherever possible.

The full extent of the initiatives we have introduced was outlined in my letter to all MPs on 19 October.

The measures we have in hand have brought about a reduction in the number of claims outstanding and will continue to do so.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many letters he has received from hon. Members during the past three months complaining about the slowness of processing applications for disability allowance, attendance allowance and disability living allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance and attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 29 October 1992:

I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about how many letters he has received from Honourable Members during the past three months complaining about the slowness of processing applications for Disability Allowance, Attendance Allowance (AA) and Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

The number of complaints recorded for July to September, inclusive, are as follows:

AA 65+	DLA
145	1,896

My letter dated 19 October to all MPs set out the action we are taking to reduce the backlog of cases. These measures, together with the increasing confidence and experience of staff, resulted in a substantial improvement in the speed of claims processing.

By September, monthly output on claims to DLA (from new and existing AA and Mobility Allowance customers) and AA had risen to 152,000 compared with 65,000 claims cleared in May.

In the period February to the end of September we had processed a total of 711,000 AA, DLA and "top-up" claims of which 617,000 were processed under the new self assessment procedures, about 80% of which were determined without the need for a medical examination.

Significant inroads have been made into the backlog of claims and I am now confident that we will have reached a steady state shortly for new claims to DLA and AA, and by the end of November for "top-up" claims from people who were already receiving either AA or Mobility Allowance.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time taken to reassess income support levels per person for young disabled people aged 16 or 17 years embarking on a youth training placement; and if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to benefit providers including time scale targets for achieving such reassessments.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

The reassessment of such claims are undertaken on the same basis as Income Support customers in general.

National clearance targets for the reassessment of Income Support claims are already in place. These are outlined below.

I should explain that the average time is obtained from statistics available from the Income Support Management Information System. It takes account of the actual time taken between receipt of the notification of the change of circumstances and the date of adjudication.

Targets	Achievement—year to date
65% clearance within 2 days	88% cleared within 2 days
95% clearance within 5 days	93% cleared within 5 days

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what territory is covered by the Wales and central England terrorial office of the Department of Social Security Benefits Agency disability living allowance unit, Government Buildings, Gabalfa, Cardiff.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 29 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what territory is covered by the Benefits Agency Office in Cardiff dealing with Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

New claims to DLA are administered by ten Disability Benefit Centres (DBCs) around the country, each one dealing with large areas. The DBC in Government Buildings, Gabalfa, Cardiff is responsible for all the new claims from customers in Wales.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Carer Premium

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to continue providing income support hardship allowances in instances where a claimant's partner qualifies for the carer premium for looking after someone in another household.

Mr. Burt: A reduced rate of income support may be payable to claimants who fail the availability for work or the actively seeking work tests if an adjudication officer is satisfied that they would otherwise suffer hardship. However, the Government have announced their intention to remove entitlement to income support from some groups of claimants who fail the actively seeking work test. Regulations will be laid before Parliament shortly when we have had an opportunity to consider the report of the social security advisory committee on our proposals.

Fact-finding Visits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the fact-finding visits made in the past 12 months by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible; and what were the findings resulting from each visit.

Mr. Scott: Each of the chief executives makes regular visits to their operational areas as a matter of good management practise; these visits provide opportunities to meet staff and discuss with them ideas, initiatives and problems.

Visits are also made under the Government scheme to link agencies with academic institutions, and to investigate academic training opportunities for staff; and to other countries social security operations to share experience and expertise.

Income Support

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by region, and for Great Britain as a whole, shown separately for male and female, how many 16 and 17-year-olds for each month since January 1992 have made applications for income support on the ground of extreme hardship and how many have been granted or refused; if he will give the information he has about the grounds on which applications were turned down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 21 May at columns 238-39. Such information as is available after March 1992 is in the tables. Each application under the severe hardship provisions is considered on its own merits and an award is made where there is a risk of hardship. The figures confirm that our policy of helping those at risk is working effectively.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of maternity grants paid during 1991 in each local authority area.

Mr. Scott: The information is not collected in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost; but the numbers of maternity payments made by each Benefits Agency district office last year are in the table.

Diabetes

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce legislation which would grant an additional monetary allowance to senior citizens suffering from diabetes to allow them to purchase sugar-free substances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to do so.

EDUCATION

Fact-finding Visits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for the last 12 months, the fact-finding visits the chief executive of the Teachers' Pensions Agency has made; what were her findings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Teachers' Pensions Agency was established on 1 April 1992. To date, the chief executive has not undertaken any fact-finding visits.

Disabled Children

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement outlining the arrangements for providing specialist equipment for disabled children integrated into mainstream grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: Any local education authority which maintains a statement of special educational needs for a pupil for whom it is responsible has a legal obligation to make the necessary special education provision. If a disabled pupil, who attends a grant-maintained school, requires specialist equipment as specified in section III of the pupil's statement, then the local education authority must provide that equipment.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Pit Closures

Mr. Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the net effect on the public sector borrowing requirement of the pit closure programme.

Mr. Portillo: Given the uncertainties at this stage, it is not possible to calculate the effect.

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Treasury's forecast of the increase in the volume of production, imports and exports of manufactures in each of the next five years as a result of the fall in interest rates and the exchange rate since August.

Mr. Portillo: The Industry Act forecast, to be published at the time of the autumn statement, will contain forecasts of GDP, manufacturing output, imports and exports over the period to the end of 1993. This will take account of all relevant factors, including recent changes in interest and exchange rates. It is not customary to publish forecasts for these items over the longer term.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage increase in personal income tax allowances since indexation began; and what is the percentage increase in the retail prices index over the same period.

Mr. Dorrell: The provisions under which income tax allowances are indexed by reference to movements in the retail prices index unless Parliament determines otherwise have applied to changes in allowance levels from 1977-78. In 1992-93 the personal allowance is 265 per cent. higher than the equivalent allowance in 1977-78 and the retail prices index is forecast to be 197 per cent. higher.

Economy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish an estimate, based on the Treasury model of the economy, of the level of interest rates and the weighted average exchange rate required to enable the economy to return to full employment at a high and sustainable rate of growth.

Mr. Portillo: It has not, since 1978, been the practice to provide results from the Treasury model in response to parliamentary questions; but the hon. Member will be aware that the model is available for Members' use through the Library of the House.

Unemployment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the minimum rate of unemployment for adult men recognised by the Government as being consistent with full employment at a high and sustainable rate of growth.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 29 October 1992]: Many factors influence the rate of unemployment consistent with non-inflationary growth, and that unemployment rate cannot be estimated precisely.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 October, Official Report, columns 253-54, what is the latest monthly figure for the number of asylum applicants this year; and what was the comparable number for the same months in 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the period January to September 1992 a total of 16,170 asylum applications, excluding dependants, were received. The total for the corresponding months in 1991 was 34,460.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the total number of applications for asylum received for each month since 1987 (a) in list form and (b) as a graph.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 26 October 1992]: Information is available in tabular form. As the Official Report is unable to print information in graphical form, a copy of the corresponding graph will be placed in the Library of the House.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the proposals from the European Commission with respect to a data protection directive are of the kind that will be subject to subsidiarity arrangements; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The principle of subsidiarity is defined in article 3b of the treaty on European union, when that treaty comes into force it will apply to all proposals for Community legislation.

The main objective of the data protection directive is to ensure free flow of personal data across the internal frontiers of the Community. The Government accept that a prerequisite for this free flow is harmonisation of minimum essential data protection requirements, and consider that the 1981 Council of Europe convention on data processing provides such requirements.

We considered that the procedural requirements in the Commission's original proposals were matters best left to national authorities to resolve. We are now considering how far the Commission's amended proposals meet this objection.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the Data Protection Registrar has sufficient funds to carry out his functions; and what response he intends to make to the comments made by the registrar in his annual report on the financing of his office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government determine the resources which should be made available to the registrar in the light of the statutory responsibilities laid upon him, the registrar's own assessment of what he needs to discharge those duties and overall public expenditure constraints.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will summarise his main objections to the revised proposals from the Commission with respect to a data protection directive; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Commission's revised proposals have only just been released. The Government will now be considering them in consultation with all the interest groups likely to be affected. The Government's policy, in discussions with their Community partners, will continue to be to ensure that it strikes a proper balance between the interests of data users, data subjects and others.

Green Issues

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civil servants have been allocated new or additional responsibilities to deal with the management and development of green issues; and what additional allocation of resources has been made to support programmes related to green issues in his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Environmental policies are closely integrated into the day-to-day operations of my Department and all staff are expected to take due account of them in the course of their work. Environmental policies have generally been pursued within existing resources and in most cases it is not possible separately to identify the resources devoted to them. The following elements are however separately identifiable: (i) expenditure on energy efficiency measures for the prison estate amounting to £1.517 million in 1991-92; (ii) the Department's energy management group, which has been in existence since 1981 and comprises 5·3 staff; and (iii) expenditure of some £50,000 during 1992-93 on the fitting of power factor correctors, automatic lighting controls, water meters and automatic VDU controls in Home Office buildings.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish ways of detecting changes in the proportions of people at different ages of involvement in serious crime.

Mr. Jack: Changes in the relative involvement in crime of persons of different ages are measured centrally for England and Wales by changes in the number of persons found guilty at magistrates courts or the Crown court or cautioned by the police. Chapter 5 of the 1990 issue of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (Cm 1935) contains information on these known offenders analysed by age, sex and offence.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of those cautioned in each of the 1985 and 1988 samples in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin 20/92 entitled the criminal histories of those cautioned in 1985 and 1988 who had been cautioned previously, had been cautioned (a) on one occasion in the past, (b) on two occasions, (c) on three occasions, (d) on four occasions, or (e) on five or more occasions.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 October 1992]: The information requested is in the tables. As estimates for all those cautioned, the figures in table 2 are liable to some sampling error.

Table 1

Persons cautioned in 1985 and 1988 samples by previous cautioning history

Year	0	1	2	3	4	5+	Total
1985	2,371	295	43	12	5	8	2,734
1988	2,493	343	74	27	10	3	2,950

Table 2

1985	87	11	2	[1]	[1]	[1]	2,734
1988	85	12	3	[1]	[1]	[1]	2,950

[1] Is less than 0·5 per cent.

Electoral Administration

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the membership of the joint committee looking into electoral administration matters referred to by the Minister of State in his oral answer of 22 October, Official Report, column 557, giving the terms of reference and expected time of reporting.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Five working groups of Home Office officials and representatives of returning officers and local authorities will consider different aspects of the electoral process. The remits of the working groups are as follows:

Electoral registration

To examine the scope for changes to the present registration system, including the definition of residence, the role of the qualifying date, the procedures for claims and objections, and to assess the feasibility and resource implications of rolling registration.

Absent voting

To consider changes to the absent voting system, including qualification for an absent vote for an indefinite period or at a particular election, and the closing dates for applications.

Forms

To consider, in consultation with HMSO, the need for the changes to electoral registration, absent voting and election forms.

Returning Officers' fees and expenses

To consider whether changes are required to current categories of expenditure, and whether current levels of fees and allowances are appropriate.

Automated vote counting

To explore the practical implications of introducing automated vote counting procedures with a view to conducting a trial at either a parliamentary or local government election. This group might also consider other miscellaneous suggestions about voting procedures.

It is expected that the working groups will report back next summer. Membership of the five working groups will be settled shortly and I will write to the hon. Member with the details.

Membership will be drawn from the organisations as follows:

Association of District Councils
Association of Metropolitan Authorities
Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland
Association of District Secretaries
Society of Local Authority Chief Executives
Society of Local Authority Chief Executives (Scotland)
Scottish Assessors' Association
Association of Electoral Administrators

Parole

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect a prisoner's protestation of innocence has on the decision of the parole board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: When the parole board assesses the suitability of prisoners for early release on licence, the principal concern is the risk of further offending. Protestation of innocence per se does not dictate the outcome of its deliberations.

Hostel Places

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation and bail hostel places were available at the latest date available.

Mr. Jack: The number of places currently available in probation-bail and bail hostels is 2,575—653 of these are in bail only hostels and 1,922 in probation-bail hostels.

Criminal Justice Act 1991

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice his Department has given on the practical interpretation of the concept of seriousness as encapsulated in the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Jack: The criteria for determining the seriousness of an offence for the purpose of deciding on an appropriate sentence are set out in the Criminal Justice Act 1991. However, it is for the courts alone to interpret the provisions of the Act as they apply to individual cases in the light of all the circumstances of the offence and the offender and any guidance which the Court of Appeal may issue in due course. A substantial programme of training for sentencers on all matters relating to the Act has been provided under the auspices of the Judicial Studies Board.

Sex Offenders

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals who completed sentences for child sex offences are known to have reoffended subsequently in each of the past five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not collected in the form requested. Current estimates indicate that 28 per cent. of males released in 1984 from custodial sentences for sexual offences as a whole were reconvicted of a further standard list offence within two years of discharge—table 8(c) of Prison Statistics 1987, Cm 547. A recent survey of adult males released in 1980 from custodial sentences of four years or over for several offences recorded as involving a victim aged under 16 indicates that 30 per cent. were reconvicted within 10 years of discharge of a sexual offence of which half were known to be against a child.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors the parole board takes into account when deciding to release sex offenders back into the communities where their offences were committed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The factors which the parole board needs to address, in all cases, when considering suitability for release on licence are the risk to the public; whether the offender has tackled his offending behaviour; and whether the resettlement plan will help secure the offender's rehabilitation. The board also needs to take into account, among other things, any risk to the victim and the attitude of the victim and the local community.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on the proportion of sentence served in prison by persons convicted of sexual offences against children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The new arrangements for the release of sentenced prisoners introduced by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 will ensure that, like all other prisoners serving determinate sentences, those sentenced on or after 1 October 1992 for sexual offences against children will serve at least half their sentence in custody and that those serving sentences of four years or more may be required to remain in custody until the two thirds point of sentence. All prisoners will be at risk after release of having their original sentences reactivated if convicted of further imprisonable offences before the end of their original sentences. In addition, all prisoners serving terms of a year or more will be supervised by the probation service up to the three quarters points of their sentence. In addition, some sex offenders will be supervised right until the end of their sentence at the direction of the sentencing judge where this is considered necessary to protect the public.

Common Travel Area

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with European Commission officials concerned with amending current arrangements under the common travel area between the Republic of Ireland and the United Kingdom; and what proposals have been submitted by the European Commission to appropriate Ministers for amending common travel area arrangements between the Republic of Ireland and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Policing Costs

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much it has cost the Metropolitan police in money and police man hours during the past 12 months to (a) police demonstrations, rallies and the Notting Hill carnival and (b) fight terrorism and cope with terrorist activities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on public order events could only be supplied at disproportionate cost.

It is not our practice to disclose details of resources devoted to combating terrorism.

Prison Service

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the annual costs are for providing educational services in Her Majesty's prison service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 October 1992]: The total cost of providing prison education in England and Wales was £32.8 million in the financial year 1990-91—the latest year for which information has been published.

Drink Driving

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish (a) the number of deaths caused by drink driving, (b) the number of convictons for drink driving and (c) the estimated number of occasions when drivers and riders were above the legal limit, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Jack: Estimates of fatal casualties in accidents involving illegal alcohol labels in Great Britain are published by the Department of Transport and are as follows:

Year	Number
1979	1,790
1980	1,570
1981	1,540
1982	1,670
1983	1,200
1984	1,280
1985	1,130
1986	1,060
1987	980
1988	840
1989	870
1990	800
[1]1991	700

The number of convictions for drink driving in England and Wales is as follows:

Year	Number (thousands)
1979	67
1980	78
1981	71
1982	75
1983	98
1984	101
1985	107
1986	107
1987	115
1988	119
1989	114
1990	113
[1]1991	104

---

[1] Provisional.

Estimates of the number of occasions when drivers and riders were above the legal limit are not made routinely. Department of Transport roadside surveys carried out in the year 1988, 1989 and 1990 have found consistently that during the peak drinking period—7 pm to 2 am—the proportion of drivers of cars and light vans over the legal limit is in the range of 1 to 1½ per cent.

HEALTH

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation to provide for the continued availability of dietary supplements for British sufferers from myalgic encephalomyelitis; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: There is no generally agreed method of treatment for people with ME. Treatment to alleviate the various symptoms is very much a matter for medical judgment in each case.

Student Loan

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy in respect of the inclusion of a notional student loan in its calculations for full financial assistance to full-time students for dental and other NHS charges.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on Friday 23 October at column 395.

Child Protection

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what implications the conclusions of the Clyde report have for child protection provisions in England and Wales.

Mr. Yeo: We will study the recommendations of the Clyde report and any implications for social services and child care in England will be carefully considered.

Child Psychotherapists

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to increase the numbers of trained child psychotherapists in the NHS.

Mr. Yeo: The employment and training of child psychotherapists is primarily a mater for health authorities. However, the Department is supporting the Child Psychotheraphy Trust's work to increase the numbers of trained child psychotherapists and to develop a greater understanding of their role. Following a recent meeting with the trust, officials are discussing training arrangements for these staff with regional health authorities.

Live Births

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of live births in each local authority area during 1991.

Mr. Sackville: The number of live births in each local authority area within England and Wales during 1991 has been placed in the Library.

Dentistry

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will indicate what research is undertaken by her Department, and what statistics are kept, on the dental health of the population at regional, family health services authority and district health authority levels.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department commissions the Office of Population Censuses and Survey to undertake surveys into the dental health of adults and children. The last decennial adult dental health survey was in 1988. A similar child dental health survey will take place in 1993. Data is published by HMSO and is available in the Library. There is current research into the dental needs of an aging population and into young childrens' dental health. The Department also uses information collected by district dental officers and collated by the British Association for the Study of Community Dentistry.

Redundancy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has regarding rates of (a) suicide, (b) premature death and (c) psychiatric disorders amongst families of people made redundant.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are increased rates of suicide, premature death, and depression and anxiety among unemployed people generally, although this is at least in part due to social and economic factors other than unemployment. Less is known about these rates in the families of those whose unemployment is the result of redundancy.

Homosexuality

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons homosexuality is listed as a sexual disorder and sexual deviancy under the mental illness category in the national health service nationwide computer system categorising patients; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: All hospital systems in England classify diagnoses in accordance with the current revision—the ninth—of the international classification for diseases, ICD, published by the World Health Organisation, WHO.

Homosexuality was first listed in the ICD in 1948 when the use of the ICD was expanded from a traditional classification of mortality causes to become a morbidity classification as well. The WHO reports that it is practically impossible to establish who proposed the inclusion.

In the current revision, the ninth, of the ICD, in use since 1979, the facility has been retained whereby homosexuality is listed in section 302.0 and defined as:

"exclusive or predominant sexual attraction for persons of the same sex with or without a physical relationship".

Provision is made to code homosexuality, regardless of whether considered a mental disorder or not, but is now rarely used.

This classification risked misinterpretation and consequently scientists, as well as several non-governmental organisations recommended the deletion of homosexuality as a category in the classification. Thus, in the 10th revision of the ICD approved by the World Health Assembly in May 1990 sexual orientation by itself is not regarded as a disorder. This revision will come into force for health services' purposes from April 1994.

Abortion

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will give a breakdown by regional health authority of the numbers of abortions in the last 12-month period for which figures are available and which were undertaken by the use of RU486;

(2) what information she has concerning the number of occasions during the last 12-month period upon which a woman has required treatment as a result of complications associated with abortions performed using the drug RU486.

Mr. Sackville: Between July 1991, when Mifegyne, known as RU486, was first licensed, and December 1991, the chief medical officers of England and Wales were notified of 109 abortions where the drug was used. A breakdown by regional health authority of woman's residence is given in the table:

Regional health authority of residence	Number of abortions carried out using mifegyne (RU486)
Northern	4
Yorkshire	16
Trent	—
East Anglian	—
North West Thames	7
North East Thames	23
South East Thames	4
South West Thames	6
Wessex	4
Oxford	18
South Western	4
West Midlands	4
Mersey	3
North Western	10
Wales	6
Total	109

There was one case where a complication was reported.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give a breakdown by gestation of the numbers of late abortions in the last 12 months for which figures are available which have involved the use of potassium chloride injections.

Mr. Sackville: In 1991, 10 abortions over 24 weeks gestation were notified to the chief medical officers of England and Wales where the method used involved potassium chloride injections. A breakdown by gestation period is given in the table:

Gestation period	Number of abortions
25 to 29 weeks	6
30 weeks and over	4
TOTAL	10

Lead Water Pipes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, by regional health authority, what proportion of each regional health authority's buildings have lead piping in the water supply; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. Health authorities and national health service trusts are responsible for the management of national health service property, and are bound by all statutory standards relating to water supply and distribution.

National Health Service Prescriptions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the items available on a national health service prescription which currently cost less than the prescription charge.

Dr. Mawhinney: A list setting out those preparations which had an average net ingredient cost of less than the prescription charge in the period April 1992 to June 1992 has been placed in the Library. The list represents preparations and appliances dispensed by pharmacies and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered. The net ingredient cost does not represent the full cost to the national health service of dispensing a prescription, this being made up, when prescriptions are dispensed by pharmacies, of the net ingredient cost, less discount, plus dispensing fees, on-cost and container allowances.

Ultra-violet Radiation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the additional risk of a child in the United Kingdom developing (a) skin cancer and (b) eye cataracts as a result of ozone depletion; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 19 October 1992 at column 80.

Estimates of skin cancer based solely on an estimate of ozone depletion would be misleading. The same points apply to any estimate of eye cataracts.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to extend the present three UV-B monitoring stations to a nationwide regional network in order that people can be given burn-time warnings on days when there is a high incidence of UV radiation; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Plans are underway to extend the monitoring network set up by the National Radiological Protection Board in order to provide a more comprehensive picture of the terrestrial solar UV levels over United Kingdom latitudes.

Earlier this year, the United Kingdom Health Departments asked the independent Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment, COMARE, to advise on the adverse health effects of ultraviolet radiation. COMARE noted that there can be seasonal variations in solar UV levels and short-term variations due to cloud and local weather which are far in excess of any variations anticipated as a result of ozone depletion. It stated that for this reason, it would not be helpful to publish daily information on solar UV levels, such retrospective information being of little practical value. The Government have accepted that opinion.

General Medical Practitioners

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific qualifications must be obtained by a general medical practitioner before he is permitted to dispense pharmaceuticals within England and Wales.

Dr. Mawhinney: In considering applications to dispense, family health services authorities must be satisfied that the doctor is a fully registered medical practitioner and that he is medically qualified, and since 1979 has satisfied the NHS (Vocational Training) Regulations.

Members' Correspondence

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are issued to his Department for the processing of correspondence from hon. Members; and what is the average delay between receipt of correspondence from, and the date of response to, an hon. Member.

Mr. Sackville: Guidance to the Department makes it clear that Ministers aim to reply to all letters from right hon. and hon. Members within 28 days of receipt. Performance is closely monitored. Information on response times is shown in the table.

	Number of letters sent	Percentage sent within target	Average response time
1 January 1991 to 31 December 1991	18,001	60	28·8
1 January 1992 to 25 October 1992	13,801	76	20·2

Occupational Therapists

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the qualifications required to enter training as an occupational therapist at undergraduate and postgraduate level.

Dr. Mawhinney: For undergraduate training as an occupational therapist the minimum entry requirements are five GCE/GCSE passes, two of which must be at A-level. Business and Technician Education Council national diploma and certificates are accepted as equivalent. Individual schools may specify further requirements. Requirements for entry to accelerated courses for graduates vary according to the school concerned.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people enter training as occupational therapists leading to recognition by the Royal College of Occupational Therapy every year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of people entering full-time training as occupational therapists has increased by more than 30 per cent. in the past five years and is shown in the table:

	Number
1987	815
1988	859
1989	947
1990	998
1991	1,072

Note: Figures are for Great Britain.

Qualification leads to state registration by the occupational therapy board of the Council for the Professions Supplementary to Medicine and membership of the College of Occupational Therapists.

NHS Trusts

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of each application for the third wave of NHS trusts; and what was the total cost.

Dr. Mawhinney: Applications were prepared by individual units, with assistance from regional health authorities. Information about the cost of individual applications is not held centrally.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she has given to the London ambulance service's application for trust status.

Dr. Mawhinney: The London ambulance service has no application for NHS trust status outstanding with the Department.

Appliance Contractors

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will seek to reduce the level of payments to appliance contractors to be the same as for pharmacists dispensing the same prescription; and what estimate she has made of the saving which would result.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no plans to reduce the level of payments to appliance contractors. We shall consider the structure of payments in the light of changes we are making to pharmacists' remuneration.

NHS Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 29 June, Official Report, columns 445–46, if she will now announce the date for the publication of the framework document of the next steps agency for the NHS superannuation scheme for (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland.

Mr. Sackville: The framework document of the NHS Pensions Agency, which covers England and Wales, will be published before the launch. I expect to make an announcement very shortly on the date of the launch. The responsibility for arrangements in Scotland is for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Interleukin-6

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether Coopers and Lybrand, at the request of Leeds Western health authority, carried out an investigation into possible financial loss to the national health service arising out of the fraud in 1988 and 1989 on the Interleukin-6 research project in the Leeds general infirmary; and if she will make a statement;

(2) whether the internal auditors of the Leeds Western health authority have investigated the possible financial loss to the national health service arising out of the fraud in 1988 and 1989 on the Interleukin-6 research project in the Leeds general infirmary; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No investigation was carried out either by Coopers and Lybrand or the internal auditors of the then Leeds Western health authority, into a possible financial loss from the Interleukin-6 research project in 1988-89.

An investigation in 1989 considered Dr. Chapman's allegations concerning a consultancy arrangement between a Belgian pharmaceutical company and the head of the bio-chemistry department at Leeds general infirmary. A separate inquiry into Dr. Chapman's allegations concerning research into Interleukin-6 was conducted by the university of Leeds earlier this year and a further review is currently under way.

Vascular Radiology Treatment

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were referred from Liverpool's Royal hospital to Broadgreen hospital for vascular radiology treatment during the past two years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. M. F. Emberton, chairman of Liverpool health authority, for details.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of each executive agency for which she is responsible;

(2) if he will list the fact-finding visits made in the last 12 months by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible; and what were the findings resulting from each visit.

Dr. Mawhinney: The administration of the Medicines Control Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Dr. Keith Jones, and the administration of the National Health Service Estates Agency is a matter for its chief executive, Mr. J. C. Locke. I have asked the chief executives to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from L. John Wardle to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1992:

The Secretary of State for Health has advised that two of your recent parliamentary questions will be answered directly by the Chief Executive of the relevant agencies. In the absence of our Chief Executive this week, I give below the response for NHS Estates.

Parliamentary Question PQ 1430

None of the visits made by the Chief Executive during the past twelve months were arranged specifically for fact finding purposes. However, various meetings with senior NHS managers have provided information which will help the Agency meet the needs of its customers in the most effective and efficient way.

Parliamentary Question PQ 1380

During the past 12 months the Chief Executive has published an Annual Report and Accounts. The Agency has also published a number of guidance documents on the safe design, operation and management of the health care estate as shown in the accompanying table.

Letter from Dr. K. Jones to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 28 October 1992:

The Secretary of State for Health will have advised that your recent Parliamentary Questions will be answered directly by the Chief Executive of the relevant agencies. I give below the response for the Medicines Control Agency:

Parliamentary Question P.117

During the last 12 months I have published an Annual Report and Accounts.

Parliamentary Question P.9

I have made one fact finding visit during the last 12 months. On the 18 May I attended a Food & Drug Administration hearing in Washington, USA, to determine the point of view of the advisory panel to the FDA for the benzodiazepine, triazolam (Halcion, Upjohn Ltd.).

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Increases

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to protect the real overseas aid increases announced by Her Majesty's Government last autumn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The future level of the aid programme is being considered, with other public expenditure programmes, in this year's public expenditure survey. I cannot anticipate the outcome of the survey. The Government remain committed to a substantial and effective overseas aid programme.

Global Environment

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that the United Kingdom's contribution to the global environment facility will continue to be additional to the aid budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom's contribution to the global environment facility will continue to be separate from and additional to the aid programme for developing countries.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much food, and of what kinds, has been given to Somalia from EC surplus food stocks held in store.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 29 October 1992]: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman when we receive the relevant information which we have requested from the European Commission.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what projects by British non-governmental organisations working in Somalia have been funded by the Overseas Development Administration in the current year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 29 October 1992] We have committed almost £27 million of humanitarian aid for Somalia in 1992. We are funding the following projects which are being implemented by British non-governmental organisations:

Somalia

Projects funded by ODA and Implemented by British NGOS

	Project
BILATERAL FOOD AID
August
5,000 tonnes for south Somalia	CARE
5,000 tonnes for Mogadishu	CARE
HUMANITARIAN ASSISTANCE
January
Water supplies—Hargeisa, Burao	OXFAM
Supplies for Displaced—Burao	SCF
March
Water, sanitation and shelters—Mogadishu	SCF
April

August
Supplementary feeding, Mogadishu	World Vision
LWF airlift—Mogadishu & Belet Huen	Christian Aid
Logistical support and medical supplies—Mogadishu & Belet Huen	SCF
Seeds/Tools for the south	CARE
September
Seeds for the South	OXFAM
Water equipment & airlift for the south	OXFAM
Airlift operational costs—relief supplies for south	CARE
25 emergency flights to Baidoa & 530MT for supplementary feeding	Christian Aid
October
Unimix & Agricultural packs	World Vision
Operational costs—Nairobi	SCF

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British aircraft are involved in the airlift of food to Somalia; and for how long the aircraft have been involved.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 29 October 1992]: Since airlifts of food to Somalia began in August, we have provided £1·46 million for such operations through British and Irish non-governmental organisations. We are assured by the World Food Programme which co-ordinates airlifts of food to Somalia that it has sufficient air capacity to meet present needs. Delivery of food is constrained by the volatile security situation in Somalia.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place a copy of the United Nations 100-day action plan for Somalia in the Library.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 29 October 1992]: A copy of the United Nations 100-day action plan for Somalia has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

EC Food Surpluses

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the basis of the calculation of the value of donations of food from EC surpluses donated to overseas aid relief.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 29 October 1992]: The cost to the EC aid programme of buying cereals for food aid from EC intervention stocks is similar to the world market price for food of comparable quality.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much of the overseas Development Administration aid buget is paid into EC funds to obtain EC food surpluses for famine relief.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 29 October 1992]: Provisional figures show that the cost to the overseas aid budget of European Community food aid in 1991 was £74 million. This includes food aid for famine relief and for other food aid programmes; food purchased from EC intervention stocks, from the EC open market and from third countries. Some 250,000 tonnes of wheat were purchased out of intervention stocks for use as food aid in 1991 out of a total provided of 1·74 million tonnes of cereals.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Community Policy

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Community to encourage the international community to provide extra resources for agricultural recovery; if he will make it his policy to enlarge the EC social fund to enable the poorest people to cope with economic changes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We do not intend to press for additional resources for agriculture either during, or after, the United Kingdom presidency. The recently agreed common agricultural policy reform measures included generous compensation for all farmers. In addition, the Community's agricultural guidance fund already provides resources to support structural change and investment in the agricultural sector.

The European social fund is essentially a vocational training and retraining fund. The United Kingdom's top priority is that the European social fund should continue to help those who are unemployed back into the labour market through vocational training and employment measures.

Chernobyl

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many delegations, including representatives from her Department, have visited the areas worst affected by the Chernobyl disaster to date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: During the course of two studies funded by Her Majesty's Government's know-how fund, company representatives have paid nine visits to the affected areas during 1992. The studies aim to monitor the effects of the Chernobyl disaster on food production and distribution in Ukraine, to determine radiation measures, and to develop a strategy to rehabilitate the areas affected. The chargé d'affaires at the British embassy in Kiev visited Chernobyl earlier this year.

Allan Nicklin

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will summon the Saudi Arabian ambassador to demand that Mr. Allan Nicklin, currently detained in Saudi Arabia against his will, be allowed to leave the kingdom immediately; and if he will make a full statement about the circumstances of Mr. Nicklin's detention.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As my hon. Friend is aware, Mr. Nicklin was first detained in August 1990 when the insurance company of which he was chief executive, Western Agencies Ltd. (WAL) (Jedda), incurred debts which it could not meet because of the failure of two United States underwriters to meet the claims of its parent company, WAL (Cyprus). He was released, although not free to leave Saudi Arabia, in November 1990, re-arrested in November 1991 and released into his sponsor's custody in January 1992. Although Mr. Nicklin was later cleared of personal liability for the debts, he has not obtained his exit visa.

We have repeatedly raised Mr. Nicklin's case at high level with the Saudi authorities, who are trying to resolve this complicated commercial dispute. Most recently, I told the Saudi ambassador on 22 October 1992 of the deep concern of Her Majesty's Government at Mr. Nicklin's continued detention. The ambassador again promised to do what he could to help. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs does not therefore propose at present to summon the ambassador to see him.

European Parliament

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Council of Ministers will, during the British presidency, be discussing the seat of the European Parliament.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The question of the sites of EC institutions, including the EP seat, may be discussed at the Edinburgh European Council.

Iran

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he has made to the Iranian Government following recent further killings, property confiscations and persecutions against the Baha'i and other religious minorities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We remain seriously concerned about continued human rights abuses in Iran, including the persecution of Baha'is. We are active through the human rights machinery of the United Nations, as well as bilaterally and with our EC partners, in keeping up the pressure on Iran. We have recently made representations on behalf of the EC to the Iranian authorities in Geneva and Tehran reiterating our concern at new reports of persecution of Baha'is in Iran.

Maastricht Treaty

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what decision was reached by the Council of Ministers meeting in Oslo on 4 June concerning the ratification of the treaty of Maastricht by the other 11 members states following the Danish referendum; whether the decision was unanimous; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs told the House on 8 June, the Council agreed that we should continue with the process of ratification of the Maastricht treaty on the basis of the existing text, and that the door should be left open for Denmark. This was agreed by all Twelve.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide an English language translation of the term "acquis Communautaire" as applicable within the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The term "acquis Communautaire" means the provisions of the Community treaties and the Acts of the Community institutions adopted under those treaties to date.

Ghana

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to help ensure that the forthcoming elections in Ghana are free and fair.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 29 October 1992]: We have provided approximately £1 million worth of office equipment, electoral booths, and technical co-operation, including electoral officer training, to Ghana's interim national electoral commission. We are also contributing to the cost of a commonwealth electoral monitoring team.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he expects to complete his evaluation of the regional selective assistance programme in Wales; by whom that evaluation is being carried out; and if he will place a copy in the Library;

(2) when he expects the completion and publication of the evaluation exercise on regional selective assistance.

Mr. Sainsbury: An evaluation report on the regional selective assistance scheme during the period 1985 to 1988 carried out by PA Cambridge Economic Consultants has been received by Ministers in the three operating Departments, Department of Trade and Industry, Scottish and Welsh Offices. We are currently considering the report which will be published shortly.

Information Technology

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to ensure a level playing field across the Community in the national markets for information technology.

Mr. Leigh: My Department takes every opportunity to encourage the achievement of a level playing field in IT markets in Europe and participated fully in discussions leading to the European Community Council resolution on electronics, information and communication technologies in November 1991. We also fully support the European Community Commission in its application of the Community's competition and state aids policies.

Innovation Unit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the current priorities of his Department's innovation unit; and if he will list the projects and research reports it has commissioned externally since April.

Mr. Leigh: My Department's innovation unit was established to promote market driven innovation—the successful exploitation of new ideas—as the key to sustained competitiveness and wealth creation. The unit works alongside many different organisations as a catalyst for increasing the understanding of innovation and activities related to innovation. It provides support and assistance to existing projects where appropriate.

Its current priorities are:

(i) increasing the importance, and improving the management, of innovation at all levels in business;

(ii) improving the commercial exploitation of the United Kingdom's science and technology base;

(iii) improving communication about innovation between firms and their investors, including the banks;

(iv) increasing the level of appreciation throughout the education system of the importance of technology, engineering and innovation to everyday life and to wealth creation;

(v) increasing public awareness and understanding of the role of innovation in wealth creation;

(vi) ensuring consistency and synergy between the overall message and the content, rules, marketing and delivery of innovation-related DTI schemes and services, with a view to simplification where possible.

The following external reports have been commissioned since April 1992;

1. A study on the collaborative links between Polytechnics and Business. (Academic Industry Links Organisation; reported May 1992).
2. A market assessment study on the need for improved literature to explain the essentials of obtaining finance to small firms and to inform investors about the financial requirements of such firms. (Segal Quince Wickstead; reported August 1992).
3. A market assessment study on the usefulness of an Innovation and Technology Review to small and medium sized firms. (Metra Martech; reported August 1992).
4. A study of the usefulness to firms of the NEDO "Innovation Management Toolkit". (The Success Group; reported August 1992).
5. A study on the feasibility of developing and objective method of innovation benchmarking in firms. (London Business School; not yet reported).
6. A study on the use of the UK science base by small firms (Science Policy Research Unit; not yet reported).
7. A study on the perceptions of firms in the Yorkshire/Humberside region of the value of DTI innovation-related schemes (SIBTECH; not yet reported).

The innovation unit has commissioned the following projects since April 1992:

1. The annual UK R&D Scoreboard (published in "The Independent" 9 June 1992).
2. The 1993 UK Innovation Lecture, in collaboration with the Royal Society, The Royal Academy of Engineering, The CBI and the Design Council.
3. Contributions on generic technologies in an innovation pack for schools produced by Michael Benn & Associates.
4. A brochure, "Measurement in Sport", for schools in collaboration with the National Physical Laboratory.
5. A series of 8 videos and teacher support material "Innovation—Wealth from Science and Engineering" for schools use and national broadcast.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total number of staff in his Department's innovation unit.

Mr. Leigh: The DTI innovation unit comprises 15 staff of whom five are senior industrialists on secondment.

Coal

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the basis of his calculations that United Kingdom coal is more expensive than imported coal.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal currently supplies coal to National Power and PowerGen at around £1·88p a gigajoule (GJ). Assuming delivery costs of 5–20p/GJ, depending on the sourcing of the coal this gives a delivered cost of around £1·93–2·08p/GJ.

The price of coal delivered to Amsterdam/Rotterdam over the past 12 months has been in the range 75p–£1/GJ, depending on the exchange rate and the world price of coal. Transport and port charges to cover the cost of delivery to power stations in England and Wales would add a further 20–40p/GJ to this cost.

Pit Closures

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with (a) the Trades Union Congress and (b) the National Economic Development Council over the coal pit closure programme.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced on 21 October that he has put in hand a full and wide-ranging review of the prospects for the 21 pits proposed for closure by British Coal but not subject to the statutory consultation currently being undertaken by British Coal. He made it clear that consultation will take place with all the principal providers and consumers of energy, the trades unions and other interested parties.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what calculation he has made on the effect on the balance of trade of the pit closure programme.

Mr. Eggar: Pit closures that correctly reflect lower demand for coal will have little effect on the balance of trade.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with the National Rivers Authority about the pollution consequences of pit closures.

Mr. Eggar: None. There is regular liaison between British Coal and the National Rivers Authority at local and regional levels on all issues relevant to the National River Authority's responsibilities for regulating water pollution.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many coal mining pits have been closed in the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal has closed 57 collieries in the past five financial years.

Coal and Energy Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to require the private generating companies, British Gas and British Coal to make public all information relevant to the promised full inquiry into the coal and energy industries, which is at present covered by conditions of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Eggar: No. In my right hon. Friend's parliamentary answer on 26 October, Official Report, columns 522–23, he explained that all evidence submitted to the Government's review will be published unless it is commercially confidential.

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees and what remuneration each currently receives.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend is responsible for a total of over 800 public appointments. A total of 121 appointments, including reappointments, to 27 public bodies have been made since 9 April 1992. The required information on these appointments is not held centrally in the form requested and could be produced only at disproportionate cost. The readily available information about the public appointments for which my right hon. Friend is responsible is published regularly in "Public Bodies" and in "Public Appointments: A Handbook for Women's Organisations".

Research and Development

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he plans to take to make it more attractive for companies to invest in research and development.

Mr. Leigh: The Government believe that the research and development which is undertaken by industry itself is the most effective and the most likely to help them maintain competitiveness. Accordingly the role for Government, in this area, is to create the right environment in which companies invest more of their own resources in research and development. For example, the Government will continue their policy of reducing the burdens on industry—we now have the lowest corporation tax of any G7 or European Community country. The success of the Government's approach is demonstrated by the 38 per cent. growth, in real terms, of industry's own funded research and development between 1983 and 1990, the last year for which figures are available.

Point of Ayr Colliery

Mr. Richards: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy that the proposed investment by British Coal at the Point of Ayr colliery in north Wales with regard to the introduction of a second and third continuous miner will proceed on schedule.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal has given an assurance that development work will continue at the 21 pits covered by the review announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 21 October. This includes Point of Ayr. Detailed investment decisions are, however, a matter for British Coal.

Mr. Richards: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy that, in the event of British Coal deciding not to continue with its mining operation at the Point of Ayr colliery in north Wales, the mine will be offered for sale to a private enterprise.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has put in hand a full and wide-ranging review of the prospects for the 21 pits proposed for closure by British Coal but not subject to the statutory consultation currently being undertaken by British Coal. Point of Ayr is one of these. The review will decide whether the case for closure at each of the pits in question has been fully made. It would not be appropriate to speculate about the outcome in relation to Point of Ayr until the review is complete.

Mr. Richards: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with PowerGen about the demand for coal from the Point of Ayr colliery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The sourcing of coal for its power stations is a matter for PowerGen and its suppliers. The market prospects for coal and the future of Point of Ayr colliery will be considered as part of the review announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 21 October.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy that planned investment in Point of Ayr colliery will continue during the period of the announced pit closure moratorium.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 29 October 1992]: British Coal is continuing with development work at the 21 pits covered by the moratorium, including Point of Ayr, for the period of the review announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Fiddler's Ferry Power Station

Mr. Richards: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list all the mines which supply coal to the Fiddler's Ferry power station according to tonnage during the last year for which data exists;

(2) if he will identify the sources of coal to the Fiddler's Ferry power station that were planned at the time of the original proposal to close 31 mines.

Mr. Eggar: The sources of coal to Fiddler's Ferry power station are commercial matters for PowerGen and its suppliers. The market prospects for coal will be considered as part of the review announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 21 October.

British Gas

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total cost to public funds of privatising British Gas.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to page 18 of the report by the National Audit Office on the sale of British Gas, House of Commons paper 22 published June 1987.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Heppell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce packages of enhanced redundancy payments and training for people who, although not employed by British Coal, are losing their jobs as a direct result of pit closures.

Mr. Eggar: The package of training and counselling measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment on 19 October will be available for all those who are unemployed, or who become unemployed in the areas worst affected by possible pit closures—and also any redundant miners who live outside these areas. People in other areas who lose their jobs as a result of pit closures will be eligible for a wide range of employment, training and enterprise measures delivered through the training and enterprise councils and the Employment Service.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the text of the memorandum prepared in his Department, dated 8 October, about the report of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council concerning emphysema and bronchitis in metal workers and coal miners.

Mr. Eggar: This was advice from an official to a Minister which it would not be appropriate to publish.

Frigg Treaty

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions have taken place with the Norwegian Government on the re-negotiation of the Frigg treaty.

Mr. Eggar: United Kingdom and Norwegian officials commenced re-negotiation of the Frigg treaty on 8 July. Their next meeting is scheduled for 16 to 17 November. I met Mr. Finn Kristensen, the Norwegian Minister of Energy and Industry, on 9 October to discuss a number of matters including the Frigg treaty.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the proposals from the European Commission with respect to a joint data protection and telecommunications directive are of the kind that will be subject to subsidiarity arrangements; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Government believe that the proposed directive on data protection and the telecommunications sector should be examined carefully for its consistency with the principle of subsidiarity. Any revised proposals will be considered in the light of this principle once they have been submitted to the Council by the Commission.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will summarise his main objections to the revised proposals from the Commission with respect to a joint data protection and telecommunications directive; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Commission has not yet submitted its revised proposal for a directive on data protection in telecommunications to the Council. The revised text will be considered carefully once it is received.

Trentham Colliery

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to prevent British Coal from closing down production at Trentham colliery complex.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Coal. The corporation has, however, undertaken to preserve the fabric of the 10 pits, including Trentham colliery, listed by my right hon. Friend in his statement on 19 October, which are currently subject to the statutory consultation process. If, at the end of the period of statutory consultation, it is decided to keep any or all of the collieries open, British Coal has assured us that it will remain possible to do so.

Environmental Pollution

Mr. Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what comparative assessment his Department has made of the pollutant discharges to the environment in aqueous, solid or aerial particulate form, of the cradle-to-grave process, productions and use of (a) nuclear fuels, (b) coal, (c) oil, (d) gas and (e) renewable energies used for electricity generation.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

No comprehensive comparison has been made by this Department. Details of releases from power stations burning coal, gas and oil and the relevant abatement technologies have been published by the Department in "Acidic Emission Abatement Technologies", volumes 1 to 3, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Releases to the environment from individual power stations for electricity generation using coal, oil, gas and nuclear fuels are controlled by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, HMIP. In determining each application from the electricity generators for these processes, HMIP will consider the environmental implications of releases to all three media; air, water and land.

Steel

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out (a) the total United Kingdom finished steel production in tonnes for each year since 1979 and (b) the principal products involved.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 29 October 1992]: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom finished steel production, 1979 to 1991

	Million tonnes
1979	16·9
1980	10·4
1981	12·7
1982	11·8
1983	12·3
1984	12·6
1985	13·1
1986	13·1
1987	15·0
1988	16·7
1989	16·9
1990	16·1
1991	15·0

Source: Iron and Steel Statistics Bureau.

The principal products are: ingots and semi-finished steel blooms, billets and slabs; hot rolled bars; wire rod; heavy sections, sheet piling and rails; light sections; hot rolled coil; cold reduced sheet; coated sheet—zinc coated; tinplate; plates and hot rolled narrow strip; bright bars; cold rolled narrow strip; tubes and pipes; and forged billets and bars.

Imported Coal

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the price of imported coal has risen as a result of the fall in the value of pound sterling against the dollar; and if he will impose an anti-dumping duty where prices have not been raised in line with the fall in the exchange rate.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 27 October 1992]: Imported coal is priced in dollars. The price in pound sterling of a consignment of imported coal will therefore increase pro rata with the fall in the value of the pound against the dollar. The European Commission may impose anti-dumping duties where there is substantive evidence of products being sold at a dumped price to the material injury of Community producers.

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out in tabular form those countries which export coal to the United Kingdom, showing for each of the last five years the coal imported by volume and value; what action he or his predecessors took over the same period to substitute British coal for imported coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 29 October 1992]: The figures requested are given in the table. Over the past five years, the Government have encouraged and assisted British Coal to improve productivity and reduce costs so as to become competitive with imported coal. Since 1985-86 much progress has been made—British Coal has more than doubled productivity—but its international competitors have also improved productivity and further cost reductions are needed to attain full competitiveness with imported coal.

Figures for earlier years have not been re-allocated to individual countries.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing total imports of coal by volume and value in each of the past five years and the current year to date, the tonnage imported through each port of entry, the value and volume in each case of the tonnage suitable for use in power stations and the nearest power stations.

Gas Cookers

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he intends to take to ensure the existing safety regulation concerning the sale of second-hand gas cookers is to remain following the EEC regulations which are to be introduced from 1996; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 27 October 1992]: The Government are committed to maintaining a high standard of consumer protection in respect of second-hand gas appliances. In addition to retaining the existing regulation of second-hand gas cookers, I am also considering the possibility of extending the same level of consumer protection to a wider range of second-hand gas appliances.

Segal Quince Wicksteed Report

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to reach a decision on the Segal Quince Wicksteed report on the availability of finance for small high technology firms; when that report was received by his Department; and if he will place that report in the Library.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 27 October 1992]: The report by Segal Quince Wicksteed recently commissioned by my Department's innovation unit was received on 21 August 1992. It deals with the need for improved explanatory literature about finance for technological innovation. It does not deal with the availability of such finance.

Arrangements have been made to place a copy in the Library of the House.

Faraday Centres

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to reach a decision on the proposals presented to him by the Prince of Wales' working group to create Faraday centres.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 27 October 1992]: The proposals from His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales' working group on innovation are a valuable contribution to the debate on improving the contribution of the United Kingdom's science and technology base to industrial competitiveness and wealth creation. The proposals will be considered alongside the other issues which will be addressed in the Government's White Paper on science and technology to be published next year.

British Standard Institute

Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to review the monopoly status of the British Standards Institute in issuing kitemarks and extend the powers to the organisations entitled to issue BS 5750 certificates.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 26 October 1992]: The Government have no plans to review the arrangements under which BSI quality assurance, BSIQA, licenses the use of the kitemark. BSIQA is the financially independent certification business of BSI and the kitemark is its registered certification trade mark. It therefore has sole right to grant the use of its own mark in the same way as the owner of any other certification trade mark.

The kitemark denotes that a product conforms to an agreed British, European or international standard; and that the system by which it has been manufactured has been subject to assessment and surveillance by BSIQA so as to ensure consistency of production. Any certification body is entitled to register and licence the use of its own mark, in accordance with these same standards and procedures. Indeed, some have already done so.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 212

SESSION 1992–93

24th September—30th October 1992

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
